Before such a judge, in such a court, was the noble truth seeker, brought to answer to the charge of mailing a book. He who had no thought but to benefit his fellow-men by giving them what he conceived to be the truth; he who had no wish but the good of his fellow-men was the object of it, must stand trial in the nineteenth century of the Christian era in such a court in "the land of the free and the home of the brave" before Judge Benedict for sending a book by mail. It was pretended that the book was "obscene," but of this the subservient jury could know nothing, for the book was not given them; only a few passages separated from the context were read, and the sense of these passages perverted so as to make it appear that they were unclean. In this way an entirely different matter was given in evidence from what was charged in the indictment. The truth seeker mailed that book; he did not mail the detached passages which were selected to convict him on. James Parton said of this: "The act for which he suffered was as innocent as selling a loaf of bread to a hungry person. He violated no law and he injured no creature." But Benedict's associate, Comstock, had boasted that in that court he never failed to get a conviction, and the truth seeker must not be allowed to make an exception to so good and profitable a rule. So Benedict, more cunning than the infamous Ward Hunt, who, when he wanted to get Susan B. Anthony convicted, boldly directed the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, chose rather to go to work artfully and subtly, and by a persuasiv charge actually succeeded in making the jury think that there was something obscene, whatever that may mean, in the book; and to make sure that no guilty man should escape, a noble, unselfish soul went down to the anguish of a prison.

Of this "trial" Col. R. G. Ingersoll wrote as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 20, 1879.

"D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Friend: I hav just read your letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav thought of you every hour that I hav been awake since your imprisonment. Every man on the jury that convicted you committed a crime. Benedict committed a crime when he refused a new trial, and Hayes committed a crime when he listened to the hypocrits and religious zealots and refused a pardon. Well, we will get even with them all some day. Superstition cannot rule the world forever, and the quicker the decisiv struggle comes the better. I hope the keepers of your prison will hav sense enough to treat you as you deserve, and not put you on a level with criminals. You hav violated no law, committed no wrong, and made no being unhappy. You hav lived an honorable, useful life, and in any country not governed by Christians you would be free and respected. Well, bear up as well as you can. Time goes on, and in a little while liberty will unlock your cell and giv you back to your home and friends.

"Yours truly, R. G. INGERSOLL."

Mr. T. B. Wakeman said of it, in his eloquent oration at the funeral of the truth seeker:

"The judge was swift to rule against him, swift to do him injustice, as it seemed to us, and to all fair-minded men, as I believe. He was tried with apparent kindness, but the velvet paw scarcely concealed the claws of ecclesiastical persecution. Back of the prosecutor sat the agent of this ecclesiastical society, and back of him sat the leading representativ of ecclesiastical fanaticism in this country [Joseph Cook]. In front of those two sat the public prosecutor, one specially employed for this purpose, who did not represent either his principal in office or the power that directed the public prosecutions at Washington, for both of those officials had said that this book was not within the meaning of the law under which the prosecution was attempted. Thus in line sat those three, and the spirit of religious bigotry and intolerance passed from this fanatic through the agent and the public prosecutor up to the judge, who ruled invariably against the accused. Those were the influences which underlay and controled that whole prosecution. I am sorry for the honor of American jurisprudence, but the stigma of that and similar trials in our United States courts will in time be only second to that of the trials held by Judge Jeffries in England. Time and liberty will place them where they belong. The record of the American Inquisition will be written yet. Let its minions remember that the immortality of infamy that awaits them is assured by the very laws of progress.

"I was not Mr. Bennett's lawyer; I was his friend and bail on that trial; but I believe that his counsel did everything that could hav been done, and I believe that it was a predetermined fact that that conviction had to be had, and that everything was conducted to that end with such unsparing disregard of the ordinary rules of justice, law, and fair dealing that no other result than that arrived at could hav been expected."

The conviction of D. M. Bennett was revolting to the moral sense of even the most obtuse. The whole world rose in indignation at it. It was a conviction which could not hav been procured before an honest judge. It was a conviction which an honest judge would not hav tolerated nor allowed to stand for a moment, much less hav connived at. How many other men, as good, as noble, as true as D. M. Bennett, hav gone down in this maelstrom of corruption it is appalling to think.

But the heinousness of Benedict's crime is shown in bolder relief when contrasted with the virtuous conduct of Judge Neilson, in Boston, before whom Mr. E. H. Heywood, the author of the book, was arraigned upon the identical charge which was made against the truth seeker—that is, the frivolous and silly charge that this same book was "obscene."

Judge Neilson promptly overruled all dishonest attempts to garble or distort the sense of the book by selecting out of it certain paragraphs, and held that the book must be taken as a whole; and on the prosecutor's trying to insist that there was obscenity in the book, dismissed the nonsensical prosecution with the remark that "the court was robust enough to stand that;" thus throwing around the intended victim of the obscenists the protection for which he had a right to rely upon the court, and performing the noblest duty of a judge in preventing the conviction of an innocent man.

The two cases of Bennett and Heywood were precisely the same throughout; the book was the same, the law was the same, the pretended offense under the law exactly the same. There was no difference whatever, except in the conduct of the two judges; but here was a strong contrast. The course of Judge Neilson cannot fail to commend itself to the conscience of every fair-minded person; but as time rolls on, and as other cases present themselvs for decision under the vile Comstock laws, the conduct of Benedict will appear blacker and more heinous.

It may be the order of nature that no good can come without evil. That D. M. Bennett's usefulness was increased a thousand times by his persecution there can be no doubt; but the fact that he speaks louder from his grave than he ever did from his desk is not a reason why we should thank Benedict. Benedict's crime remains the same. If the life of the good old Bennett was abridged one day by the injury done him, then Benedict's crime was no less than murder. Taine says, "There is nothing like a wrong to quicken the sentiment of justice;" but it seems a terrible price to pay even for a lofty sense of justice, that such a good old man as D. M. Bennett should be given over to the power of a Benedict.

Mrs. Ferrin, a well-known reformer, in an address to the judiciary committee of the Massachusetts legislature in 1850, made use of language so appropriate to our present purpose that we cannot refrain from borrowing it. She says:

"In regard to unjust imprisonment we are told, 'It is of too rare occurrence to require legal enactments.' How many a devoted wife, mother, and child can tell a far different story! Who of us or our children is secure from false accusation and imprisonment, or perhaps an ignominious death upon the gallows, to screen some miserable villian from justice? Witnesses, lawyers, judges, jurors, and executioners are paid for depriving innocent persons of their time, liberty, health, and reputation, which to many is dearer than life, while the guilty one escapes. And society, when too late, laments the sad catastrophe. The life-blood of many a victim demands not only justice for the guilty but protection for the innocent."

This paragraph has the true ring of good old Jeremy Bentham. It is a lesson which cannot be too often repeated:

"It is a mistaken idea that the same law that oppresses the individual can promote the highest good of society. The best interests of a community never can require the sacrifice of one innocent being—of one sacred right."

The law is not an exact science, and in its application to the affairs of life mistakes will occur, but we should carefully guard against the mistakes being made on that side where the consequences of mistake are so serious. We should see to it that beyond a certain point mistake shall be impossible. We should see to it that even though legislatures may be so far overcome as to enact laws favorable to blackmail, our judiciary should still be pure, and that no human being should ever again in this country be left absolutely at the mercy of one single judge, and that judge, as in the case of D. M. Bennett, a Benedict.

The administration of justice in our criminal courts imperativly demands humanity in the judge. A brutal or unfeeling judge has no proper place on the bench. A judge who is not impressed with the necessity and duty of protecting the innocent will be sure to commit "inadvertencies" which will bring the whole machinery of justice into deserved contempt. When the honor and safety of every citizen is at the mercy of "vice societies" with their licentious and irresponsible agents; when no one, whose expressions are at all radical, is safe from accusation under the "obscenity" laws; when accusation means what it meant in France at the time Beaumarchais said, "If I were accused of stealing the bells of Notre Dame I would escape first and discuss afterward;" when the cry of obscenity is as senseless, as remorseless, and as terrible as was the cry of witchcraft in the New England colonies; when accusation and trial under the Comstock laws call upon a defendant to combat "the whole power of the United States," coupled with the command of detectivs ready to "swear almost anything you want them to swear to," and augmented by the influence over juries so well described in the quotation we hav made, then, we maintain, it is time to efface the old motto, "Let no guilty man escape," and to write in its place, "Let no innocent man be convicted."

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Science Sunday-Schools.

My Liberal brother Reynolds, of Rochester, has written a much needed practical article on this subject. As its importance cannot be overestimated, the attention of readers may be once more solicited, to the matter. For lack of knowledge our race, probably from its origin, has been in a "sea of trouble." Knowledge is power and likewise pleasure; ignorance, imbecility and misery. Hence the happiness of our kind in all ages has been in the ratio of their knowledge, and, of course, their sufferings in the ratio of their ignorance and errors. This was so well learned by the old Roman and Grecian that they stereotyped it into the maxim, "Vita sine literis mors est—life without literature is death." So must one without letters and destitute of science be dead to all the enjoyments and, may we not add? to all the decencies of life.

Still worse such a one is tormented with errors, and living only to torment those who are striving to escape them. Possessed with seven devils, they torture, as in the horrible Inquisition, all who cannot devilishly clan with them. As the uncultivated garden will pollute with weeds, so will the untaught mind. Leave the young mind without facts, without a knowledge of nature's laws systematized into science, and it goes into credulity, self-conceit, and wretched persecutions. Especially is this so in the midst of the priestcraft about us. They liv and move and hav their being in ignorance, errors, bigotry, and persecutions. Busy are they day and night in polluting the minds of the young with all this filth, this dreadful crop of thorns and thistles. It is, therefore, high time that their abominable work should be antidoted—that pure, healthful nourishment should take the place of the foul, sickly poison so long fed to the youth of our land.

For centuries the priests of superstition and persecution hav monopolized the day they call Sabbath. If it be reasonable that we pause for rest one-seventh of our time, it is not reasonable that we should stand idle while they demoralize the children of our country into a religious slavery more intolerable than that of George the third. Let the cry of Patrick Henry be repeated, "Giv me liberty or giv me death."

No more is needed than the energy of the rude Tennessee congressman, Crocket. Being sure that we are right, let us go ahead. Well do the various religious clans dread science. Ignorant as they are of its power and grandeur, they are not blind to the certainty of its superseding the monstrous absurdities of their Bible. Hence they shun it and madden over it as the wretched animals scourged with hydrophobia do at the purest water.

Let us be manly and faithful to teach science in season and out of season, by day and by night, at home and abroad, especially in the quiet rest of our Sundays, and the religious hydrophobia of our land will disappear. As an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, let us forestall the disease that we may need no quarantine against it—no patent nostrums to quack at its symptoms. The only well-founded hope of success in such dosing is to cure the disease by killing the patient. Well has our good brother Reynolds written, "If the present generation studied the laws of their being they would attain purer, healthier, and, consequently, happier lives." . . "Obedience to nature's laws would insure health and strength, alike of mind and body, as surely as violation of her laws insures the dread penalty which no vicarious atonement, no pardoning power, however high or mighty, can release or save from."

Then let us one and all be up and at this grand work of using truth freely to combat error—of all hanging together that we may not, in the Comstock Inquisition of the nineteenth century, hav to hang apart.

W. PERKINS.

Sonyea, N. Y.

Russian Inquisitions.

THE STATE ARRESTS AND THE CHURCH TORTURES PRISONERS.

From the New York Herald.

The following letter from a political prisoner in Siberia will be found interesting, not only as coming from such a source, but as containing facts not generally known. The writer studied the English language from books while in exile, and without any opportunity for practice acquired such proficiency that his letter loses none of its interest from being presented exactly as he wrote it:

"Foreigners hav such vague notions about Russia that they are as yet unable to understand the very reasons and character of the revolutionary tendencies which prevail to such an extent in that vast country. I will tell here one fact which will show you clearly the character of the Russian government. In 1866, soon after the execution of Karaxozoff, a young workingman, sitting in an inn where two or three persons were present, was foolish enough to say of the czar, 'You see he hanged now a man who was perhaps much better than he himself.' Immediately he was arrested and brought to St. Petersburg, where they put him in the well-known prison of Sts. Peter and Paul. Then without any trial, merely by the order of the czar, he was sent to be imprisoned at the monastery of Soozdall. There are in Russia two monasteries which hav prisons for political or religious libres-penseurs—the monastery called Solovetzkee, on an island in the White Sea, and the monastery of Soozdall. The chiefs of these prisons are the holy fathers—the abbots themselvs. The young man was locked up in a small room. Once he committed some insignificant offense against the rules of the prison. Then the abbot submitted the prisoner to such a punishment as the civilized world has not heard of since the times of the Inquisition. It is to make the world know this punishment that I decided to write this letter.

"The abbot ordered a box to be brought into the room of the prisoner, just as high and wide as the prisoner himself. On the inside of the box there were fixed on every point strong, large iron nails. The prisoner was put into this box and locked up. He could not turn himself, he could not move at all, because everywhere he would meet the iron nails. He remained in the box two days. Finally he could not bear any longer this torture, and said to the guard he wanted to see the abbot. The latter came. 'Do you wish,' said the prisoner, 'to kill me? I cannot bear any longer this torture. I swear to you that if you will not release me instantly from this box I will kill you.' Only then the abbot released him. But no sooner had the prisoner left the box than he fell and fainted on the floor. His feet were so swollen they could not bear him.

"The holy fathers of the monastery use also several other kinds of torture. For instance, they put upon a prisoner iron fetters of 120 pounds weight, and kept him thus during some days. Only a man of great physical power can, with these fetters on his feet, rise or at all change the position of his body as while sleeping he might desire.

"Such are these monastery prisons in which they keep for many long years, without any legal trial, innocent people who dare hav their own opinions about religion different from those of the state's church. I remember plenty of other facts of the same kind. Where, for instance, is now the well-know revolutionist, Naitshaeff, sentenced in 1871 to twenty years' imprisonment at hard labor? Nobody knows exactly, but there are persistent rumors that he is kept in one of the fortresses chained to the wall and fettered with irons of 120 pounds weight.

"Where is the political criminal Tomeen, sentenced in 1879 by the martial court to imprisonment for life? Nobody knows, but they say, and it is probably true, that he is kept in one of the Siberian prisons—namely, at Tobolsk—and that there are two special guards to watch him, who receive a greater payment for this honor.

"Why were the three newly condemned revolutionists, Sheeriaeff, Teechonoff, and Gessi Gelfman, not sent to the Siberian prisons as the law commands, but are kept in Slusselbourg, this Russian Bastilica? Because in the Siberian prisons they would not die so soon.

"What right has the government, in spite of the laws it created itself, to keep as it does, since more than ten years, in a pitiful small village, Vilnisk, 500 miles from Yakoutsk, the celebrated Russian writer Tscherneesheffski, author of 'Remarks Upon John Stuart Mill's Political Economy,' as well as many other excellent books? By the Russian law Tscherneesheffski has long since the right of going throughout all Siberia, but the government keeps him forcibly at Vilnisk. Eight gendarmes and Cossacks, sent from Yakoutsk for this special purpose, are always watching him. He must liv and sleep in the prison; only in the daytime he has the right to go into the village. But to him the most terrible punishment is that it is forbidden to him forever to write anything for publication. But the man is full of life and energy; he cannot help writing; he must write and he does. He writes leaves upon leaves, he covers piles of paper and then—he puts them into the fire! Can you imagin this? Is it not like the tortures of Tantalus?

"And, after all, these facts giv to the reader only a too insufficient notion of what is in fact the present government in Russia. And with such a government will the European statesmen make treaties to giv up those noble Russians who hav courage and self-sacrifice enough to protest against such barbarities?"

As the writer is still a prisoner in the hands of the Russian authorities he does not wish his name published, and so also the name of the young workman first mentioned in this letter, who was imprisoned in the monastery of Soozdall for three years and exiled to one of the northern provinces of Russia in Europe for fourteen years. He was released in 1881, and all this punishment inflicted without trial.

A PRIZE-FIGHTER died in Brooklyn the other day, aged eighty, having fought many fights, but never having attended a single church in that city. Perhaps his long life and the before-mentioned non-attendance may hav been only a coincidence.—Boston Transcript.

Camp-meeting Intelligence.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"Look here!" exclaimed the managing editor, glancing up at the religious editor; "what is this item on your bill of camp-meeting expenses, forty dollars for extras? You've put in grub and rum and billiards; now what was that forty for?"

"Don't you want to allow it?" growled the religious editor.

"Not till I know what it's for," replied the managing editor, firmly. "I don't mind a little leeway for extras, but I want to see the items before the audit goes in."

"Well, part of it was three sevens against three jacks," grunted the religious editor. "Can't I raise a jack pot open on threes without being subject to suspicion when I get home?" and the religious editor threw himself back and regarded his chief with withering scorn. "Am I to understand that when I sacrifice myself at a camp-meeting in the interests of this paper, I am to let a golden chance slip by and fail to rescue my ante, just because a managing editor doesn't understand the rudimentary rules of the American stepping-stones to salvation?"

"Hold 'em cold?" inquired the managing editor eagerly.

"Well, I should stutter!" retorted the religious editor. "It was my open and I passed on three sevens. It went around to the presiding elder and he dropped her for half the limit. They all came in and I raised it. Wasn't I right?"

"Well, I should gasp!" returned the managing editor. "How much?"

"I just giv him the limit until I could see what he draws," replied the religious editor warming up to his subject. "He took three cards, and then I knew he was drawing to a pair. A supernumerary out of a job took one, but as he had passed on the open, I knew he was drawing to a short flush or straight, and I took my chances on him. Another exhorter took four, and I was sure I had him beat from the start."

"Right your were," commenced the managing editor, approvingly.

"The elder whacked the limit at me and I shot it back. Then in comes the four card man and tops the gang. Out went the elder on his opening pair of queens and the supernumerary fled at sight. Wouldn't you hav slapped it at that exhorter who drew four?

"Four dollars to doughnuts," conceded the managing editor, every drop of blood in his veins boiling.

"And so I did. The draw hadn't helped me any, but I let him hav it and back he come."

"Sock it to him!" roared the managing editor. "Did you let him hav it back?"

"That shows how much you hav played poker at the camp-meeting," snarled the religious editor, with contempt. "You bet I didn't. I called him, and when he laid down three jacks I never winked, but I jumped that game quick."

"Think it was put up on you?" asked the managing editor.

"I can't swear to it, but I think the heathen stood to win on the deal," replied the religious editor solemnly.

"Shouldn't wonder," ruminated the managing editor, "I'll allow that much of the forty. What did it amount to?"

"Thirty," returned the religious editor, with a scowl. "Why can't you let the other ten go?"

"Can't," replied the managing editor laconically. "What was it for?"

"Contribution box!" growled the religious editor.

"Oh, come off!" sneered the managing editor. "What was it for?"

"That's straight," replied the religious editor, sulkily. "I played it for winners and I got knifed."

"Out with it," warned the managing editor. "If you want the account allowed you must tell me the facts."

"That's where they socked me again, but I think that was a straight game. I was guessing for a tenner whether the receipts of a certain collection were odd or even in coin, and I took odd. They were even and I was left. Now, are you going to allow that bill without any more chin or not?"

"I suppose I must allow it," said the managing editor, with a sigh. "I say, didn't you win anything while you were there!"

"A d——d sight of experience!" retorted the religious editor. "On experience I quit way ahead. Look here, is the ghost in the closet?"

"No," murmured the managing editor, solemnly. "There's no ghost for a man who gets plucked as badly as you did at that camp-meeting. You can go dry until the next one, and if you catch up then I'll lend you the corkscrew."

"That's all right," muttered the religous editor, as he departed in high dudgeon; "I learned to deal the cards at the camp-meeting, and at the next session he holds, if I don't stand to win on every shuffle, I'll buy my own rum from date!" And the religious editor hied him forth to lay eighty dollars he had won matching pennies, and about which he had said nothing, on the races, out of which he came strapped, as he exclaimed to the sporting reporter on borrowing his fare home.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make al Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 29, 1883.

☞WE hav quite a number of subscribers whose tab indicates that they hav not paid for their TRUTH SEEKER for the past year. To them we would respectfully say that the amount of their arrearages is needed, and we hope will be forthcoming soon.

An Outrageous Sermon.

It is pretty generally conceded by Liberals that ministers do not earn the bread they eat, but there is one man in Connecticut, William Lewis, who will be likely to think that one, at least, of the cloth has earned something more than bread.

The daily papers hav made the Rose Ambler tragedy generally known to the public. A young woman by that name was found murdered, and, so far, the deed can be traced to no one, although a host of detectivs are at work upon it. The theories of the affair are almost as numerous as the persons conversing upon it. The latest is that she was murdered by her lover, William Lewis, with whom she spent the evening previous to her death. This is as yet but a suspicion, and among the more intelligent people of that state is thought to hav been invented by the detectivs to conceal their real ignorance of all important matters connected with the case. Right here comes the insolent and unsolicited interference of a minister residing in the town. His name is Houghton, pastor of the Church of the Messiah. Last Sunday he preached a sensational sermon on the murder, in which he denounced Lewis as a man whom he believed capable of committing the deed.

"Lewis's actions," said the preacher, "show him to be a man of low animal instincts, and just the type of individual to execute such a horrible deed. From testimony given, the motiv of whoever killed her was not lust. It is almost certainly known that she did not hav any enemies. Had lust entered into the case, then, in my estimation, would the whole aspect of the affair hav been changed. But she was simply killed; that was all. Let us look into the facts of the courtship of those two persons. He did not visit her as an honorable man would hav done. She went to his home, and he allowed her night after night to return alone and unprotected. It is easy to see how he tired of her because he neglected her, and, seeing the marriage day staring him in the face, concluded to put her out of the way. My theory is that Lewis killed the girl in his barn, and under cover of the darkness carried her to the place where she was found. I may be wrong, but I believe that this will be the solution of the mystery."

Whether Lewis is guilty or not, the conduct of this minister is infamous. He has no call to interfere. He is not an officer of the law. He was not on the coroner's jury, and has no better means of judging the case than anyone else. He is not even a detectiv or a constable. The murder is no more his particular business than it is any other citizen's. The minister in a small town occupies a very prominent position, and among unthinking people his word goes a long way. His flock believe him to be a supernaturally wise man. Yet this fellow is found using his position to fasten the guilt of a heinous crime upon a man whom even the law must regard as innocent until proved guilty. He has joined with a pack of hired liars to imprison, perhaps hang, a man who, in the natural course of events, would hav been the last to injure the girl. To giv color to his cry he has constructed a theory for which, according to the published evidence, there is no basis. But if there were, his interference would be no less an unwarranted abuse of his priestly position.

Connecticut ere now has tried ministers for just such crimes as this pulpiteer is trying to fasten upon William Lewis; but it seems unlikely in this case that the cry of stop thief is raised for a purpose. It is probably due to the insolence of a privileged class.

Sabbatarianism in Australia.

The church has won a victory over the Liberals in Australia, but it is one of which the more advanced churchmen are already ashamed. The triumph, moreover, will be only temporary, for evidence is not wanting that the decision will soon be reversed.

The trouble arose from the action of the trustees of the public library, museum, and picture gallery in opening those places of instruction and innocent pleasure on Sunday. This policy was adopted on deliberation, and after public opinion had been consulted in all legitimate ways.

This exasperated the Presbyterians and Methodists, and particularly their ministers, who called a series of public meetings to protest. Meetings were also called by the friends of freedom, which were larger and more influential than the former. So the pious people appealed to the Victoria Assembly. They did not dare to put the question on its merits, but claimed that the trustees of the institutions had exceeded their authority. Vainly did the Liberals endeavor, in the debate which ensued, to get the question before the assembly on the real issue. The Sabbatarians were tricky, and stuck to the technical point, upon which they won by a good majority. The action of the trustees was disapproved as "a slight upon the government and an infringement of the rights of Parliament," and they were directed to "close the institutions under their charge on Sundays until Parliament shall otherwise determin."

So, for the present, the inhabitants of Victoria are again driven to resort for amusement to the dramshops or the churches. For the ruin of those who go to the former, the Presbyterians and Methodists will not like to be held responsible, but they will be; while of those who attend the latter we advise the dominies—we had almost written donkeys—to make the most they can, for Liberal sentiments are fast spreading in Australia, and an intellectual diet a good deal fresher than manna and blood of sacrificial lambs will soon be demanded.

In a country where there is neither state church nor a state religion, says the Australasian, and where the institutions are based on civil and religious liberty, it is intolerable that any number of men, whether they constitute the majority or the minority, should attempt to tyrannize over their neighbors by dictating to them how they shall or shall not observe the day of rest, and should forbid them from having access on that day to sources of innocent instruction and refined enjoyment, paid for by the whole community, on the ground that by so doing they will wound the consciences of the dictators. These sentiments will undoubtedly meet a hearty response in the land where Charles Bright and Willian Denton lecture continuously to audiences numbering thousands, and which supports a Freethought journal and a strong Freethought society. It is impossible for the triumph of the bigots to be other than short-lived. A new Parliament will be elected and the trustees sustained in their progressiv work.

God and the State.

Michael Bakounine was the founder of Nihilism and the apostle of anarchy. He belonged to what is called the nobility of Russia, and he had a thousand times more right to the title than any Alexander who ever occupied the throne. One extreme engenders another, and the despotic government of Russia, the infamous tyranny over the politically common people of that country, drove him to anarchy. During his life he was an indefatigable worker for liberty — mental and physical. His correspondence was most extensiv; he passed entire nights in preparing letters to his friends in the revolutionary world. His originality of ideas, his vehemence and eloquence, made him a power felt and feared in political circles. But he was also no less a hater of priestly power, and in one of the manuscripts he left we find an attack upon the Theistic idea full of tremendous consequences. This pamphlet, which has just been translated from the French by Benjamin R. Tucker, editor of Liberty, is a splendid plea for liberty and a scathing assault upon the God idea.

With his anarchical prejudices we hav not space to deal at present. Perhaps he is right, and anarchy is the logical outcome of liberty, but if so it must be a very different system from what we in America recognize as anarchy. Be that as it may, no Freethinker can feel else than admiration for his magnificient arraignment of a despotic church. Milk-and-water people meet no mercy at his hands. His contempt for them is supreme. He describes them accurately as people who abandon to criticism all the special absurdities of religion, turn up their noses at all the miracles, but "cling desperately to the principal absurdity, the source of all the others, to the miracle that explains and justifies all the other miracles, the existence of God. Their God is not the vigorous and powerful being, the wholly positiv God of theology. It is a nebulous, diaphanous, illusory being that vanishes into nothing at the first attempt to grasp it; it is a mirage, an ignis fatuus that neither warms nor illuminates." It is impossible not to think of Beecher and the Universalists when reading that they are the "uncertain, sickly souls, who hav lost their reckoning in the present civilization, belonging to neither the present nor the future—pale phantoms eternally suspended between heaven and earth."

Bakounine's statement of the creation and development of religions is singularly clear, and shows an analytical mind of great power. "All religions," he says, "with their gods, their demigods, and their prophets, their messiahs and their saints, were created by the credulous fancy of men who had not attained the full development and full possession of their intellectual faculties. Consequently, the religious heaven is nothing but a mirage in which man, exalted by ignorance and faith, discovers his own image, but enlarged and reversed—that is, divinized. The history of religions, of the birth, grandeur, and decline of the gods who hav succeeded one another in human belief, is nothing, therefore, but the development of the collectiv intelligence and conscience of mankind. As fast as they discovered, in the course of their historically progressiv advance, either in themselvs or in external nature, a power, a quality, or even any great defect whatever, they attributed them to their gods, after having exaggerated and enlarged them beyond measure, after the manner of children, by an act of their religious fancy. Thanks to this modesty and pious generosity of believing and credulous men, heaven has grown rich with the spoils of the earth, and, by a necessary consequence, the richer heaven became, the more wretched became humanity and the earth. God once installed, he was naturally proclaimed the cause, reason, arbiter, and absolute disposer of all things. The world thenceforth was nothing, God was all; and man, his real creator, after having extracted him from the void, bowed down before him, worshiped him, and avowed himself his creature and his slave. Christianity is precisely the religion par excellence, because it exhibits and manifests, to the fullest extent, the very nature and essence of every religious system, which is the impoverishment, enslavement, and annihilation of humanity for the benefit of divinity."

The real basis of Christianity, the bottom principle, is that God is everything, humanity nothing—God the master, man the slave. Whoever cries, Revelation! postulates revealers, messiahs, prophets, priests, and legislators; and these, if recognized as God's representativs, must necessarily exercise absolute power. "Slaves of God, men must be also slaves of church and state, in so far as the state is consecrated by the church." It is this principle that makes the despotism of Russia so cruel, so unbearably insolent. In America, the state not being (theoretically, at least) consecrated by the church, the invectivs against government are misapplied. But none the less is the following true, that "unless we desire the enslavement and degradation of mankind, as the Jesuits desire it, as the Protestant Methodists desire it, we may not, must not, make the slightest concession either to the God of theology or to the God of metaphysics. He who, in this mystical alphabet, begins with God will inevitably end with God; he who desires to worship God must harbor no childish illusions about the matter, but bravely renounce his liberty and humanity. If God is, man is a slave; now, man can and must be free; then, God does not exist."

There is no question but that this humiliation of man to God has been a great obstacle to humanity's progress. "There can be but little liberty on earth while men worship a tyrant in heaven," said Col. Ingersoll, and it is true. This feeling of self-abasement and degradation has also been taken advantage of by popes and kings. Once convince a people that their rulers are divinely appointed, and it becomes as much disrespect to God to disobey them as to defy one of his own commands. Looking at him in that light, a king is a double personage. With all the vices common to man, he has all the attributes of divinity, and no line can be distinctly drawn between the two. His divinity is a mantle that covers his finite shortcomings, and this mantle is put on at his pleasure. This is constantly seen in Russia and other "divinely-ruled" countries. No wonder Bakounine hated the God idea as ferociously as he hated a government that is the impersonation of brutality. Were the Bible account of creation true he, and we, could offer no excuse for not hating divinity and all connected with it. But a solace and a hope is found in evolution. That explains a constant historical phenomenon—the persecution of those who first proclaim a truth, and the final adoption of the truth by the same masses who tortured its propounders. "This law," says the author of "God and the State," "is a logical, inevitable consequence of the animal origin of human society; and in face of all the scientific, physiological, psychological, and historical proofs accumulated at the present day, as well as in face of the exploits of the Germans conquering France, which now furnish so striking a demonstration thereof, it is no longer possible to really doubt it. But from the moment that this animal origin of man is accepted, all is explained. History then appears to us as the revolutionary negation, now slow, apathetic, sluggish, how passionate and powerful, of the past. It consists precisely in the progressiv negation of the primitiv animality of man by the development of his humanity. Man, a wild beast, cousin of the gorilla, has emerged from the profound darkness of animal instinct into the light of the mind, which explains in a wholly natural way all his past mistakes and partially consoles us for his present errors. He has gone out from animal slavery, and, passing through divine slavery, a temporary condition between his animality and his humanity, he is now marching on to the conquest and realization of human liberty. Whence it results that the antiquity of a belief, of an idea, far from proving anything in its favor, ought, on the contrary, to lead us to suspect it. For behind us is our animality and before us our humanity; human light, the only thing that can warm and enlighten us, the only thing that can emancipate us, giv us dignity, freedom, and happiness, and realize fraternity among us, is never at the beginning, but, relativly to the epoch in which we liv, always at the end of history. Let us, then, never look back, let us look ever forward; for forward is our sunlight, forward our salvation; if it is justifiable, and even useful and necessary, to turn back to study our past, it is only in order to establish what we hav been and what we must no longer be, what we hav believed and thought and what we must no longer believe or think, what we hav done and what we must do nevermore."

The universality of this belief in a God is no proof of his existence. "Until the days of Galileo and Copernicus everybody believed that the sun revolved about the earth. Was not everybody mistaken? What is more ancient and more universal than slavery? Cannibalism, perhaps. From the origin of historic society down to the present day there has been always and everywhere exploitation of the compulsory labor of the masses—slaves, serfs, or employees—by some dominant minority; oppression of the people by the church and by the state. Must it be concluded that this exploitation and this oppression are necessities absolutely inherent in the very existence of human society? These are examples which show that the argument of the champions of the good God proves nothing. Nothing, in fact, is as universal or as ancient as the iniquitous and absurd; truth and justice, on the contrary, are the least universal, the youngest features in the development of human society."

Under this state of society, when the people are reduced intellectually and morally, as well as materially, to the minimum of human existence, there are, according to Bakounine, but three methods of escape —the first two the dram-shop and the church—debauchery of the body or debasement of the mind—the third is social revolution. If we had lived in Russia we might think so too; but as it is, we can hardly see in Nihilism and anarchy so potent a remedy as the diffusion of Freethought. Bakounine himself acknowledges that cruelty of earthly governments proceeds from the divinity idea, and that the way to correct an evil is to lay the axe at its roots. He proposes to first chop the tree off half way from the ground by destroying government. But he is attacking what is in itself a necessary adjunct of civilization—biting his nose off to spite his face. But even on this point we do not care to quarrel with him just now. Admiration for his genius, his logic, his unanswerable arguments against the church, will let us overlook this vehement error, justifiable under the governmental conditions by which he was surrounded. It is with the church we are dealing.

Admitting that among all the Christians who hav lived there hav been "great men, holy men, who hav really practised, or who, at least, hav passionately tried to practice all that they preached, and whose hearts, overflowing with love, were full of contempt for the pleasures and goods of this world, he sees that the immense majority of Catholic and Protestant priests who, by trade, hav preached and still preach the doctrins of chastity, abstinence, and renunciation belie their teachings by their example. It is, therefore, not without reason, but because of several centuries' experience, that among the people of all countries these phrases hav become by-words: 'As licentious as a priest; as gluttonous as a priest; as ambitious as a priest; as greedy, selfish, and grasping as a priest.' It is, then, established that the professors of the Christian virtues, consecrated by the church, the priests, in the immense majority of cases, hav practiced quite the contrary of what they hav preached. This very majority, the universality of this fact, show that the fault is not to be attributed to them as individuals, but to the social position, impossible and contradictory in itself, in which these individuals are placed.

"It is not at all difficult to prove, history in hand, that the church, that all the churches, Christian and non-Christian, by the side of their spiritualistic propagandism and probably to accelerate and consolidate the success thereof, hav never neglected to organize themselvs into great corporations for the economic exploitation of the masses under the protection and with the direct and special blessing of some divinity or other; that all the states, which originally, as we know, with all their political and judicial institutions and their dominant and privileged classes, hav been only temporal branches of these various churches, hav likewise had principally in view this same exploitation for the benefit of lay minorities indirectly sanctioned by the church; finally and in general, that the action of the good God and of all the divine idealities on earth has ended at last, always and everywhere, in founding the prosperous materialism of the few over the fanatical and constantly famishing idealism of the masses.

"We hav a new proof of this in what we see to-day. With the exception of the great hearts and great minds whom I hav before referred to as misled, who are to-day the most obstinate defenders of idealism? In the first place, all the sovereign courts. In France, until lately, Napoleon III. and his wife, Madam Eugenie; all their former ministers, courtiers, and ex-marshals, from Rouher and Bazaine to Fleury and Pietri; the men and women of the imperial official world, who hav so completely idealized and saved France; their journalists and their savants—the Cassagnacs, the Girardins, the Duvernois, the Veuillots, the Leverriers, the Dumas; the black phalanx of Jesuits and Jesuitesses in every garb; the whole upper and middle bourgeoisie of France; the doctrinaire Liberals, and the Liberals without doctrin—the Guizots, the Thiers, the Jules Favres, the Pelletans, and the Jules Simons, all obstinate defenders of the bourgeoisie exploitation. In Prussia, in Germany, William I., the present royal demonstrator of the good God on earth; all his generals, all his officers, Pomeranian and other, all his army, which, strong in its religious faith, has just conquered France in that ideal way we know so well. In Russia, the czar and all his court; the Mouravieffs and the Bergs, all the butchers and pious proselyters of Poland. Everywhere, in short, religious or philosophical idealism, the one being but the more or less free translation of the other, serves to-day as the flag of material, bloody, and brutal force, of shameless material exploitation; while, on the contrary, the flag of theoretical Materialism, the red flag of economic equality and social justice, is raised by the practical idealism of the oppressed and famishing masses, tending to realize the greatest liberty and the human right of each in the fraternity of all men on earth.

"Who are the real idealists—the idealists not of abstraction, but of life; not of heaven, but of earth—and who are the Materialists?"

We hav quoted thus at length from the book, because, taken all in all, it is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's "Age of Reason" and "Rights of Man" consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call. If we cannot go so far as the author in the criticism of government, we can nevertheless fully sympathize with him. Had fate cast our lot in a despotic country, we might hav gone farther than he without so good reasons. But his ringing sentences cannot be too ofteu read or widely circulated. If all the anarchists were like him, we would start a fund to bring them to this country.

The National Congress.

Pursuant to the call, the National Liberal Congress was held at Milwaukee on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 21st, 22d, and 23d. The hall in which it met was tastefully decorated. A bust of Humboldt on the wall at the back of the stage was wreathed with evergreens. In front of the stage was a portrait of Thomas Paine, also surrounded by a wreath of green. The pillars supporting the gallery and the gallery itself were tastefully decorated with trees, flags, and shields. At 11 o'clock the president called the delegates, numbering between one and two hundred, to order, and delivered an address setting forth the purpose of the League. Among the points he made were that theologians must cease their control of secular affairs. They must cease to control our politics, cease to make, as they do in many states, a distinction between the legal standing of a Christian and a Liberal, cease to compromise our government by getting it to employ chaplains and to parcel out the different Indian tribes among the different religious sects, and cease to take public money for the support of sectarian churches and schools. The Liberal League holds that there must be freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of the mails, which at present there are not in many parts of the Union. Even in Wisconsin greater freedom is needed. Here the church can no longer punish independence of thought by imprisonment, but she can and does punish it by social ostracism. Liberals can in one way only "overcome the adverse influences which are arrayed against them—that is by organizing."

Among the prominent Liberals in attendance besides the officers of the League were Charles Watts, George Chainey, M. Babcock, John E. Remsburg, and H. L. Green.

A platform was adopted by which the League pledged itself to undertake the introduction of political and social reforms, which are summarized as follows: No state rights conflicting with the inseparable totality of the Union; uniformity of the civil and criminal courts throughout the United States; equality of citizens without regard to sex or creed; a constitutional change to be enacted in a certain time after being decided upon by a majority of the people; abolition of one-man power in the presidency of the United States and the substitution of an executiv council; so-called temperance (not prohibition) laws not to be tolerated; the designation of Sunday as the legal day for elections; the abolition of all monopolies; public control of the railroads and telegraph; national legislation in regard to the industrial classes, covering among other things the hours of labor, the right of association and organization among laborers, and the responsibility of employers for accidents to employees not caused by the fault of the latter; the discontinuance of sales and grants of public lands which shall hereafter be considered the entailable property of the nation to be intrusted only to actual settlers under precautionary conditions and in consideration of reasonable rental tax.

Very incomplete reports hav thus far reached us, and the officers elected are not given. By next week, however, we expect to be able to publish the important work accomplished.

An Inquiry About Atoms.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am interested in the discussion between Mr. Wettstein and Mrs. Heddon. I wish to inquire of the lady:

1. In what branch of science she discovers, "Aggregation of myriads of atoms all alike in quality, and moved by one force, produce this wonderful phenomenon which we call nature?"
2. Is force a "mysterious nothing," as she alleges?
3. Is the force of attraction of gravitation a "mysterious nothing?"
4. Is elastic force?
5. Is the force of cohesion?
6. Is chemical affinity?
7. In what field of science can we find the proof that force is a "mysterious nothing?"
8. What scientist teaches it?
9. What Materialist teaches it?

Lake City, Minn. W. F. Jamieson.

Loving Kindness.

When I told a man who is always talking about the loving care of the heavenly father that the rose-bugs last spring ate up enough of my blossoms to make four thousand pounds of grapes, and I got only four hundred and eleven pounds, and in consequence was left destitute of means for the coming winter, and asked him what loving kindness he could see in that, he replied: "The loving father did not send the rose-bugs to destroy your crops; they came in accordance with the laws of nature." Said I, "Who established the laws of nature?" "Why, the heavenly father, the creator of all things, of course." "Well," said I, "if the heavenly father established laws that brought bugs to destroy my grapes, was it not just the same to him and me as though he had come and done the same thing with his own hands? If I send an assassin to cut your throat and burn your house, am I not as guilty as though I did the bloody deed with my own hands?" He could make no reply to this, and I write it for the purpose of asking the clergy to explain the mystery, as they profess to know all about such things.

If God, the loving father, as they call some unseen or imaginary power, had all knowledge and power to do as he pleased, and established laws of nature that bring forth bugs to destroy my crops, rats and hawks to steal my chickens, tornadoes to ruin eighteen thousand dwellings in ten minutes, leaving eight thousand mangled and dead human beings in the ruins, and earthquakes and volcanoes to sink cities and destroy seventy-three thousand lives in a day, and lions, tigers, and serpents to destroy six thousand lives in a year—if he established laws that produce all this misery, knowing beforehand that these laws would do all this, is he not just as guilty of cruelty and murder as though he came in person and did all this with his own hands?

I want the doctors of divinity to come out openly and boldly, candidly and honestly, and answer these questions, and make them plain and clear to the understanding of common people, or else honestly confess that all their talk about the tender care of the loving father is at best but imaginary, and then giv up their trade of deceiving and swindling people with preaching that has no foundation in truth and reality. It is said that there are seventy-one thousand clergymen in this nation, and probably they average four prayers offered each Sunday, which make three hundred thousand prayers every week on one day, to say nothing of the other six days, and in these prayers they ask the loving father for all sorts of blessings, and if only one of all these prayers should be answered it would be such a strange, wonderful thing that it would be blazed all over this nation and over Europe by telegraph in less than twenty-four hours. But as no such news is ever sent abroad it shows how much, or rather how little, loving care the loving father has for us. I am now in my eighty-third year, and hav been looking for this loving father all my life; and as I hav not as yet discovered so much as his footprints on this earth, and must soon pass away, I ask all the clergy to aid me in finding him; and if they are honest they will either do so or confess that they know no more about it than I do.

Berlin, N. J., Sept. 10, 283. J. HACKER.

Pleasure and Pain.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav read with much interest Mrs. Slenker's reply to the despairing wail of your late contributor, "C. O.," on the great inequality of pain and pleasure suffered and enjoyed in the world; and permit me to remark that the agitation of this subject set me seriously reflecting.

Of your late contributor, "C. O.," I suppose we hav heard the last. Most probably his remains (if ever found) will be accidentally raked from the bed of some river or mill pond.

I had never seriously reflected on the results of the ills and miseries of life before I read his sad wail in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is true I hav often heard sufferers, in my time, wish they "had never been born." I was, therefore, glad when the philosophic and philanthropic Mrs. Slenker thought the subject worthy of her pen.

I like the spirit of her reply to "C. O."—her counsel to labor for the general good and advancement of humanity, and for the whole brotherhood of mankind—even under the crudest, rudest, and most unpromising circumstances. But, unfortunately, preach as we will, I am seriously afraid, man, without hope of immediate reward to himself—even in the matter of so-called salvation—is too selfish. He will not exert himself without an object.

I agree with Elmina, this may be considered a beautiful world, in an elementary sense, even with its frequent interruptions of tranquillity by cyclones, earthquakes, floods, fires, pestilences, and drouths, but does this really comprehend all that is understood by the "world?" I fear, in her tinted estimate, she leaves poor, forlorn, sentient, short-sighted, selfish, fractious humanity altogether out in the cold. I am afraid she overlooks the extreme sensitivness of human nature, as distinguishing it from the brute—as brutes seldom commit suicide. Man is an anomaly. He is ever haunted with aspirations to excellence which prompt him to vain exertions which too often end in shattered hopes sinking him into the depths of dispair.

Yes, indeed, this is a beautiful world, viewed from a Robinson Crusoe point of sight. Robinson found his island contained within itself every capability, climate included, to make mere existence bearable. It was beautiful. But was Robinson happy? Read his journal. The only thing which sustained him in his solitude was that fallacious ignis-fatuus known as hope; a hope to again mingle with the bedlamitish world.

I cannot disbelieve in nature and the inflexibility of her laws, but the more I reflect upon the intellectual department of the world, the more enigmatical existence seems.

I cannot reject the truths of evolution. It carries me back to that remote period when man existed, howbeit insensible to himself, in the molecular or atomic state, from whence his history can only be conjectured as the outgrowth of rocks, and the coarse grasses of past ages evoluting through countless contentious conditions up to his present forlorn status. Science, with me, I must confess, acts as a cooling process to my enthusiasm, and is too often apt to destroy that "silvery lining" of the darkened clouds of adversity which too often o'ershadow our mental atmosphere, of which Elmina so feelingly speaks.

"A beautiful world!" Alas! I sometimes envy the condition of mind of those simple-minded hallelujah Christians—weaknesses and all; even the still more misguided Spiritualists, who really believe in a continuation of life after the death of the body. But we must bear with them.

In conclusion, the philosopher should rise superior to all ignorant fantasies, and, with "C. O.," when life to sufferers through family bereavements, hopeless, painful sickness, and poverty, becomes unbearable, it is a duty he owes to himself to shuffle off this mortal coil in the least offensiv way; eschew all aspiration for posthumous greatness, and let future generations take care of themselvs. The philosopher should cease jigging and dancing his brief existence through life to the grand tantalizing fiddle of hope.

C. BRADY.

Education Better than Religion as a Preventativ of Crime.

Dexter A. Hawkins in the Independent.

The statistics of every country where education is compulsory and universal demonstrate that juvenil crime may be nearly if not quite exterminated by a wise enforcement of juvenil education.

The training of a child, from eight to fourteen years, generally determins whether or not he is to be a criminal.

The Grand Duchy of Baden, by a rigorous enforcement of such a law for seven years, according to their carefully prepared statistics, reduced crime in that Duchy fifty-one per cent and pauperism twenty-five per cent.

Our Board of Education has not pretended to a rigorous enforcement of the Compulsory Education law, but yet they hav given some enforcement to it, employing twelve agents of truancy to look after the truants in over one hundred and fifty thousand children. Their labors, imperfect as they hav been, hav had a most remarkable effect in reducing juvenil crime in this city. A copy of their report on this subject for the last year I subjoin.

For the five years immediately preceding the enactment of the Compulsory Education law, there were 6,105 arrests of juvenil delinquents in this city, being an average of 1,221 per year.

The total arrests of juvenil delinquents for the last five years under the enforcement of this law hav been 4,341, or an average of 868 per year, and last year only 717. This, considering the larger population of the city now than then, is a decrease in juvenil crime of thirty-six per cent, and is an annual saving to the city, in future criminal expenses, of many times the entire cost of enforcing this law. A single agent has in the last year, by direct arrest of the Italian truants, and by his moral influence in inducing others of them to go to school, without arrest added eleven hundred to the attendance of that class of children alone.

The labors of this single agent hav relieved the taxpayers of this city of more expense for pauperism and crime, springing from this class of our population, than the entire expense of the whole truancy department.

If the Board of Education will strictly enforce this law, according to its letter and spirit, and provide a school for the delinquents that are too incorrigible to be put into the present schools, and yet not bad enough to be sent to the House of Refuge, it is entirely feasible to reduce in this city this class of criminals, not thirty-six per cent, but ninety per cent, and so quite close up the recruiting dens for the bands of young thieves and cut-throats that now infest the city.

For the relief of taxpayers, and for the reform of society, the truancy department of the Board of Education, imperfectly administered as it is, is yet, according to its cost, by far the most valuable branch of the entire public educational system of the city.

NEW YORK, January 22, 1883.

JOHN JASPER, ESQ., CITY SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION, Sir: In compliance with your instructions, I hav examined the police records of this city, and obtained the number of arrests of children between the ages of 8 and 14 years who were held or committed for crime, and the causes for which they were arrested.

Following is the record. For the year last past (1882) there were arrested and held for examination or committed, seven hundred and seventeen (717).

The column of ages of those arrested indicated that the criminals were much older than in former years.

The records were examined on this point for eight years last past for those arrested under twelve years of age. Following is the record:

UNDER TWENTY YEARS OF AGE.

1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1881.	1882.
15,620	14,734	18,229	19,373	11,738	13,697	10,882	10,366

BETWEEN THE AGES OF EIGHT AND FOURTEEN.

1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1881.	1882.
1,034	814	967	931	957	989	700	717

There appeared to be a much less number of children between the ages of 8 and 14 years arrested for the higher grades of crime than in former years; and for comparison the records from 1870 to 1875 inclusiv, and from 1878 to the close of 1882 inclusiv, were examined. These periods cover the five years immediately preceding the enactment of the law securing to children the benefits of elementary education, and the last five years of its enforcement in this city. The following tables show how the record stands:

AGE, EIGHT TO FOURTEEN YEARS.

Cause of Arrest.	1870.	1871.	1872.	1873.	1874.	Tot'l.
Truancy,	103	71	99	139	81	493
Vagrancy,	212	257	193	141	191	999
Disorderly conduct,	309	167	216	181	194	1,067
Violating city ordinance,	17	12	16	3	66	114
Assault and battery,	23	12	22	20	15	92
Malicious mischief,	11	4	10	2	13	40
Intoxication,	32	21	15	24	11	103
Felonious assault,		1	6	3	4	14
Petty larceny,	216	226	283	252	218	1,195
Larceny from the person,	5	14	23	26	12	80
Grand larceny,	28	23	25	35	22	133
Burglary,	17	12	26	33	19	107
Robbery,	1	3	7	5	5	21
Suspicious persons,	28	14	17	21	29	109
Held for further examination,	117	354	268	351	334	1,424
All other causes,	25	3	22	33	31	114
Total,	1,144	1,194	1,253	1,269	1,245	6,105

The law compelling children between these ages to attend school went into operation January 1, 1875.

AGE, EIGHT TO FOURTEEN YEARS.

Cause of Arrest.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1881.	1882.	Tot'l.
Truancy,	128	94	94	66	41	423
Vagrancy,	124	165	52	81	80	502
Disorderly conduct,	128	166	192	111	143	740
Violating city ordinance,	71	40	92	52	100	355
Assault and battery,	29	21	24	14	8	96
Malicious mischief,	18	14	1	8	5	46
Intoxication,	19	14	13	5	7	58
Felonious assault,	5	4	11	3	3	26
Petty larceny,	244	178	203	130	91	846
Larceny from the person,	39	9	26	14	14	102
Grand larceny,	14	6	18	9	5	52
Burglary,	53	29	36	14	23	155
Robbery,	15	6	28	9	—	58
Suspicious persons,	32	18	22	24	8	104
Held for further examination,	63	175	162	143	163	706
All other causes,	—	14	15	18	26	72
Total,	982	953	989	700	717	4,341
Decrease in the five years compared of						1,764

This is an absolute decrease of 29 per cent, while the population had meanwhile actually increased 28 per cent. In other words, according to the population, the causes for arrest hav decreased 36 per cent.

A large proportion of those arrested for petty larceny could neither read nor write.

The Children's Aid and Female Guardian Societies hav been doing a noble and highly commendable work among the poor and destitute children of this city for years, and still there seems to hav been a large number of children those agencies could not reach; for the number of arrests steadily increased from 1870 to 1875. At this date the law compelling children between the ages of 8 and 14 years to attend school went into effect; and in March, 1875, the Board of Education appointed agents to see that the law was enforced in this city. From that date the average attendance of all the schools under the care of the "board" had increased, and the number of arrests as steadily decreased. The decrease for the five years last past, in arrests, in proportion to the increase in population is fully 36 per cent.

The conclusion seems irresistible that some powerful agent must hav been added to those in operation previous to 1875, to produce this result.

As the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is the only additional agent dealing directly with children, the law "Securing to Children the Benefits of an Elementary Education," must hav been an important factor in increasing the average attendance of the schools, and in decreasing the number of arrests.

Respectfully yours,

JNO. S. KETCHAM,
Agt. for 7th School Dist.

George Jacob Holyoake's Case.

Friend Holyoake, come, sign that petition and liberate our friends, Foote and Ramsay. Our friend Seaver, of the Investigator, has now advised you twice to do so. To decline it because the petition requests it to be done in "mercy" or in clemency is only quibbling. If the church government is willing, now they hav punished them some for shocking its feelings, they will connive at your doing it. They know that the story of a baby-god, its mother Mary and its father the Holy Ghost, is an absurdly blasphemous fiction. They want to fight Atheism with the Deism of a halo-headed God, because it figurativly givs a model by which crowned kings, popes, and queens can sit enthroned upon nations. They want to hold on to the monopoly of each one's share of the soil and sovereignty; but which they do not know will result, in the near future, in two great parties—those contending for the monopoly and usurpation of all property and power, and those establishing their right to an entailed share of farmstead and government.

LEWIS MASQUERIER.

Letters from Friends.

ORANGEPORT, August 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose $1.00 for the Monument Fund. Yours ever for truth,

M. E. ATWOOD.

MOHTOWN, MINN., Sept. 13, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find one dollar for the Monument Fund if not too late, J. H. COLLINS.

[It is not too late by any means for contributions to the Monument Fund to be applied to the purpose for which they are intended. Something more than $200 yet remains to be raised before the amount ($1,400) to be paid for the monument will hav been realized. Any moneys received within the next month from date will be applied to that object. Thanking most fervently those who hav contributed to this noble enterprise, we would express a hope that the needed sum may be donated within the time specified.—ED. T. S.]

MONTEZUMA, IOWA, Sept. 11, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2.50, which sum place to my account on THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been a subscriber for over four years, and think the paper is improving very much. Every number appears better than the former. There is quite a little excitement over the coming election; the prohibitory amendment of the constitution of the state is making things lively. A great many of the Liberal Republicans will vote the Democratic ticket. They will not vote with the Methodist church and Republicans. M. BONE.

WILLIAMSTOWN, OHIO., Aug. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: When reading the accounts of so many terrible destructiv cyclones, the following lines of Cowper came flitting across my mind:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

Is this the God the orthodox tell us so much about? The great and merciful God riding on a cyclone, seeing death, destruction, and devastation following in its track? Will some holy divine tell us is this the great being you sing so much about? Oh, please show us the mercy in the destructiv cyclone while God is riding upon it. Or is this the God we read in Proverbs i, 26, who says, "I also will laugh at your calamities and mock when your fear cometh?" Please tell us is this the being you ask an intelligent people to worship and adore? A being according to your belief can control the storms or still the ocean's waves, will ride upon storm and not check its terrible destruction of life and property! Can you say that all those in the track of the furious cyclone hav sinned away their day of grace, and this God is wreaking his vengeance upon them? If so, please tell us how you know. But perhaps you will add:

"Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs
And works his sovereign will.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his works in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

Well, this may all be true, but these things hav been going on for thousands of years, and God has not stopped at any time to explain, as we hav heard of. B. D. EVANS, M.D.

LESLIE, MICH., Sept. 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1 for D. M. Bennett's monument. I hope I shall see that monument at some future time and where the hero sleeps—a hero of liberty; but we hav not got liberty yet. We soon will, however, if all Liberals, Spiritualists, Materialists, and Liberal orthodox put their shoulder to the wheel and cry aloud the world over, "Down, down with that great burden that we are carrying on our backs—untaxed church property."

I must say I like the spirit of T. Winter. I hav a great many of his lectures in my scrap book. But I think, Brother Winter, that it would do more good to fight for our liberty and not be burdened any longer with that great load of millions of dollars of untaxed church property. Hav you ever thought, Brother Winter, that one's body cannot be destroyed, and so it must be the intelligence cannot be destroyed? But that it comes back in the shape of spooks and hob-goblins I cannot believe.

Let the Spiritualists work on. I think they hav done a great good; but, brother and sister Spiritualist, don't work too hard at the spook business. I hav been told by mediums that they had to let it alone or go crazy. They work their nervous system up to boiling heat, thinking that a lot of spirits hav hold of them. I hav seen some get themselvs in such a state that their eyes looked like balls of fire. I must say that is very foolish, liked the old-fashioned Methodist that felt the power and fell flat on the floor, while the people that retain their senses must laugh in their sleeves. I hope all Leagues of Spiritualists and Materialists will work together for that one object—untaxed church property. We will be sure to win. Think of the little ant that carried a grain of sand to the top of the hill ninety-nine times, falling back each time, but at last it gained the day. Let us hear from all good workers.

MRS. SARAH A. HAYNES.

HAMILTON, ONT., Sept. 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am prompted to let you know the grand success of Mr. Watts's first visit to this very orthodox city. It is now three years since Mr. Underwood visited Hamilton. He failed to draw, and we who had to meet the expense were somewhat discouraged; but having our ears assailed at every corner by zealous bigots in the interest of the faith once delivered to the saints, we concluded, we, that is, a few of us who hav discarded the old hulk of theology, would chip in our mite, and as Mr. Watts was to pass through our city, on his tour West, we would invite him to giv one of his orations on Secularism. Your humble servant wrote to your address and in a few days got word from Rochester, he being then at the convention, that he would pass here and would be pleased to giv two lectures. We only had five days to prepare, so we got 2,000 dodgers printed, and 100 larger bills to paste on boards and hang on the street cars, as advertising, we thought, would be too dear. We had no sooner got a few of our dodgers posted than the evening papers came out with a fierce tirade of abuse about Infidels, Agnostics, Freethinkers—no social standing, no brains, etc., and daring us to unmask ourselvs, and even calling on the chief of police and mayor to prevent the lecture being given. We never took any notice of these ebullitions of feeling; the lectures were advertised as being free, we having amongst the friends collected sufficient to cover all expenses. The evening came and found Mr. Watts in a hall crammed with eight hundred persons, all grown people, some having come twelve miles to hear the second lecture ever given in Hamilton on Freethought. Many came to see if our orator had horns and tail, and found themselvs electrified by his eloquence, and at the close of his first lecture came forward and purchased all his books. The second lecture, although a wet night, was, if possible, more crowded still, and hundreds went away from the door, and at the close again, a great call was made for books and all eagerly bought up. Such lectures were never heard in Canada before; all creeds heard him and cheered and applauded, and at the close we invited him to call again on his return from Montreal, which will be next Monday, 17th, 1883, when he will lecture on the Bible and Freethought. It will well repay a few to engage him; as he is a perfect "eye-opener," and will surely cause the dry bones to shake.

Yours for the truth, GEO. MADDOCKS.

A CHRISTIAN INTRUDER IN THE HAPPY FAMILY.

NEW YORK, September 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER long enough to feel warranted in sending you this communication. Each week your journal contains a great variety of views of a great variety of subjects, and the subjoined expressions of individual opinion, although in contrast to the usual tenor of your correspondence, may help to correct some wrong impressions and thus further the laudable cause of truth seeking and expounding.

The Freethinker, having assumed his point by denying the divine origin of the Bible and the law therein set forth, generally traces out the line in a very reasonable way. Sometimes, however, his logic is faulty, and now and then he misrepresents the Christians' position by what seem to me very biased comparisons. The latter practice looks like an attempt to intensify the prejudice of his auditors at the expense of truth, and is not apt to receive the commendation of fair minds.

Before the Rochester Convention of Freethinkers—at which I am willing to concede were aggregated most of the potent atoms of the Infidel world—Mr. John E. Remsburg made a speech, entitled "False Claims," which was published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 15th inst. There is evidence that Mr. Remsburg is an exhaustiv searcher of records, and if he has overlooked any historical items that would tend to impress his hearers, he ought to be excused on the ground that those he has presented are abundant. But, notwithstanding the elaborateness and length of his paper, there are portions, I think, that may be adverselv criticised.

"Take the doctrin of total depravity," he said. In reply to the questions he puts after his beginning, I would submit: The effect of this "dogma" upon morality ought to be elevating. Recognizing heredity, one of the popular current studies, as an important fact, I hold that a parent who, being aware of his evil physical and moral bequeathments, indicates to his child the dangers which beset it, warns it against the indulgence of certain natural proclivities, and shows it, as only a loving parent can, how it may avoid the obstacles to and finally arrive at the goal of respected manhood, does his bounden duty. And the child, if it has been properly instructed, if the awful consequences—moral and physical—of continuing the habits of the progenitor, and the happiness that is within its easy reach as the sure result of a different course, hav been made clear to its comprehension, what is its duty? Is it necessary—is it probable—that the child under such conditions become "a low, immoral being—a Christian," etc.? Has Mr. Remsburg given us his candid view of the result of a belief in the doctrin of total depravity? What seems better calculated to bring about the reformation of a drunkard, or the salvation of his offspring, than the method which necessitates a plain statement of the terrible condition of each? Should a father, who has passed through the horrible ordeal of a drunkard's career and been fortunate enough to realize the sweet fruits of his altered ways, advise his son to do as he has done, with the possibility that the latter may not be able to arrest himself until it is too late? No! The father's duty is plainly to so impress his child with the evil consequences of a repetition of his own experience that even the thought of entering such a pathway will chill the fledgling's blood. The Christian's conception of the effect of this much-mooted doctrin is certainly not what may be inferred from Mr. Remsburg's words.

The speaker next assailed the doctrin of vicarious atonement, and his illustration—a large family of children, all of whom are bad with the exception of one, who is made to suffer in order that the others may be saved—when reduced to its pith, is simply an objection to the sacrifice of the few for the good of the many, and herein his views are in unfortunate (for him) opposition to those held on this subject by the majority of mankind.

In attacking the doctrin of forgivness for sin, he compares divine law (the Christian's interpretation of it) with state law, and while treating this classification of his subject, evinces a more pitiable spirit of prejudice, lack of reason, and disposition to misrepresent, than in any other part of his address. He assumes one of the Christian's offices to be "teaching that the effect of a cause can be arrested—that the penalties of violated law can be evaded." Garbling and contorting words and sentences into premises of argument may be considered in harmony with the style of a certain class of lawyers; but how in the name of candor this speaker could stand before a mass of such intelligence, as Freethinkers boast, and present the simile given in the fifth paragraph of his printed speech, is the very quintessence of all conundrums. "Suppose that Governor Cleveland were to issue a proclamation proclaiming that all convicts now confined in the state prisons would be released by simply making application for pardon and expressing regret for the various crimes committed; suppose he should go further, and proclaim that in the future all persons committing crime would be granted a full and free pardon by complying with the same provision." There is no part of the divine law as written by Moses, taught by Christ, or preached by Christian ministers, which can be construed to compare with the above illustration. The transgressor of God's law is discovered by the Christian teacher in the figurativ prison of sin. An understanding and recognition of the law form the superstructure underlying the conditions of his release. A comprehension of the law is followed by explanation and acknowledgment of its tenets. The prisoner is then informed that evidence of his acceptance of the law in spirit as well as by word of mouth will be educed from his conduct thenceforth, and that at the completion of a satisfactory term of probation he will be pardoned and recognized as a Christian subject, with full rights and immunities. He abides by his agreement, and is finally installed in Christian society. The ultimate salvation of his soul is guaranteed as a reward for the faithful observance of all the provisions of the law.

Governor Cleveland, by representativ, says to the prisoner (who very often needs the same explanation of the law, and is invariably required to recognize it): You hav disregarded the statutes and are paying the penalty; but good conduct will secure a commutation of sentence for you. At the completion of a probationary term, the conditions of which hav been made clear to you, you will be pardoned and be restored to full citizenship. The prisoner by compliance with certain rules agrees to these conditions, and is rewarded with a pardon, ultimately being reinstated as a member of secular society.

If there is sufficient difference between these two operations of law to warrant the opprobrium cast upon the advocate of the one for his "silly belief," I would like to hav it pointed out to me.

And this is another instance where the Christian's position does not seem to be what Mr. Remsburg evidently wishes to hav granted.

The speaker next attacked that section of the Christian code which prescribes damnation as the penalty for persistent unbelief. Let us see if this provision cannot by analogy be made to appear more reasonable than the gentleman would hav it. The very primordial essentiality of all law is a recognition of it—a belief in it; and if this all-important statute of God's law is defied by man, why should he escape the penalty?

Mr. Remsburg said (and these are the premises taken by all who reject the particular section): "A man may liv a pure and noble life, and yet, if he does not believe this senseless dogma, he is damned."

Certainly. Did anyone ever hear a sane person suggest that a man who refrains from the infraction of every provision of state law, excepting one—no matter which one; his offense may be simply the denunciation or defiance of the authority of the code, or it may be "false pretenses"—should escape the penalty prescribed for a violation of that one, for the reason that he never robbed, or murdered, or committed adultery, or was guilty of bigamy or arson? The individual who kills his fellow cannot escape the gallows through the plea that he has commendably kept all other of the law's commandments. Why is God's law so reviled because it metes out the severest penalty for the greatest offense?

Is not this, also, a more appropriate view of the Christian's standpoint in regard to rewards and punishments than that pictured for him by the orator in Rochester. Let there be fair criticism of all sides.

Yours gratefuliy, J. N. B.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. Duncan, Baptist minister of Montgomery City, Mo., was in the ladies' car of a train going to St. Louis a few days ago, when he noticed three gentlemen playing a social game of cards. This terrible crime so infuriated the divine that he asked the conductor to put them off the train; and when told by the conductor that he could not do it, as it was only a social game—that the men were not gambling—he insisted that they should be made to ride in a second-class car, if allowed to ride at all. It is said the same reverend gentleman got awfully insulted by a young lady laughing as she and her friend were walking in front of his house on Sunday. Poor old Missouri churches! It seems they hav to put up with men for preachers that hav not sense enough to do anything else. FREETHINKER.

ASHLEY, O., Sept. 10, 1883.

MR EDITOR: The Freethinkers of Ashley and vicicity hav had the pl asure of listening to three of the best Freethought lectures ever delivered in this town, by the well-known able and scholarly gentlemen, Mr. John E. Remsburg. He is a Goliah, yet a David; a lion, yet a lamb. In Ashley he was a Daniel in a lion's den of superstition, ignorance, and bigotry. But their mouths were closed by his burnished masterpiece of elcquence, so much so that not the wag of the monster's tail is visible. Under the auspices of our friend Remsburg we hav formed an Independent Liberal League, although we are not permanently organized yet, no officers having been appointed.

Mr. Remsburg's subjects were "The Sabbath," "Thomas Paine," and "The Church." In the first he showed the absurdities of our sacred or God-appointed day; in the second he set forth, as few are able, the noble life and the direful persecution of the should-be-honored and esteemed patriarch of liberty, Thomas Paine. In the third he showed the church in all of its deformities. We hope ere long we may be blest with Mr. Remsburg's presence again and hear the roar of the mighty bombshell and solid shot of truth hurled into the ranks of the enemy of mental liberty and the fortress of crime and cruelty that hav marked the pages of history with blood and carnage from eighteen hundred years ago down to the present time. Remsburg for ever!

Yours, T. S. DAVIS.

A GOOD LEAGUE IN PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 16, 283

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to inform you that our League was duly instituted on the 2d of this month, when our permanent officers were duly elected for the present year. The following are the officers elected: President, Francis M. Fish; Vice-Presidents, William F. Porter and William Bechtel; Secretary, George Longford; Treasurer, John Simmons; and five trustees. We hav also formulated and adopted a constitution and by-laws, a copy of which I herewith inclose. As you will see by our by-laws, we hav two Sundays in each month devoted to lectures by our local celebrities or some of our noted lecturers. The other two Sundays of each month are devoted to debates on the questions of the hour, Sunday afternoon being on secular subjects and evenings to religious subjects, and lively times we often hav. Our subjects at present are, afternoons, "Are Trades Unions a Benefit to Workingmen?" which causes some lively discussion on both sides. Evening subject, "Materialism, What Does it Teach?"

I am happy to say that, considering the conservativ indifference of the Liberals of this staid old Quaker city, we hav a fair attendance, our present number of regular paying members being thirty-five, which are gradually increasing as the cool weather sets in. Thanks to Brother Leland for his timely visit to our city and assisting to rouse some of our folks from their lethargy and indifference.

Our first lecture this season was given by that efficient and logical reasoner, J. E. Remsburg, who kindly offered to deliver a lecture before our League free. He came, we heard, and were more than satisfied.

He is all that can be desired; calm, grand, and convincing. His lecture on "Paine, the Freethought Apostle," is the best I hav ever listened to, especially that portion of the lecture on Paine and the Ten Commandments. Liberals, it you want a lecturer worthy of his hire, don't miss J. E. Remsburg.

We shall endeavor to hav some of our other noted lecturers to visit us during the winter. Our book stand is supplied with a great variety of Liberal books, tracts, and papers, and we look forward to and anticipate an enjoyable feast of reason and good sense the coming winter months.

Yours, "PORTER."

BURTON, Sept. 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I heard of a case recently (but don't remember where it occurred) where the testimony of a good citizen was excluded on the grounds that he didn't believe in holy writ, and that he doubted inspiration, or that God had any hand in making the Bible, the book that is looked upon as sacred, which witnesses are sworn by. Now this may be in accordance with our statutes, and sure to be taken advantage of by Christians to keep down opposition to their hobby. I think it high time, since Liberals are so fast increasing in numbers, that our laws were amended to meet this objectionable and foolish point, suitable enough in days of old, when superstition was rife and our grandmothers were burnt for witches. If a man was clearly posted, I should doubt the reliability of his oath if he believed in the religious dogmas, or professed to, because there is much direct, and a great deal indirect, proof of its falseness, and no proof at all of its truthfulness except hearsay. I would just as soon accept proof that some one said he heard that some one else said somebody dreamt so and so, and knew the parties were truthful; for the old Christian fathers surely maintained a poor character for veracity; hence a man would perjure himself when acknowledging belief therein. Truly yours, H. B. JONES.

[Mr. Jones has hit the right chord. Amending these unjust laws is the work the League should immediately take in hand. THE TRUTH SEEKER has been advocating it for years, and there is no doubt of its being accomplished in time. It can be hastened by increasing the number of Freethinkers in the country, which can best be done by increasing the number of readers of Freethought journals. Circulate Liberal papers in every community. It would do much good to get up a club of trial subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER in every town.—ED. T. S.]

PORTLAND, OREGON, Sept. 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Beecher has been among us, and has said some sensible things. To the old fanatics of religion and dogma he has said many shocking things. Our Portland ministers are "answering him" from the pulpit and in the press about as unsuccessfully as your Eastern ministers answer Colonel Ingersoll. No two of them agree, but all argue that Mr. Beecher is fast demolishing theology. Few here had heard him before, and none was prepared to hear his candid opinions of Christianity.

Since I heard him a year ago he has changed for the better, and has even become more frank in asserting the ridiculous phases of the church and its teaching. I must not, however, omit to say that Beecher's good points are simply those already familiar to Eastern audiences from Colonel Ingersoll's lectures. Beecher is, perhaps unconsciously, becoming Ingersollian in his theology, but has not the genius to wield the lance of ridicule as does the great orator, Ingersoll.

In Liberalism and advanced thought the people of Oregon are forty years behind Beecher's Brooklyn congregation, and their puny preachers are laboring diligently to keep them there. I do not find a man of ability, or even of ordinary capacity, behind the pulpit. Their mediocrity, however, does not prevent them from the usual petty quarrels and disgraceful scandals. In Forest Grove, a suburban village, one minister has accused another of adultery. It now appears that the deacon of the same church, a man worthy of the Inquisition and the father of some dozen children, is charged with the same crime. The woman in the case is also foremost in the good little church, and a red-headed, rattle-headed teacher of the Sunday-school is a prominent Christian figure in the mess. A lawsuit ensues with charges of adultery and scandal marshaled on either side. And two ministers of good standing, but of the usual circumscribed caliber, are the stars in this holy war.

Besides the ubiquitous minister and the dangerous deacon, we hav still living in this country a dying army of missionaries. These itinerant beggars came across the plains in an early day, and, unwilling to do anything that might improve the country and themselvs, they hav lived on the people, and now claim the respect and consideration of the state for having "civilized the people." The poor Indian is well acquainted with these "civilizers," and the old pioneer has no encomiums to offer on their Christianizing influence and on their general utility. They are as useless as they are harmless. They had no object in coming here, and they accomplished no end. They will die as they hav lived, "unwept, unhonored, and unknown."

THE TRUTH SEEKER has readers here and will hav more. The youth desire the truth. The fallacy of Christianity and the hypocrisy of the pulpit are too evident too escape the young American. Many old puritans will die in the illusion, but no man of brains who will trust himself to reason can be held by the faith and ignorance of the church. H. H.

ANOTHER LIBERAL GONE.

MR. EDITOR: Nathan Beard, the subject of this imperfectly and hastily written sketch, was born in Guilford county, N. C, on the first day of April, 1810, and died at his adopted home in Henry county, Ind., on Thursday evening, Sept. 13th, just as the last lingering rays of golden sunlight were fading from the distant hills. He calmly and peacefully entered the valley of the shadow with full consciousness of eternal rest.

He was brought up by Quaker parents, and was taught in early life all tenets of their peculiar faith; but he was ever a doubter of some of the most prominent features of their doctrin, and was always a full believer in the universal salvation of the whole human race. He first accepted Universalism, which embodied the idea of a grander and better life, but as he continued his investigations over more extended fields of thought he became fully stereotyped to Materialistic views, and remained firm in that faith up to his last expiring moments.

He read Paine, Hume, Voltaire, Comte, and all the works of the most prominent Liberals of a past age, and always contended that from their inexhaustible fountain of wisdom he learned the religion of humanity, and to believe in the universal brotherhood of man. He was conversant with every system of moral philosophy that modern scientists hav given to the world, and was led to conclude that to their valued teachings alone humanity is indebted for its liberation from the yoke of mental slavery, and that there was nothing for man but what was obtainable in this life. He worshiped no god outside of nature, believed in no creativ power, and fully accepted the theory that the innumerable worlds that whirl through space with ever enchanting beauty, are governed by immutable laws.

He loved the touching and pathetic eloquence of Ingersoll, the stern and resistless logic of Bennett, and the kind, motherly teachings of Mrs. Slenker. It may truly be said he lived an unselfish life. But he lived chiefly to promote the happiness and general welfare of his fellow-man. He was ever found on the side of truth, justice, and right, his heart ever open to pity, and his generous hand ever willing to giv. The poor and destitute always found in his hospitable home an asylum of comfort and rest. The afflicted and unfortunate never appealed to him in vain. He has gone to his grave; but from his heroic, trusting, and manly life we hav learned a lesson imperishable. He has left a monument more lasting than carved granit; he has left a name that will glitter in letters of gold on the walls of memory, and, like the diamond stars, continue to increase in brightness with the coming years. It may truly and justly be said:

"Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And e'en his failings leaned to virtue's side;
But in his duty, prompt at every call,
He watched and wept, he hoped and felt for all;
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt its new fledged offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter lives, and led the way."

W. H. BEARD.

Iniquitous Doctrin.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I want to call your attention to an important scrap from the Christian Advocate of Sept. 6, 1883, as expressing the great comforts of a belief in the dogmas of the Christian religion. It will be interesting to readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in that they are not tormented with any such foreboding nonsense. Here it is:

"COMFORT FOR US AS WELL AS FOR THE WRITER."

"EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: Your article in the last Advocate about the "Sin Against the Holy Ghost" I read with fear and trembling. I hav been sorely troubled these thirty years about that sin. The logic expressed in your article appears probably correct, and the reading of it has greatly revived my sad heart and spirit. Heaven above knows that, with the absolute certainty of your article being correct, and if I were the possessor of one million dollars in bank deposits I would with gratitude send it to you as a thank offering in behalf of the good cause. I will make no promises hastily, but heaven knows my heart. Yours, with spirit humbled to the dust, A SUBSCRIBER.

"Aug. 17th."

A religion that can throw so dark a pall over the spirit of one of its honest believers about something which the wisest theologian knows nothing about, and which can torment a man for thirty years in "fear and trembling," is certainly not a very desirable thing to be cursed with, especially if to be relieved from its obligations a million of dollars would be cheerfully paid. The prospects are that the Rev. Dr. Buckley may be the recipient of some hard cash for the writing of that article, which seems to hav touched the man in a tender place. Oh, for the enjoyment of such a consoling faith! Well might this man exclaim in the touching language of Dr. Young:

"Father of mercies, why from silent earth
Didst thou awake and curse me into birth?
Tear me from quiet, ravish me from night,
To make a thankless present of thy light?
Push into being a reverse of thee,
And animate a clod with misery?"

The man's mental state is but a reflection of hundreds and thousands within the iron grasp of dogmatism. It is a great pity that his address is not given so that THE TRUTH SEEKER might be mailed to him to help knock the scales from his blinded vision.

Wilkesbarre, Pa. J. R. PERRY.

A Bad Churchman.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

"Yes, I has giben up my bench in de church," said a colored brother. "I kaint 'ford ter b'long ter a congregation dat employs sich a thief ob a preacher. Ise done wid him, an' I doan' 'low him ter speak ter none ob my fam'ly."

"Your preacher is a bad man, I suppose?"

"Wall, I reckon he is. Dat man ain't hones'."

"Hav you proof of his dishonesty?"

"Wall, I reckon I has. Tuther night I went down ter de hen-house, habin' hearn a mighty flutterin' 'mong de chickens, an' who should I fin' dar but der preacher a he'ppin hisse'f ter de chickens. Dat's why I says he ain' hones'. In fack, sah, Ise almos' 'vinced dat dar's suthin' wrong wid de man."

"About what time was it when you went to the hen-house?"

"'Bout three o'clock in de mornin' sah."

"And you found the minister there?"

"Yes, sah; foun' him liftin' down de chickens, an' dat's why I'se foun' fault wid de church."

"Does the hen-house belong to you?"

"No, sah; it b'longs ter Mr. Jackson."

"Well, what were you doing there?"

"Huh?"

"I say what business did you hav at the hen-house at that early hour?"

"What business I had? Why, sah, I—why, sah, I heard de chickens scufflin' an' went dar. I didn't want none ob de chickens, sah. I'se got all de chickens I wants. I happened ter be outen bed at de time."

"What work are you engaged in?"

"Huh?"

"I say what's your business?"

"I hab been a preacher."

"Why did you happen to be out of bed at 3 o'clock?"

"I got up ter 'gage in arly pra'r, sah. De pra'r ob de arly riser is de soones' answered."

"If you wanted to pray what made you go to the hen-house?"

"Huh?"

"You heard what I said."

"Well, I went dar ter see dat de chickens wuz all right."

"And you found the preacher there?"

"Yes, sah."

"What did you say to him?"

"Huh?"

"You know very well what I asked."

"What did I say ter him? Why, sah, I tole him ter turn loose de dominecker hen. Dat's what I said."

"Why did you want him to turn loose the hen?"

"Huh?"

"You know what I said."

"I wanted the hen myse'f, sah."

"Then you are as much a thief as he is."

"No, I ain't, case he don't b'long to de same church. Ise a Mefrodist, I is. Dat man is a Baptist. Anyhow it gin me sich a disgust dat I quit de church. Dat's surficient. Ise a gwine ter try some udder religion, 'case all dat I has tried is dishones'. Wheneber I fin's a church dat'll keep me from stealin', dat's mine. Up ter dis time I ain't foun' it. I ain't got no confidence in a nigger, nohow."

Two Authors Exchange Books, and One Grows Poetic.

From the Modesto, Cal., Daily Stravbuck.

[Some time ago Col. John R. Kelso, of this place, sent copies of his book to Mr. Francis D. Lacy, of Nirvana, Michigan, and on the 30th inst. received the following letter:

BROTHER KELSO:

Your books of keen, sarcastic wit,
I scan with pure delight,
And note how well the garments fit
Salvation's armor bright.
The theme is old, yet newly hurled,
And with terrific force;
With colors bright and flag unfurled,
Goes forth the brave war-horse.

The enemy is vanquished now,
The field of battle won;
As weeds before the sickle bow
The foe is leveled down.
The canvas which concealed the hell
In tatters has been flung,
And o'er the ground mild zephyrs dwell,
And joyful songs are sung.

Go on, good brother, freedom's cause
Is worthy of our steel.
We'll firmly stand by nature's laws,
But never blindly kneel.
Gladly thy bold heroic hand
I zealously would grasp,
And strengthen this fraternal band,
As with an iron clasp.

In exchange for your works I send
The traces of my mind—
My willing hand I freely lend,
To cure and lead the blind.
And may the world in wisdom grow,
And sages all unite,
To banish superstition's woe,
And battle for the right.

FRANCIS D. LACY.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

Poetry.

To Rev. Dr. ——, Portland, Maine.

IN RESPONSE TO ONE OF HIS SERMONS.

O learned and gifted Dr. Blank,
Don't hide your meaning—please be frank;
Say plainly what you mean:
That guilt is ours for what was done
Six thousand years ere we were born,
Or e'er for us had shone the sun,
Or we the light had seen.

You on this false foundation place
The doctrin that the human race
Are lost and ruined, all;
That God in wrath the race has doomed
Forevermore to be consumed,
In anguish, in his hell entombed,
Because of Adam's fall.

He who believes this doctrin must
In truth believe his God unjust,
The guiltless to chastise.
Of all the fiends our race hav cursed,
This doctrin makes our God the worst;
In cruelty it ranks him first,
Unlovely and unwise.

This great, this horrible untruth
In your fine speech sounds less uncouth
Than told in meaner phrase.
Its nature ever is the same,
Alike blasphemes our maker's name,
And to proclaim it is a shame,
In these enlightened days.

You say we may be saved by grace;
That one has suffered in our place;
That we on him must trust.
Could we on this rely, 'tis plain
The first great wrong would still remain,
And he who heaven failed to gain,
While suffering in that hell of pain,
Could truly of his God complain,
As cruel and unjust.

Those who the gospel never heard,
Or ever read the sacred word,
This truth how could they know?
How could two-thirds the human race,
Whom providence has deigned to place
In heathen lands, receive this grace,
And shun that hell of woe?

Say you that these will be excused,
Because to them has been refused
The knowledge of this grace?
If only those who hav this light
May suffer in that hellish night,
We well could wish God's wisdom might
Hav left us all in darkness quite,
So few will shun that awful blight
That menaces our race.

But, doctor, is this doctrin sound?
Does it not right and wrong confound?
Is this our maker's will?
Though one another's debt may share,
Another's guilt one cannot bear.
Chastise the just, the guilty spare,
Are they not guilty still?

This doctrin is of heathen birth,
And had been long believed on earth
Ere Jesus trod this path.
The sacrifice of one or more,
Who thus the sins of others bore,
Was practiced in the world before
By heathen nations, to implore
The irate gods they did adore
To spare them in their wrath.

Can we who think such doctrin true,
Condemn the Carthaginians, who
To Saturn burnt their sons?
Behold their sacred flames arise,
In midst of which the victim dies;
And babes are made a sacrifice,
By mothers brought with tearless eyes,
While drums are beat to drown the cries
Of these poor little ones.

Could God forgiv one erring brother
More easily, because another
Had suffered in his place?
Could you this shameful doctrin read,
Only within some heathen creed,
You'd think it horrible indeed,
And that it plainly showed the need,
Of sending messengers with speed
To teach them gospel grace.

Now, doctor, view this world of man,
And note the working of this plan,
How few are in the right;
Of all the inhabitants of earth,
Two-thirds we find of pagan birth;
Are their souls of too little worth,
For God to giv them light?

One-eighth the race Allah obey,
In lands where Christians once held sway,
Although that sway was brief;*
Of those called Christians, as we speak,
Three-fourths are Catholic or Greek,
On whom God will his vengeance wreak
For errors of belief.

Of Protestants not one in ten
Is found to hav been "born again,"
And "justified by grace;"
And can this be the plan divine,
The best God's wisdom could design,
To save from punishment condign,
That to perdition can consign
Of every hundred ninety-nine
Of our poor human race?

No, doctor, no! 'tis not God's plan,
Thus to destroy his creature man,
The child of his creation.
Man dwells not in such state forlorn;
Such doctrin merits only scorn,
Of human superstition born,
A great hallucination.

Our maker's wisdom we impeach,
Whenever we the doctrin teach
That man is wholly vile.
Our qualities of heart and mind,
Are what our God himself designed,
And such as he can bear to find,
And on his children smile.

Farewell the darkness of the past,
The light has dawned on earth at last,
The light of Nature's day.
Come from that superstitious night,
Where you hav only candle light,
And let the sun of Nature bright,
Illuminate your way.

W. R. DYER.

* Christianity, which had received a tremendous impulse by the slow conversion of the Roman Emperor Constantine, between 306 and 337, A.D., spread rapidly, until at the commencement of the seventh century, it was very nearly coextensiv with the Roman empire, with the five great centers of ecclesiastical authority—Constantinople, Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, and Rome. Antioch and Alexandria were subdued by the Mohammedans about 638, A.D.; Carthage near the beginning of the seventh century, and Constantinople about the middle of the fifteenth by the same power.

Take Away the Cross of Christ.

From the New York Truth.

The winter is coming, the cold and cruel winter. In a few short weeks in 10,000 wretched homes in this very city, men women, and little children will shiver and weep because coal is dear and wages are low.

Within three days' sail of New York lie millions of tons of Nova Scotia coal, worth at the mines $1.25. This coal could be landed and sold in New York at a profit at $2 50. It is a coal that throws out a great and an immediate heat, requiring little kindling. Why are the people deprived of this boon of nature so lavishly placed at their feet?

Next Sabbath the church bells will ring out on the startled morning air. Thousands decked in their best will wend their way to the chapels erected to the one, the living God. In the pulpits will stand the anointed, the elect of Israel. "God is good, Amen and amen."

We are a Christian people; our rulers are Christian and devout; it is going to cost $50,000 to raise the steeple on one Broadway church; some of our preachers are paid $25,000 a year; but ten days ago I went to church at San Rafael (a fashionable watering place near San Francisco), and the contribution box for the "benighted heathen" could not be passed round because, actually, there was not a man in the church besides the minister and myself.

Drive in your carriages through the streets of New York, capitalists and monopolists! Dine and wine, ye who make men shiver and women weep! Wax fat and sleek and prosper, while the cheek of innocent childhood and helpless babyhood pales and plaintiv voices cry for bread; but take away from the sight of desperate men the cross of the Christ you profess to worship. Let there be no more mocking of their woe. Gold is God, who requires no temple, no incense, no paid prelates, no altars of marble, no church-bell pealing—for the great, the good, the ruler and ruled worship without persuasion, and the altar fires are fed with human hearts and woman's honor and all that is noble in man.

F. H. B.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

House Wanted.

Wanted, a well-built, comfortable country house, and a few acres of land in New York State, in elevated, dry, and healthy district, free from malaria. The house must be in excellent sanitary condition, with Southern aspect; water pure and abundant—own spring preferred; convenient to station and post-office. Wanted to hire for one year with privilege of purchasing. In answering please state full particulars. Addres "W. K. D.," care of this office. 2t39

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 15 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life:
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Rome, Not Bethlehem, the Birthplace of Jesus.
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

Who Wrote the New Testament?
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

BOWLES PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 20 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

WETTSTEIN'S JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence;" "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,
Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT STREET, and

286 FULTON STREET,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

WILLIAM WILSON'S ELECTRO-CHEMICO VAPORIZER.

THE CULMINATION OF OPTICAL PHYSICS DEMONSTRATED IN "ACTINA."

"ACTINA,"

THE GREAT EYE-RESTORER.

"Actina has an instantaneous action on the various and mysteriously complicated organs of vision, the nerves, the blood vessels, the muscular coats and complex membranes which make up that marvelous mechanism of nature, the eye. Whether in the human being, the insect, or brute, all diseases of the eye result from an irregularity of the secretions. This may be brought about in a variety of ways—overwork, anxiety, breathing impure atmosphere, straining the eyes over intricate mechanism, etc., etc.; while hundreds of thousands hav ruined their sight by the use of powerful drugs taken with a view of curing other forms of disease. But all these cases can be met successfully by the regular use of "Actina."

"Actina" will relieve colds in the head, inflammation in the eyes, headache, catarrh, neuralgia, sore eyelids, and humors of all kinds.

☞NOTE.—"Actina" is not a medicin or lotion, but a self-generating vapor, easily applied at all hours, times, and places, can be carried in the pocket, and used by any member of the family with perfect safety, from infancy to old age.

TRIAL FREE OF CHARGE.

By calling at our several stores you may try the remedy, free of charge; but be particular not to use any vaporizer unless it bears the signature of William Wilson, who will state positivly if relief and cure be possible.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN.

W. WILSON, President.
D. J. COTTER, Secretary.

[All checks, post-office order, and drafts payable to the Anglo-American Electric Association.]

CAUTION:

Beware of cheap imitations of our goods. Read your back copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four years, and note our thousands of testimonials.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

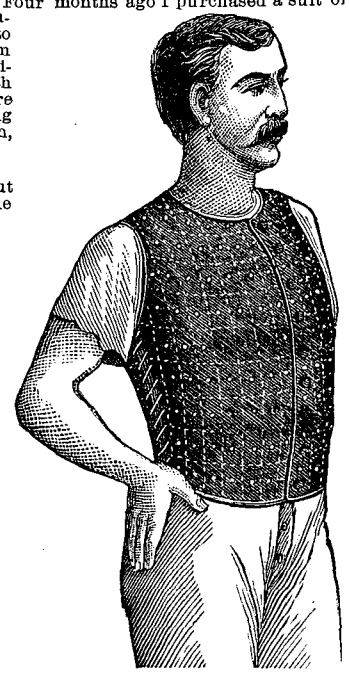
Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:
Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.
CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.



Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.
SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:
OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.
And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,
So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.
With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00
Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

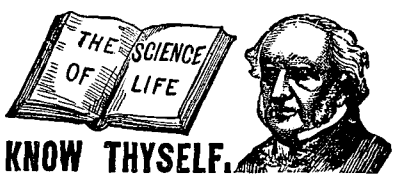
Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

☞ Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,



Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"
Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y38 by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

RUPTURES CURED

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

THE gods do not speak; they are as dumb as the rocks, they are as speechless as the grave. With nature it is not so; her language is always clear, her representations are always true; she never pretends to what is false, she never misleads. To know her is to know the truth, and to study her is to be wise.—D. M. Bennett.

THERE is not an accepted leader of our present orthodoxy whom Calvin would not burn, if he were here, much quicker than he burnt Servetus, and with far greater relish. Only if Calwin were now alive, and as much in advance of this time as he was in advance of his own, as a critic if not as a theologian, he would be a radical of the radicals. The same movement of thought which has produced rational religion as its ultimate fruit has, at the same time, made the prevailing creeds of Christendom a hundred times more rational, genial, human, than they were a hundred years ago.—Chadwick's Rational Religion.

IF different religions be professed in the same country, and the minds of men remain unfettered and unawed by intimidation of law, that religion which is founded in maxims of reason and credibility will gradually gain over the other to it. I do not mean that men will formally renounce their ancient religion, but that they will adopt into it the more rational doctrins, the improvements and discoveries of the neighboring sects, by which means the worse religion, without the ceremony of a reformation, will insensibly assimilate itself to the better. If popery, for instance, and Protestantism were permitted to dwell quietly together, papists might not become Protestants (for the name is commonly the last thing that is changed), but they would become more enlightened and informed; they would, by little and little, incorporate into the creed many of the tenets of Protestantism, as well as imbibe a portion of its spirit and moderation.—Paley.

EPICURUS says, In my sickness my conversation was not about my bodily sufferings, nor, says he, did I talk on such subjects to those who visited me; but I continued to discourse on the nature of things as before, keeping to this main point, how the mind, while participating in such movements as go on in the poor flesh, shall be free from perturbations and maintain its proper good. Nor did I, he says, giv the physicians an opportunity of putting on solemn looks, as if they were doing something great, but my life went on well and happily. Do thou, then, the same that he did both in sickness, if thou art sick, and in any other circumstances; for never to desert philosophy in any events that may befall us, nor to hold trifling talk with an ignorant man or with one unacquainted with nature, is a principle of all schools of philosophy; but to be intent only on that which thou art now doing, and on the instrument by which thou doest it.—M. A. Antoninus.

MOST schools of thought agree that the existence of God is not demonstrable; many of our deepest thinkers reject altogether the orthodox and semi-orthodox idea of God. Men and women who hav mental and moral courage enough to face this gravest of all questions, find themselvs compelled to renounce, one by one, all the notions of a deity which they ever held. They see that the attributes ascribed to him by Christian and devout Theist are but magnified human attributes, the gigantic mist and shadow formed by the human figure. They are forced to allow the will, personality, intelligence consciousness are nothing but human imperfections and limitations, which, projected into boundless space and dignified by the title of infinit, are bound up together into one ideal heroic figure, and baptized with the name of God.—Annie Besant's True Basis of Morality.

PRAY God all day long—add fasting to your prayer, if you like, and let all your fellow-Christians add their prayers and fasting to yours—in order that an eclipse shall come a week earlier: do you suppose you will be heard? Yet the precise date of an eclipse is not more peremptorily fixed by the laws of nature than is the precise issue of your daughter's fever. You do not venture to doubt speculativly this fundamental doctrin of science; in our various scientific conversations, my friend, you hav always admitted it. But, like a true Englishman, you take refuge in an illogical compromise. You assume one doctrin when you study science, and another, its direct contradictory, when your child falls ill. And yet I am paying you too high a compliment, for you do not profess that your prayer to God is reasonable, or can possibly be efficacious; your only defense is that your reason is mastered and overborne by the combined effect of your religious and your parental emotion. As though you could please God—if, indeed, there be a personal God at all—by acting in a manner which your reason condemns.—Dr. Ward's Science, Prayer, Free Will, and Miracles.

AS to the account of Christ being seen by more than five hundred at once, it is Paul only who says it, and not the five hundred who say it for themselvs. It is, therefore, the testimony of but one man, who did not, according to the same account, believe a word of the matter himself, at the time it is said to hav happened. His evidence (1 Corinthians xv) is like that of a man who comes into a court of justice to swear that which he had sworn before is false. A man may often see reason to change, and he has, too, always the right to change his opinions, but this liberty does not extend to matters of fact.—Paine's Age of Reason.

"LAY me quietly in the earth, place a sun-dial over my grave, and let me be forgotten." Such were the last words of the noble Howard, but he will not be forgotten as long as the memory of man lasts. He was the benefactor of the most miserable of men. He thought nothing of himself, but only of those who without him would hav been friendless and unhelped. In his own time he achieved a remarkable degree of success. But his influence did not die with him, for it has continued to influence not only the legislation of England, but of all civilized nations, down to the present time.—Dr. Sam Smiles's Duty.

HE who is the most slow in making a promis is the most faithful in the performance of it.—Rousseau.

Odds and Ends.

"WE havn't forefathers in this family," said a Utah urchin, "but we've more'n four mothers."

A YOUNG lady, on being asked what business her lover was in, and not liking to say he bottled soda, answered: "He's a practicing fizzician."

"IS that gentleman a friend of yours?" asked a newly introduced lady of another at a reception. "Oh, no; he's my husband," was the reply.

DOCTORS now agree that boiled cow's milk is not good for babies, it is better raw. The doctors are right; a raw cow givs better milk than a boiled one.

"WHAT is conscience?" asked a schoolmaster of his class. "An inward monitor," replied a bright little fellow. "And what's a monitor?" "One of the ironclads."

A COUNTRY boy drank a pint of whisky, went in swimming, ate a lot of green apples, drank some ice water, went to bed, and was found dead in the morning. Too much ice water.

A YANKEE from Maine, on paying his bill at a London restaurant, was told that the sum put down didn't include the waiter. "W'aal," he roared, "I didn't eat any waiter, did I?"

A CORRESPONDENT tells of a Jersey scarecrow which not only scares off every crow that sees it, but oue crow was so frightened that he brought back the corn he had stolen two days before.

A COUNTRY girl wrote to her lover: "Now, George, don't you fale to be at the singing-school tonight." George wrote back that in the bright lexicon of youth there's no such word as "fale."

"A REVEREND IDOL" is the title of a new novel. We suppose the hero, a young clergyman, was so idolized by the congregation that they raised his salary from $350 to $375 without waiting for him to ask it. Fiction is stranger than truth.

WE know a lady who wouldn't fib for the world, but when anybody asks her about her shoes, what number she wears, she always replies, "Two." As she has two feet, she of course speaks the truth; but this shows the difference between lying and diplomacy.

TWO lovers in Milwaukee agreed to commit suicide at the same hour the other night. Next morning both were up an hour earlier than usual to look over the paper, and their disappointment and disgust at such conduct on the part of the other was too deep for utterance.

A NEW YORK church is greatly agitated over the question as to whether it is proper to receive money collected through the means of a social dance. And yet the same congregation would accept, without even as much as a blush, money willed to it by a lawyer or the grocer who got rich by sanding his sugar.—Troy Times.

A NORRISTOWN married man can heavily discount Vennor as a prognosticator. When the former starts for home at 1 o'clock in the morning he always predicts a "storm" within an hour, and never made a miss but once, and then he found his wife sound asleep when he reached home. Next morning she declared that she had been drugged.

ETHEL'S mother, writes Eli Perkins, was reading her Sabbath-school lesson to her when she came to the verse: "But when they next saw Joseph they found him in a position of great authority, power, and——" "Joseph was king, wasn't he mama?" interrupted Ethel. "No, dear, he was not king, but he was very high—next to the king." "Oh, I know, mama, he was jack—jack high!" Alas, Ethel had seen too much card-playing.

GREAT Jove, we read, made everything
From cold and sticky, lifeless clay,
And so he must, to get the earth,
Hav waded in the mud all day.
'Twas thus that, when his work was done,
He rested and his boots did scan,
And, noticing the mud thereon,
He scooped it off and made a—man.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.—Conceited Young Minister, Pretty Girl, and two students named respectivly Welsh and Townsend. Pretty Girl (who wishes to giv Young Minister a cut)—"Mr. Welsh, here is a word I would like you to pronounce for me. It is spelled bac—ka—che." Mr. Walsh (who is party to the plot)—"Nothing would delight me more than to oblige you, but I am not conversant with the modern European languages. Townsend, perhaps you can assist Miss May." (Givs Townsend a wink.) T.—"No: I lament my deplorable ignorance." Young Minister—"Ahem! Pardon me, Miss May, but I think that is a French word, is it not?" Pretty Girl.—"I don't know, sir, I am sure." Young Minister.—"Let me see. Bac—ka—che. I think the proper pronunciation must be bah—kah—sha." Pretty Girl.—"Excuse me, sir, I divided the word wrongly. It is spelt b-a-c-k-a-c-h-e. I believe that is usually pronounced backache." (Tableau.)

"AND can nothing cause you to change your decision, Mildred?" "Nothing. My will is like iron. But yesterday I was a timid, trusting girl, whose every heart beat was for you; to-day I am a woman, and the trusting heart of yesterday has turned to ice. Go!" and she stately pointed to the garden gate. "Oh, Mildred, my lost darling," cried Heneage, starting to his feet with a dull moan, "do you realize what this will drive me to?" But Mildred only muttered "go," and sternly pointed to the garden gate. Then up rose Heneage. In place of the supplicating look of entreaty there was on his face the stony glare of despair. Clinching his hands he gav her one look, and rushed wildly through the yard. But see. Only a few steps and there is a start, a shriek of mental agony; the strong arms are lifted a moment wildly in the air, and the body of Heneage Sturtevant, with a thud, falls back lifeless on the sward. The clothes line had caught him just half an inch under his chin.

BIBLE SCIENCE.—To organize and restore the Holy Communion practiced by Christ and his apostles. Also to maintain the "Perfect Law of Liberty" by showing the difference between God's Righteousness and all other notions of right and wrong. This is Masonic Christianity, and intended only for zealous persons tired of talk and ready for business. Return papers, 10 cents.
Address, "REWARD,"
3t37 710 Broadway, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.
With a steel plate engraving of the anthor in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cnts.
BY D. M. BENNETT,
Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, anthor of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.
Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.
Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great anthor were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a
Freethinker's History of the World.
This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."
A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.
PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Y hweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.
From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."
D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.
CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.
The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.
Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.
For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.
A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.
In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."
Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.
For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 40. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, October 6, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

PRIESTS and religious teachers hav been expelled from 136 schools in Paris during the last three years.

WARRANTS were issued last week for the arrest of a dozen bakers in this city who had committed the crime of mixing dough on Sunday.

OUR old friend, Col. H. S. Olcott, the Hierophant of the Theosophists, has set up in India as a mesmeric healer, and has great success, especially with paralytics, epileptics, and hysteriacs.—Sun.

THE Rev. W. H. Meyers, of Pottsville, Pa., eloped last week with the young wife of Ralph Price, a paper-hanger of tbat place. Mr. Price leaves behind her two children and a note saying that she loves the preacher best

THREE hundred women voted at the school election in Binghamton last week. The first time they had the privilege of voting was three years ago, when they polled only forty-seven votes. The election was orderly. The voting of women has ceased to attract attention.

A MASSACHUSETTS cattle trainer arrived at the New England fair with two trick steers named "Ben Butler" and "Bob Ingersoll;" the Worcester Spy testifies that they do some marvelous acts, and the Boston Post comments that "if they don't they belie their names."

M. A. BALDWIN, president of the New Orleans National Bank, has brought suit against Postmaster-General Gresham, who interfered with the bank correspondence because it receives money for a lottery. The object of the suit is to establish the fact that the postmaster-genera has no right to meddle with the legitimate business of a banking institution or to attaint its correspondence.

BOSTON is reminded by the London Times that she is not the only city to suffer a downfall from intellectual supremacy. Edinburgh has been deposed from a rank more exalted. Weimar has sunk to be a petty residence town, Geneva has gone into trade and politics, Florence is no longer a literary center, and Oxford and Cambridge retain no dictatorship in letters. New York has "merely taken precedence of Boston."

IF anyone has ever seen a Methodist conference, says the American Nonconformist, and has watched their scheming, and buttonholing, and side-whispering, and knots of preachers in the corners, if they did not know that they were preachers, they never would suspect it was anything but a political gathering. In fact, we hav known more disreputable schemes concocted in a Methodist annual conference than we ever saw in a political convention.

THE Presbyterian and Methodist clergymen of Pittsburgh are massing their influence against Sunday papers and trying to induce people not to read them. This quickens the curiosity of the people to examin the Sunday papers and see what they are like. Having examined them, they generally make a business of reading them regularly. In most Pittsburgh families, as elsewhere, Sunday papers are regarded quite as much of a necessity as Sunday milk or Sunday bread.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT, home secretary of England, has just given another proof that he can be merciful to crime and cruel to opinion. He has "remitted three years" out of five years of penal servitude, to which a Dr. Story was sentenced in the winter of 1881 for arson with intent to defraud. In this case he did not sneeringly say, as to Mr. P. A. Taylor, M. P., that it was not his business to interfere with sentences; nor did he complain that he should be urged to interfere before half the sentence was expired. It is an impertinence to ask for the release of a heretic, who has been in prison for five months out of a sentence of nine, but Sir William rushes to open the prison doors for a criminal who has served less than two years out of a sentence of five. The Home Secretary's leniency to crime stands in instructiv contrast with his brutality and untruthfulness toward non-criminals, convicted of heresy under a cruel law, and sentenced by a vindictiv and persecuting judge.

THE Presbyterian Banner, which is one of the sharpest of all papers in carrying on religious controversies, says that "the charity that 'believeth all things' is entirely consistent with obedience to the precept, 'Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him.'" Armed with such a text as this, a pious sheet can wield the battle-ax against its neighbors in as lively a manner as it pleases. Of the "all things" which it charitably "believeth," the chief is that it is in the right and its neighbor in the wrong. In this belief it adheres with saintly perseverance.

GOV. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER has written to a Sacramento paper that he has regretted to learn that there has been doubt in California as to his position on the land question, and he announces his platform as follows: "I regard the holding of lands in large quantities in this country as one of our great future dangers, such holding having in all ages of the world proved disastrous to the well-being of the people, and we hav no right to believe that this country would be an exception, and I hope that activ measures may be taken to hav such holdings divided, and to see to it that no more shall be established."

MR. BRADLAUGH'S earnest plea for the Jews at the Amsterdam Conference, says Mrs. Besant, was a beautiful proof of the moral superiority of Atheism over religion. The Jewish members of the House of Commons hav robbed him of his civil rights, and hav uttered against him the foulest lies. His Atheism, however, taught him that it was not just to be prejudiced against a nation because of the evil wrought by prominent representativs of that nation; and when the resolution of protest was in danger of being weakened by the introduction or limiting words, his voice rang out to demand for Jews the liberty of conscience and equality before the law denied to him by Jews at home.

A SEVERE criticism on the habits of certain thelogical students is uttered by one of the most conservativ of the religious papers. It is well known that in most theological seminaries the students are allowed to practice on vacant congregations so as to try their own preaching gifts and the listening ability of the hearers. It seems that "in many instances the students would go on the late train on Saturday evening, thus compelling those who met them at the station to travel after night, and frequently it would be midnight before they got ready to retire. Then some of those same students would return to the city on the train on Sabbath afternoon. In other instances they came from the city on Sabbath morning, preached, then hurried back, not even staying for Sabbath-school, for fear they would miss the train. Can they plead that their conduct is prompted by the 'works of necessity and of mercy!'" The argument which follows on this statement is that, as the students are guilty of setting a bad example, of encouraging Sabbath-breaking corporations, and of "stretching the Fourth Commandment," therefore the theological seminaries ought to be prayed for that the students be brought to a right state of mind.

A POLISH priest near Wilkesbarre has got himself into trouble by warning his congregation not to spend their Sundays drinking in the saloons of his parishioners. This attack on their business so irritated the saloon-keepers that they presented charges against the priest, which were dismissed by the bishop, and the saloon-keepers and their customers thereupon shut the priest out of his own church, or rather out of the bishop's church. The saloon-keepers can refrain from paying the priest his salary, but then the priest can excommunicate them, although perhaps the saloon-keepers may be so hardened as not to mind the excommunication. The bishop is reported to be "much displeased over the scandal," and is very possibly disgusted with the zeal of the priest in interfering with the Sunday amusements of the laity. What a tempest would be raised in this city if the priests were to begin a crusade against Sunday drinking, and to warn their other parishioners to keep away from the saloons of the aldermen during the hours when the excise law commanded the aldermen to close. What a contest there would be between the spiritual arm of the church in the pulpit and its temporal arm in the Board of Aldermen. Fortunately for the peace of the church, the priests hav not thus far attempted to interfere with the livelihood of the aldermen, and no scandal has been created such as that which the bishop of Wilkesbarre deprecates in his diocese.

REVERTING to the sermon of the Stratford minister on the crime recently committed in that town, the New York Times sarcastically says: "There is another theory as to the Stratford murder which might be used to fasten the crime upon the Rev. Mr. Houghton, the New Haven preacher of the gospel according to the Police Gazette. Mr. Houghton has publicly said that in his opinion Lewis killed the girl. How is it that he ventures to be so confident unless he is in the possession of an intimate knowledge of the murder, and how could he hav such knowledge unless he was a party to the crime? Mr. Houghton did not know the murdered girl, and hence it is at least as probable that he killed her as it is that the man who was engaged to marry her killed her. It is true that Mr. Houghton has never been found guilty of selling cabbages, but as a preacher he has virtually sold sermons, and the distinction between the two is sometimes very slight. Finally, there would be no difficulty in proving that since the night of the murder Mr. Houghton has washed his hands with soap. Why did he wash them with soap unless it was in order to remove blood-stains? The more the Rev. Mr. Houghton's connection with the Stratford murder is examined the darker does his case seem. Almost any one of the arguments which hav been used to prove Lewis guilty might be used with equal force to prove Mr. Houghton guilty; and in addition to these arguments it can be said that he has made in his pulpit almost the same boast made by the leading Stratford drunkard in his cups."

A GOOD specimen of the Catholic priests is the Rev. Father Kelly, of Denver. The majority are rather more successful in hiding their sins, but there is good reason to believe they are all of the same color. Mr. Kelly is a man forty-five, well educated, and has been in the Romish ministry about fifteen years, having been successivly located in this city, Cincinnati, and smaller places in Ohio and Iowa. He was sent to Central City, Col., a few weeks ago, at which place his career as a man of God culminated. Naturally fond of liquor, he failed to withstand its encroachments upon him, and oftentimes he was found in his study or in the pulpit in a state of intoxication bordering on drunkenness. The unwholesome tidings reached the ears of the bishop at Denver. At first he received the intelligence doubtingly, but after a time the reports were so authentic there was no denying their truthfulness, and he sent for Father Kelly to come to Denver. Other charges of a still graver nature were preferred, and with evidence of Kelly's perfidy fully in hand, he was summoned before the bishop. His interview with the bishop was tempestuous, and he finally left him and took up quarters at a hotel, where he got boisterously drunk, and in his imbecility wandered among the corridors of the house, insulting the ladies whom he chanced to meet and heaping imprecations upon any of the masculin inmates who attempted to lead him back to his room. All attempts to quiet him proving unavailing, the proprietor rang for a policeman, and the disgraced priest was taken through the streets to jail, where he remained until sober.

News of the Week.

F. MAYER & Co., woolen merchants of this city, failed last week for nearly $2,000,000.

THE pool-sellers against whom Comstock recently brought indictments, still continue to ply their trade at Sheepshead driving park.

A FUND amounting to $76,000 has been raised for the defense of O'Donnell, the slayer of Carey, the Irish Invincible who turned informer.

GOV. BUTLER has been renominated by the Democrats for governor of Massachusetts. He is indorsed by the Greenbackers in convention.

ONE hundred vessels were sunk, driven ashore, or crippled by the recent hurricane on the shores of the West Indies. Fifty lives were lost.

A FULL-BLOODED negro of this city has been ordained as a Protestant Episcopal priest. He will be shipped immediately to Africa as a missionary.

THE official report of the fatalities consequent upon the recent earthquake on the island of Ischia states that 1,990 persons were killed, and 374 injured.

ANTI-JEWISH excesses are still kept up by the Christian people of Russia. Property belonging to Jews is burnt daily, and in some instances life is sacrificed.

JUDGE HOADLY, the Freethinking Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio, has returned to that state with improved health, and is taking an activ part in the canvass.

A GERMAN citizen of New Brunswick, N. J., undertook on a wager, recently, to drink three beer glasses of whisky. He accomplished the feat and died twenty minutes afterward.

THE new two-cent postage stamps commenced selling at 12 o'clock last Sunday night. The old style stamps are still good, and can be used at the new rates of letter postage.

THE Council of the Roman Catholic Province, held last week in St. Patrick's cathedral, this city, closed on Sunday. It does not appear that any business of importance was transacted.

A VESSEL from the North, which touched at San Francisco, had on board four Alaskan mummies, which are believed to be three centuries old. They were in a good state of preservation, and are intended for the Berlin Museum.

MR. CHARES E. TOWNSEND, of Locust Valley, L. I., died on Thursday, the 27th ult., aged about 80 years. Mr. Townsend was an author of considerable note, and had devoted a great deal of his life and means to the Freethought cause.

THE colossal statue of Germania was unveiled at Rudesham, Germany, on the 28th ult. Emperor William, all the German princes, and nearly 250,000 other persons were present. The statue is 110 feet high, and stands on the Niederwald, a natural elevation of 700 feet.

W. H. H. MURRAY, ex-reverend, lectured in this city last Sunday evening on "Christianity versus Theology." He repudiated most of the dogmas which he once held to as a preacher, but argued that modern thought and Christianity, minus theology, were at peace with each other. The lecture was listened to by a large audience.

THE jury in the Stratford, Conn., murder case returned a verdict last Saturday that Rose Ambler came to her death at the hands of persons unknown, but that suspicion pointed to William Lewis, the dead woman's lover, as her murderer. The Rev. Dr. Houghton, of New Haven, last Sunday defended his previous sermon on the affair, and repeated his views. Lewis has declared his intention of suing the preacher.

Communications.

D. M. Bennett, the Truth Seeker.

I did not know Mr. Bennett personally; I never grasped his hand; I never gazed upon his benignant face; I never looked into those eyes which in his migrations round our globe had with such marvelous sweep of vision enabled him to so graphically describe, and picturesquely portray, the multitudinous scenes and incidents of his grand tour.

My communings with him were through correspondence and his published writings. And yet I feel as though I knew him well. I feel as though I thoroughly comprehended him. This feeling prompts me to say that in his death the world has lost both a great and good man, and I hav lost a friend whose personality had in a measure become a necessity to me—a mental purveyor, whose sudden demise was a shock, whose unlooked for exit leaves a void hard to be filled, and which passing time increases rather than lessens. This thought urges me to write thus tardily, and reconcilement to my loss is no part of my feelings even now.

There certainly can be no higher calling than the pursuit of truth. The sun shining at midday is not a more positiv certainty than the fact that the world has for thousands of years been deluged in every department of human action, and notably so in its religions, by an ocean of untruth.

What is truth? It is the blazing jewel, the Kohinoor of reason, a gem surpassing in value a trillion of times the brightest gems of Golconda. Is not the pursuit of it the most ennobling occupation to which a human being can devote himself?

Ages sometimes must pass before the simplest truth is known and admitted. When this occurs, is not the world immensely benefited? It certainly must be so. It is a constant voyage of discovery. Truth is as eternal as matter and space. It had no beginning, and it can hav no end. The merit and the result lie in the discovery of it. America stretched her boundless domain, an integer of our planet, but unknown till the genius of a Columbus discovered a new world. Before his time it had only been, to all intents and purposes, a vain imagining, a longing of the poets, a dream of the philosophers, an Atlantis in the brain of a Plato.

For centuries the church said, "The earth is flat, and has four corners." Galileo said, "The earth is round, and moves"—the most momentous proved truth of the ages. This mighty proved fact was the "golden gate" to a vast ocean of truth, which is rolling and always will roll its surging billows over error and falsehood as they show themselvs on the sandy beach of the centuries.

We claim that this mighty truth of Galileo has been of uncounted value to the world. We also claim that every truth, no difference how infinitesimal, as it steps to the front and hides the falsity behind it, is a priceless boon to mankind, and that every discoverer and gleaner, as he brings his glittering gem of truth to the surface, with absolute certainty benefits and impels man in his onward progress and ultimate goal, the infinit domain of right and reason.

Can anything be more true than these golden words of Lord Bacon? "Yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature." What hav we to set opposit this magnificent invocation? A fact the most momentous and melancholy that can well be imagined. We hav in our land alone 70,000 men—men of education, of intelligence, of refinement, many of them of great erudition, occupying as many pulpits, who proclaim week in and week out, in season and out of season—what? "That the belief of truth is the sovereign good of human nature?" Not at all. Their learning, their "logic," and their vast influence are wielded to cramp the human intellect and befog the reason with arguments built upon the barren strand, praying and beseeching that all men should cast it off as a thing of no moment, and bathe in that wretched mud-puddle called faith! all the while upholding Jehovah, a bloody deity of the barbarous Jews; his son, Jesus Christ, a pure figment of the imagination; his mother, a goddess evolved by the Catholic church, whose character is sought to be removed from the domain of the questionable by the invention of the Holy Ghost, a sort of factotum of the trinity; and the whole of their singular jumble curiously supplemented and rounded off by his majesty the devil, invited by common consent to take charge of the fiery dominion, where thermometers are unnecessary and ice-houses a superfluity.

These appalling and unscientific untruths are the targets at which, for many years, Mr. Bennett aimed his multitudinous and quivering arrows with a success never surpassed by any champion of Freethought. Some reformers content themselvs with tiny shafts directed with childish timidity at the idols they wish to demolish. Such persons never overthrow anything. Their tendency is in the right direction, but they accomplish nothing. Mr. Bennett belonged to a different order. His every shaft was a home thrust. He aimed to demolish, and generally succeeded. His rapier cut at every point; his arrows pierced every crevice in the coat of mail of his antagonist. He piled up arguments, facts and figures, like a pyramid, and suddenly launched them like an avalanche at his surprised opponent. The number of shams and lies and supernaturalisms he has attacked and vanquished is simply prodigious. These things would be wonderful in a man of mature age who had spent his whole life from his youth up in such warfare. They are wonderful above all things, considering that they were confined within ten years of the life of a man after he was fifty-four years old.

This is a point to which we wish to invite especial attention. In this time of religious upheaval there are many who may feel that age precludes them from taking an activ part in the necessary agitation. To such the example of Mr. Bennett is both edifying and instructiv. It is indeed never too late to do good. Entering the theological arena at the age of fifty-four, without previous experience, he founds a great journal, writes thousands of pages, makes a tour of the world, and records his impressions in one of the most remarkable works ever written; passes a year in a gloomy Christian prison for opinion's sake; and dies in his harness, pen in hand, a true soldier, with his face to the foe—a sacrifice, a martyr to the invincible spirit of truth.

Considering the voluminousness of his writings, their absolute merit as literature is something marvelous. He had the faculty of making the most common things entertaining. He continually engaged and chained the attention. His writings charm the scholar and fascinate the unlettered reader. His style consists, to use the language of Swift, of "proper words in proper places." It has the energy of Cobbett and the easy flow of Franklin, with a peculiar something all his own, apparently just in the right proportion to persuade the most prejudiced, and arrest the attention of the most careless reader.

The effect of these writings on the millions who will read them in the years to come must be prodigious. His "A Truth Seeker Around the World" is of itself an epitome of all that can be said and urged against the folly of mankind in the matter of "religion." Their sophistries and lunacies are there pitted, one against the other, and made to look so childish and unreasonable that it would seem a superfluity to ever refer an earnest reader to any other work. It must be borne in mind that this great work is a sui generis. None of the great Infidels who preceded him was fortunate enough to be enabled to write from such a "coign of vantage" as was afforded by a journey around our planet. His addresses, delivered right among the millions of Hindoos, are destined to permeate many minds and produce great effects on those millions in the years to come.

Space forbids us to further enumerate the virtues and deeds of the great truth seeker. His services were gigantic in the cause of reform. He is dead; and it is proposed to honor his memory either by the erection of a memorial building or the raising of a monument, or both, if the zeal of his friends should prove equal to his exalted merit.

It is not our purpose to say a word calculated to deter any one from doing something to honor him who is dead. But it does seem as though the day of monuments was past. They strike us as being as much a relic of barbarism as the rack or the thumbscrew. Putting the dead, in their natural bodies, just as the breath left them, in a hole in the ground, to be food for the elements and worms, in some lonely or secluded spot, seems a monstrous and inhuman absurdity, unworthy a real civilization. And after this is done, the next folly is to pile up either in large or small quantities a mass of granit or marble, to be gazed at occasionally, and finally, after a few years, to crush and crumble and disappear. Think of the vast sums that hav been spent to build costly monuments to the memory of the uncounted dead! And where are they? How little real good does it do, and what a failure they are to confer an immortality! To a man who has written a great book, it looks to us like a superfluity to pile up marble to aggrandize his reputation.

In these days of printing, the cunning types that transfix the thought of a man, if the thought be worthy of retention, is a far grander mausoleum than the one composed of dull, cold marble. Glimmerings of these incongruities long ago passed through the human mind.

In the palmy days of Greece, one Atreus was a victor at the Olympic games. It was necessary to commemorate the triumph, and there were two ways of doing it. One was to erect a statue, the other to celebrate it in verse. The friends of the victor approached a poet of known reputation, and demanded the price for the article wanted. He answered, three minæ. To this they replied that they could get a statue for less money. He bade them do so, as he would sell his wares for no less. They went away, but presently returned, and after much bargaining agreed to take his verses at his own figures, and this is what they obtained for their money:

"It is not mine, with forming hand,
To bid a lifeless image stand,
Forever on its base;
But fly my verses and proclaim,
To distant lands, with deathless fame,
That Atreus conquered in the rapid race."

Here we see how wisdom is always justified of her children. The statue would centuries ago hav been dissolved to dust, but the "verses" are to be read by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER after a lapse of 2,000 years, and in "distant lands," and with "deathless fame."

But let the monument be built, and let us not fail to erect in the great city of New York a memorial building to Mr. Bennett. Let it stand as a beacon light in the cause of truth. Let it be an incentiv to others to "go and do likewise."

Let it enshrine his journal, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for ages to come. As long as man has need of help, or truth is to be disseminated, let its influence be spread abroad over the world. There is to me only one cause of regret. If this design is carried out (and it certainly ought to be), cremation has been so slow in commending itself to public approbation that Mr. Bennett's ashes can never be inurned within it, even if the memorial scheme is fully consummated.

But let all be done that can be done. The building can and ought to be erected, and that right speedily; and conspicuously in its front let there be graven in the durable marble the name of DeRobigne Mortimer Bennett, the truth seeker.

B. G. MORRISON.

Living to Love.

This world is advancing with railroad speed along the track of truth, science, and civilization. The fetters of superstition are being shattered, so that men and women may go free, improved intellectually and mechanically. But what avail unless we improve morally as well as advance intellectually?

All Liberals, whether Materialists or Spiritualists, declare they earnestly desire to hasten the time when, freed from the blighting darkness of church creeds and contentions, the true spirit of brotherly and sisterly love shall diffuse itself through the earth; when all shall do precisely unto others as they would be done by; when love and friendship shall walk hand in hand into the desolated garden of human happiness and eradicate the rank weeds of superstition, bigotry, weakness, wickedness, and misery.

But of what avail our intellectual freedom, unless while the mind expands the heart is enlarged? It is idle bombast to vaunt our advance in Liberalism, science, and freedom of thought, yet in our daily life giv evidence of retrograding in tolerance, gentleness, mercy, and love.

If the adoration of nature, and the study of her laws, do not enlarge our sympathies, elevate our aims, and prompt to greater love to our fellow-creatures; if it does not teach us to liv to love, instead of loving to liv, it fails in its great mission. While we cannot go back to darkness and error, once having been brought to the light, yet let us not dare urge or induce any to come up to us on such a bleak, barren plane.

The great father of Liberalism taught, "I believe in the equality of man, and that religious duty consists in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-beings happy."

What a misnomer to apply the name Liberal to one who manifests bitter, bigoted, fanatical intolerance toward those who differ with him! Clothe such a one in the fabric of apparent Liberalism, and his true colors will show through the gauzy texture, as plainly as the face of the blackest female African through a white vail.

None objects to a spirit of emulation between Materialists and Spiritualists as to who should prove the best and truest exponents of the great and glorious principles of true Liberalism. Let each giv his evidence, not in sharp thrusts, bitter taunts, or fierce defense of pet theories, but by a daily life of gentleness, mercy, and benevolence—living to love, cultivating that love which engenders universal sympathy and mutual good feeling; that true love which binds soul to soul, without which we are but fragments of wretchedness driven about upon the billows of discord and strife.

The sun of enlightenment may cause the tree of wisdom to be covered with blossoms, but the frosts of bigotry and selfishness fall prematurely upon them, and no fruit can be gathered therefrom.

Some of our Materialist and Spiritualist brothers of THE TRUTH SEEKER family always look at each other's little foibles through a telescope. They each think they are and really desire to be honest and impartial; and look at their own faults through the same instrument. Looking at the foibles and mistakes of others through the magnifying lens of the telescope, no wonder they are so fierce and loud in their outcry against such greatly magnified wrong. They apply the same telescope to their own faults, for they are each and all too honest to pretend they hav attained perfection—they leave such professions to Christians. But now really, looking at their own faults through the telescope even, they are so very small, so infinitesimal, that honestly it must be a captious spirit indeed that would mention them. How is this? Why, in looking at their own faults, they turned the telescope end for end, so that it diminished as much as before it magnified.

Use the telescope, and change it end for end every time, only, dear friends, let us reverse the order. Examin our own faults through the magnifying end and our opponents' through the other. That is really being Liberal, as well as professing Liberalism. That is carrying out the first great principle: "Put yourself in his place." It is doing to others as you would like they should do to you.

Let us all remember mutual forbearance and mutual love can alone secure us mutual peace, mutual happiness, mutual prosperity, and result in securing mutual victory over superstition and error.

If we thus liv to love, the dark clouds of envy and discord would be immediately dispersed, the lightning of anger would never flash, the thunders of discord would cease, the sky of hope would become clear, the sun of happiness would shine forth in all its glory, and the little soul's croak, "Stop my paper!" would be heard never more, never more.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

Force or Volition.

TO MRS. HEDDON: You are an intellectual woman. You do your own thinking. You hav outlived the myths and fables of the past which were accepted as truths simply because the Bible said so. You hav abandoned a blind faith in the traditional and supernatural, and now, in your opinion, base your belief upon fact and logic and reason.

Your last letter addressed to me in THE TRUTH SEEKER proves this my estimate of your intellectual capacity. You no doubt desire to know the truth, the whole truth, but alas! you are a—woman!

This is the principal reason, strange as it may appear, why you do not see the whole truth. Women, as a rule, are governed by their emotions, desires, prejudices, hopes, and fears, much more so than men, and your letter proves that you are no exception. Your "argument" concerning the "barrenness of Materialism," as you please to call it, proves it. Death is not desirable, therefore you believe that you will liv forever. You now enjoy life, health, youth, happiness, etc., and for this reason believe that you can enjoy these conditions in eternal bliss, pure and unalloyed, forever and ever. It is a terrible thing to die, therefore you believe that when you die you do not die. It is very aggravating to grow old, wrinkled, and gray, therefore if one die, even at the age of a hundred, you believe we shall awaken again blooming into rosy manhood or womanhood, even as at the age of twenty or thirty, and behold during 10,000,000,000,000 of billions of ages or more remain in this state of eternal youth during all eternity. Infants dying will grow in the spirit world to be like youths and maidens; old men dying will be transformed into young men, but ever after that remain in a condition of eternal statu quo. You love your children, and because "barren Materialism" says when you lose them "they are no more," you hate it and refuse to accept the solemn fact. You dearly love your husband, his kiss and affectionate embrace; and because of this enjoyment you believe that when all that which now constitutes your husband, when all that which enables him to see, hear, talk, think, walk, and to reciprocate your love; when all that which givs him outline and form, and every grain which makes him a man, is laid away six feet under the sod, and every particle mingled again with soil and plants and flowers; when, in short, his form is absolutely annihilated, you think your husband, with identical functions and capacities, will still liv in the spirit world, and meet and embrace you without this form of flesh and blood, just as affectionately as with it. You desire sunshine and flowers, and you believe sunshine and flowers are continuous in heaven. You love the beautiful summer time, and, of course, scorn the idea of snow and ice, of wind and storm, "up there." You hate rattlesnakes and love birds, and behold! you banish the former, and in happy visions hear the merry song of thousands of golden-winged songsters, who in "heaven," of course, also never die. You know cooking, washing, dressmaking, etc., to be very menial labor, and you believe that spirits are clothed in spotless robes of purest white, and that these never require the application of soap and water; that spirits never eat, and their garments are furnished them by God or other spirits, by miraculous process of materialization.

There is one thing above all others which your letter again demonstrates—that wishes and aspirations may and do furnish the secret motivs or causes for the popularity and diffusion of the spiritual belief in large proportion; but this charge of egotism and selfishness, as a factor in fashioning his belief, can never be preferred against the Materialist. His motto is, Truth, no matter where it leads!

I also was once a fervent Christian. I then thought, as you now think, that Materialism was "barren and cold," but overwhelming proofs and convictions, in spite of hopes, and desires, and "proofs," and "circles," etc., forced me to accept the truth. But further thought and fearless application to discover facts very emphatically changed my views in regard to the "coldness" and "barrenness" of my new faith, and I now love it as a priceless treasure which I would refuse to exchange for all the wealth of a Vanderbilt; and upon the facts which it teaches in regard to man's destiny, I look as the source of serenest happiness and the greatest boon vouchsafed to man. And so convinced am I of this belief and of the truths it teaches that my existence would be miserable indeed—verging on madness—if I believed my fate in the future might possibly be immortality, implying a condition of forced eternal existence whether desirable or not.

The kind decree of nature, "Thou must die," in my opinion, is infinitly more desirable and merciful than those terrible words would be, "Thou shalt never die."

(But my views upon this interesting subject I will embody in another letter.)

Now, for the sake of argument (and perhaps to shield my ignorance), I will confess that we hav not absolute knowledge concerning the nature and true relations of matter and force, but I do insist that assuming the existence of "deity" or minor individual spirits, or "will-force," back of any or all phenomena, not alone leaves the problem unexplained, but the explanation is an infinitly greater mystery added to the original problem.

Of all mysteries, none so profound, none so overwhelming, none so entirely prostrates the intellect of man, none so baffles his reason, and none leaves him intellectually so pitifully helpless as the idea of spirit. Nothing in the universe is so utterly unthinkable, undefinable, and out of reach of the senses and understanding as these much-talked-of, universally-believed-in ghosts. If real, their existence and that of the supreme ghost is indeed miraculous and supernatural.

You affirm Materialism to be "out of harmony with all the analogies of nature." Of course you did not mean that, as Materialism is the science and philosophy of nature. Unravel the most intricate meshes of the vast system of nature, fathom its most hidden mysteries, and when finally the great cosmos shall be as plain as A, B, C, to the understanding of man, this science will then, and not till then, be complete.

Materialism is not simply the philosophy and science of matter, but also of force, of the total modus operandi pervading all nature and cosmic existence. Materialism is boundless, unlimited, capable of infinit expansion, and whatever revelations and discoveries may be made in the future, the broad and vast field of this august science will embrace them all. All is the synthesis of Materialism; outside of it, nothing.

Prove and demonstrate the existence of the deity you yet worship, and Materialists will welcome this new truth as cheerfully as they would the discovery of any other important fact. It has ample and unlimited room for all truth and is ever desirous to welcome it. Prove and establish the existence of spirits—divine or human, pre-natal or post-mortem—and it will joyfully reach forth its hands to welcome them within its portals. It has room for all facts, all truths. Because a deity proven, a God seen, a supreme spirit made clear to our senses, would instantly by such process lose their supernatural attributes, descend from their mystic throne of immateriality, and forthwith assume the outline and form of natural beings; and then, of course, be entitled to their respectiv places of power in the great arcana of nature. And no Materialist would then ignore or deny them.

Individual human spirits, seen, understood, tangible, real, and "demonstrable in court," also would instantly be welcomed by us as duly entitled to recognition as all other entities, beings, or phenomena. No one would deny them. Materialism welcomes all; because all existence is Materialism.

It is unlike all other isms, sciences, or philosophies. It alone embraces within itself all minor isms in grand integration—one stupendous, glorious Universology.

Submitting Spiritism to like analogies of logic and reason as you do Materialism, what are its comparativ merits and degree of reasonableness?

On the one hand we hav an absolutely unthinkable, incomprehensible God to account for (whose origin and existence is based solely upon a book which you and all other thoughtful minds hav consigned to realms of fiction long ago), but who is represented as infinitly greater than man, but who came from—nothing! On the other hand, we hav the harmony and beauty of nature, culminating in the production of man to account for; but here we hav an infinit, eternal aggregation of subtle matter and force to seek a solution from. On the one hand we hav the overwhelming mystery, infinitly more profound and startling than all else—God—to account for, with not an inch of ground to stand upon, a single particle of matter to make "him" out of. On the other hand we hav man, and a now generally accepted theory which logically demonstrates that he has developed from lower animal organism; this leading us to that comparativly far lesser problem—the origin of the primary germ, or the evolution of inorganic into organic matter or forms.

Here is God—here is man. If the latter necessitates a creator and designer, then the former, being by far the more wonderful creature, of course necessitates a creator also.

If because, as yet, we do not know the precise method of nature in producing man, is a logical reason why we should deny Materialism, parity of reasoning would most emphatically force us to deny God, because we do not know his origin!

If matter and force during an eternity cannot evolve man, surely the nothing existing prior to God could never hav evolved God.

And if visible man necessitates a creator, like logic and reason imperativly demand for an actual real God a cause or creator also.

But if our reason is contented by conceding that a God of whom we know absolutely nothing may be eternal and exist uncaused, is it not far more reasonable to concede that the universe, which is a fact to our senses and which at no time in the eternity of the past could possibly hav not existed, is eternal and contains within itself "the promis and potencies of all life?"

But if we concede God's self-existence on account of his invisibility, the startling paradox is revealed to us that invisibility or ignorance—implying absence of knowledge—furnishes our sole proof or knowledge of God, while visibility or knowledge and proof of a God would instantly divest this God of his divine attributes, lower him to the level of man or other natural phenomena, and behold! he would then—cease to be God!

And in this we discover the terrible illogic of Spiritualists, that they will persist in investing the invisible nothing with powers and potencies capacitating it, him, or them to accomplish all, which they in their ignorance assume matter and force cannot do. And also their incapacity to "handle" the subject, which prevents their seeing that some objections still exist, that the problem is even infinitly more complicated by assuming the existence of spirits than before.

As this letter has again assumed larger proportions than I intended, I can only briefly respond to your minor points.

Matter exists prior to its attributes, only as a body exists prior to its shadow, as matter prior to its form, essence prior to its flavor, or a rose prior to its perfume; it is practical co-existence.

The forces prevading matter are far more numerous than you seem to be aware of, and by no means all "like the force which moves our arm," and which proceeds from "will." What "will" isit which, "when myriads of atoms are drawn together" and hav formed a beautiful woman, after death causes this lovely form to dissolve into a foul and putrid mass of living worms and fluids? Or what has volition to do with the growth of a tumor or cancer? The explosion of cannon or boiler? Will you please cite one natural phenomenon produced by causes outside of the animal organism which indicates or proves design or will?

You affirm Materialism to be "out of harmony with all the analogies of nature." The opposit is true. All knowledge, all experience, all records, all history, point emphatically to the destructibility of all individual forms, whether in the shape of man, beast, tree, rock, world, sun, or system. All forms hav a beginning—all must end. For one single analogy in nature which demonstrates the indestructibility of forms—outside of the ultimate atom—I will present an elegant gold watch and chain, and for proof of one "immortal soul," throw in my jewelry store.

Rochelle, Ill. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

THE North American Review for October presents an attractiv table of contents. Senator N. P. Hill writes of "Gold and Silver as Standards of Value," and maintains that silver should be coined as well as gold, not for the purpose of inflating the currency, neither in the interest of the silver-mining industry, but for the broader and more equitable purpose of preserving uniformity in the value of metallic money, and of preventing such contraction of the volume of money as would produce financial disaster. In "Some Aspects of Democracy in England," A. V. Dicey makes clear to the American reader how it is that, while all the forms of monarchy and aristocracy persist in Britain, the democracy, or, in other words, public opinion, absolutely controls the action of the government. Under the title of "Co-operativ Distribution," the heretical Dr. R. Heber Newton givs an instructiv historical sketch of the rise, progress, and fluctuations of co-operativ merchandizing in the United States during the past fifty years. Prof. W. Boyd Dawkins writes a most valuable paper on "Early Man in America," which we last week took the liberty to transfer to our columns. The possibility of "Astronomical Collisions," whether of the fixed stars with one another, or of comets with the sun, the earth, or the other planets, is considered by Prof. C. A. Young. Moncure D. Conway discourses learnedly, and at the same time most entertainingly, upon the "Saint Patrick Myth." Van Buren Denslow, well-known to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, in an article on "Board of Trade Morality," makes a vigorous defense of the practices of the Corn Exchange, and in particular replies to the strictures of Mr. Henry D. Lloyd, contained in the Review for August. Frederic Harrison contributes an article, invaluable to the historical student, on "Histories of the French Revolution." Finally, the Rev. E. E. Hale presents an inventory of the volume and distribution of "Social Forces in the United States." Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York. $5.00 a year, 50 cents a number.

The National Liberal League Congress.

The seventh annual Congress of the National Liberal League began its session at Freie Gemeinde Hall, Milwaukee, on the forenoon of the 21st ult. An organization was effected shortly after 10 o'clock, when T. B. Wakeman, of New York city, president of the League, was called to the chair. T. C. Leland, the secretary of the national organization, officiated in that capacity for the Congress. Mr. Wakeman opened the business of the session with a few brief remarks, in which he outlined the drift and object of the League.

He said that he felt grateful to friends in Milwaukee, who had decorated the hall wherein they were assembled, and that their kindness and forethought entitled them to confidence. Milwaukee, he suggested, was a living example of American art and enterprise. By a singular coincidence the Milwaukee Exposition, which espouses material progress, was in progress jointly with the session of this Liberal League. All art and science show that the development of human life and society is forwarded by the knowledge of things and elements as they exist. No one now thinks of returning to the primitiv stick formerly used as a plow, nor of substituting the camel in place of the railroad. The press and the telegraph are prominent factors in advancing the cause of liberality. All these modern developments show the progress of the time in matters outside of theology, while the latter still claims a sort of authority over society by a system appropriate to the ideas of 2,000 years ago. "Is it not time," here asked the speaker, "to drop these old ideas and get at the living present, by running our educational institutions according to some better principle than the exploded thought of antiquity?" He continued: Its advocates are not only behind the age, but they pretend they can do what they never can accomplish. In contrast with Milwaukee's exhibition of art and manufactures, they hav in Chicago an exhibition of superstition. A man thinking himself an evangelist was holding forth to crowds. The Liberals had been there, and now the mummies had taken possession. The speaker read an extract of one of Moody's sermons, and then insisted on the secularization of the state, so that the church shall cease to control the schools, the legislatures and courts. He was opposed to farming out the various Indian tribes to chaplains, and making "belief" a qualification to hold office. Above all he insisted on the freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and freedom of the mails. To accomplish these things, the League proposes a more general secular scientific education in place of that obtruded by theology. He argued that it needs no miracle to account for all natural phenomena. The League's principal success had been as an educator. Did it not exist, God would be put in the Constitution next year. To prevent anything like that the speaker appealed to Liberals everywhere to organize, combine, and learn to respect their own opinions as well as express them. He was convinced that they were to become a power, and be the foundation of advanced science and Liberal thought.

A committee on credentials was then appointed, consisting of T. C. Leland, of New York; E. A. Stevens, of Chicago, and Max Grossman, of Milwaukee. Mrs. H. S. Lake was elected assistant secretary.

Secretary Leland then proceeded with the reading of letters of regret from the following prominent Liberals: H. L. Boyes, of Seward, Neb.; B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis, Or.; Wm. Allen, of Montpelier, Ind.; Edward F. Munn, of Hooper, Davis county, Utah, and W. H. Herndon, of Springfield, Ill.

Mr. Munn, in his communication, referred to Mormondom as a hierarchy that must be met and opposed by Liberals as striving for religious power. W. H. Herndon, Abraham Lincoln's old law partner, wrote an interesting letter concerning his published statements of the martyr president's life, character, and belief.

"Gath," the correspondent, had interviewed one Milton Hay, an acquaintance of Herndon, relativ to the latter's motiv in speaking freely about his old law partner, and his religious inclinations, etc. "Gath" fabricated to such an extent that Mr. Hay published a denial of certain things he is represented as saying of Herndon. The latter, after offering greeting in his letter to the League, says:

By the way, did you see an article from "Gath" flying around in the papers, giving me the devil? Hay, the man—Milton Hay, of this city—who was interviewed at Saratoga by "Gath," has been forced to come out in our city papers flatly denying the truth of the account and the treachery of "Gath." Hay does me justice as far as he wisely can. Prudence is an institution in this world, you know. If I can find a copy of Hay's letter I'll send it to you at Milwaukee or New York. May I say to you that Gath's letter is false in every particular where I am mentioned, or the subject of it? I am never in this world to be forgiven for speaking the truth about Lincoln, his character, his mind, nature, religion, etc. Blind, infatuated hero-worshipers—Christians—those in whom superstition and the dregs of fetichism still cling, hate me terribly. I think I must hurt 'em, or they would not be eternally fighting or libeling me. Enough. Use my name as you hav done if I can be of any service to the cause to which you and I are in this life warmly united.

The secretary also read the credentials of the Union of Radicals of Milwaukee, a distinct organization from the Liberal League, but with the same objects in view. A brief discussion ensued as to the propriety of admitting them with full powers to participate, act, and vote in the proceedings, one or two inclining to the theory that the League's constitution did not permit it. On motion of Mr. Stevens, of Chicago, however, the delegates of the Milwaukee Radicals were unanimously admitted with full power to join in the deliberations. It was Mr. Stevens's expressed belief that the Union of Radicals stood as high in connection with Freethought as the League.

An adjournment was then taken to 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the Committee on Credentials to confer in the mean time with all the delegates in attendance.

Annual members of the League were granted the privilege of voting, same as League delegates.

A selection of standing committees resulted in the following choice: Committee on Business, R. A. Shilling, C. W. Woodworth, Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Max Grossman, and Dr. Hastings. Committee on Resolutions, E. A. Stevens, George Chainey, H. S. Lake, C. H. Boppe, and O. Childs. Committe on Officers, John Steves, A. B. Severance, Samuel Fielden, Daniel Davis, and M. J. Kremer. The receipt of communications from outside organizations being in order, Max Grossman, representing the Union of Radicals, presented a lengthy communication from that body, which was enthusiastically received. The communication was referred to the Committee on Resolutions, and the committee instructed to report at the evening meeting. Several special committees appointed at the last congress to look after important matters, among which was the management of Girard College, are to be looked after by the Business Committee of the present Congress, and a report obtained if possible. A vote of thanks was tendered members of the Union of Radicals for their appearance and expressions before the Congress through Mr. Grossman.

President Wakeman at this time announced that Charles Watts, one of England's favorit Liberal workers, was present, and invited the gentleman to the platform. As Mr. Watts appeared upon the platform he was greeted by enthusiastic cheers from the delegates and visitors. He addressed the assemblage for but a moment, explaining that he would not impose upon the time which was being devoted to business. It was a pleasure to him, coming as he did from far-away England, to meet those who were breathing the same inspirations on prominent topics of the day, one of which was Liberalism. The meeting was for the purpose of achieving many practical results, one of which would be the alleviation of American woe. He believed that the destruction and entire overthrow of all phases of superstition and the obliteration of that cloud which has so long been a barrier to universal happiness, were things soon to be. Following Mr. Watts's remarks a motion was carried adjourning the meeting until 8 o'clock P.M., in order to allow committees time to prepare reports.

The evening session was given over to a discussion of the question whether the League join either of the political parties or whether it organize a separate body politic, based on the broad principles which the members profess. The debate was upon the report of a committee appointed at the annual convention held in St. Louis last year, for the very purpose of considering the advisability of organizing a separate party, or supporting any of those now in existence. This report includes a platform and principles, with the motto, "Mental and Industrial Liberty." Previous to engaging in the discussion of this subject, the solo and chorus of the well-known song, "Pull for the Shore, Sailor," was rendered, changed to suit the occasion.

President Wakeman then stated that in addition to the report of last year's committee, the paper from the Milwaukee Union of Radicals would be considered. Mr. Stevens, of the Committee on Credentials, reported the following supplementary delegates: Harry Hoover, of the Pittsburgh League; J. R. Kemp, of the Altoona, Pa., League—both gentlemen also representing the Pennsylvania State League; John Woffington, Miss Susan Bidwell, and Mrs. Elizabeth Richards, of the Patch Grove, Wis., League; J. G. Kendall, an annual member of the National League.

E. A. Stevens, as a member of the St. Louis committee, then read the "platform and principles" as adopted and recommended by them. When he came to the clause demanding the enfranchisment of woman the delegates in attendance applauded. After an introduction touching on matters in general, the report proceeds to giv a "New Declaration of Independence," whereupon follows the platform of political and secular demands. On motion the report was unanimously received and placed on the table for discussion.

E. C. Walker, representing the minority of the same, read a report dissenting from a few radical declarations and demands as they exist in the report of the majority. It was received with the understanding that it be considered in connection with the majority report.

On motion by R. Schilling, Max Grossman read again the resolutions submitted by the Milwaukee Union of Radicals, for the benefit of those who were not in attendance at the afternoon session.

Robert Schilling suggested that the various reports be referred to the Committee on Resolutions, which was discussed after the motion had been seconded. Gentlemen deemed it unnecessary to refer the matter back to the committee, who disagreed. It was finally decided to first ascertain from the spirit of the Congress whether the political arena should be entered or not.

Mr. Wakeman now explained that the matter of inaugurating a political party was an old one before the Congress, having come up from year to year. He did not sympathize with the spirit of the class of philosophy that appeared paramount in the several platforms proposed. He claimed the Socialistic ideas wholly impractical in view of the modern line of thought, and advised that before the Congress decide to engage in a separate political movement, they consider where the money was to come from to organize a new party. In all his experience Liberals said one thing and acted another when money was required.

On motion, it was decided to bring the matter to a focus by adopting a resolution deciding to take political action. Mr. Stevens submitted a document giving the replies of Liberals representing the different states, concerning the advisibility of engaging in independent political action. The replies were almost unanimous for a new party, and scarcely any were in favor of amalgamating with either of the old political parties.

Mr. Kramer, of Chicago, was in favor of organized and independent political action. He deprecated the chair's remark to the effect that the spirit which prevailed in the platforms submitted was largely imported from German Socialistic thought. Regarding himself, he was ready and willing to adopt any and all truths, no matter from what country they came.

Max Grossmann considered it impracticable to organize a new party at present. He would hav a platform adopted simply for the purpose of disseminating Liberal thought.

F. F. Follet, of the Illinois League, reviewed the history of past efforts in the political field for the past seven years, and denied that during that entire time one iota of influence was gained by the League with either of the old political parties. He favored the idea of a new party.

W. F. Peck questioned the practicability of a new party with such an all-embracing platform. He thought that the League would rather go out of its way in entering the political field. It was the educational interests that ought to be considered first.

Robert Schilling made a ringing speech in favor of a new party. He said he was almost horrified to see reformers get up and talk about a money consideration, when every true reformer that ever lived was ever willing to giv his all for his cause.

Mrs. Ames, of Chicago, spoke heartily in favor of independent political action. She would educate and agitate.

Mr. Boppe, a German editor of Milwaukee, favored political action for the purpose of agitating the principles of the League.

Mr. Fielden blandly remarked how "happy could he be with t'other dear chairman away." He strongly indorsed an independent movement, and scorned the money considerations of Mr. Wakeman.

Mr. Leland was ready to warmly assist in the organization of an independent party so soon as he had explained to him where the money was to come from. He said that the money so far contributed to the League movement wouldn't pay for so much as the rough board shanties for the polling booths on the corners of the streets on election days in New York city alone, to say nothing of printing and other expenses. Thereupon Mr. Schilling explained that in the West they didn't hav booths, and elections were not necessarily so very expensiv.

Mr. Boppe again advocated political agitation as the first point that should be held in view, and he would once more urge independent action for that very purpose. He did not consider money so very essential, since they would not seek office for spoils.

Mr. Walker considered the majority always behind the minority. He maintained that advance should be made by educating the people.

E. A. Stevens was strong for political agitation. He spoke for the majority report of the St. Louis committee in a hearty manner, especially deprecating the remark of Chairman Wakeman to the effect that the report smacked of Germanism. Not German himself, he was unable to conceive of such a thing. But if he knew anything at all, he was aware that Germany was the schoolmaster of the world. He strongly and eloquently urged decided action.

The hour being late, the Business Committee was called upon to report. Having done so, it was resolved to accord a continuation of the discussion precedence in the following day's proceedings. The meeting then adjourned.

At 9:45 o'clock Saturday morning the second day's session of the League was called to order by President Wakeman. The desks of the president and secretary presented an attractiv appearance from an abundance of bouquets which had been prepared by lady members of the congress. The attendance of delegates, together with visitors, was very good.

W. J. Gorsuch, chairman of the Committee on Political Action, made the following report:

At the sixth annual congress of the National Liberal League, held in St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 29th to Oct. 2d, 1882, your committee was appointed with instructions to correspond with labor and labor-sympathy organizations, with the intention, if said labor bodies favored united political action and your committee was indorsed by the Board of Management, to later call a national convention. In pursuance of such instructions, your committee formulated the accompanying declaration and platform, and submitted the same to the Board of Management. In the mean time the "grand old Democratic party" had scored victories in New York and Massachusetts, and your president and secretary, through the columns of Man, the organ and property of the National Liberal League, repudiated the idea of forming a new radical party, and advocated affiliation with the Democrats. Such being the case, the hands of your committee were tied. It could not move except by entering into conflict with your chief officers. It did not feel like taking so much responsibility upon itself, and therefore concluded to attempt no further action till the Seventh National Congress convened.

The presentation of this report was the signal for opening the discussion abandoned at adjournment from the previous meeting, upon the question of political action. President Wakeman called Dr. Juliet Severance to the chair. Upon taking the floor, Mr. Wakeman said he wished to make a brief explanation. One of the first principles of Liberalism, he said, is to make fair statements. Never flinch from stating opinions frankly, which course he ever followed; in so doing he, no doubt, at times stepped upon somebody's toes. Friday night he had made certain references to the Liberal element among the Germans, which had been wrongly construed. He desired that the wrong idea be corrected. After making due explanation, he proceeded to express himself on the question of the previous meeting, that of the League taking political action. He was desirous of taking such action, but care should be taken in the manner in which it be done. An attempt to turn the League into a political party then and there would prove ruinous. The proper way, he thought, would be to call a convention at the close of the present congress, making the same of a wider and more general nature than the congress, and there organize. If the new party is formed, he believed, there are many outsiders ready to join its ranks. The party now in power is controled by churches, and is a barrier to any liberal legislation. He would throw votes to the candidates who would help the League's voice to be heard and giv its principles recognition. He thought it "best to now put out the projected platform, and during the next year endeavor to get all we can to stand with us." While he might vote for the Democratic candidate, he would not affiliate with the Democratic party. He only wanted to use the Democratic club to knock out the Republican brains, if there were any brains left. The Liberal party must come step by step, and not all at one jump.

Mr. Leland explained concerning the report by Mr. Gorsuch, and asked if there had ever been a meeting by that political committee.

Mr. Stevens: No; but there was correspondence between the members.

Mr. Leland: The board of management never heard of any meeting nor of any action by that committee as a committee. This so-called "declaration and platform" was sent to us by Mr. Stevens some four or five months after the last Congress, and we took it to be simply an expression of his individual views. It was not signed by the committee. It nowhere intimated, nor did Mr. Stevens intimate, that it was the result of action by the committee, and we hear to-day for the first time that it was meant to be so taken.

F. F. Follet, Illinois, said that the plan for a later convention for organization is an old one, and that the agitation of forming the proposed political party has been going on for years. The question should now be, Shall the agitation be kept up, or shall a new course of action be adopted? Delegates were in that Congress to perform an important work, and the political matter should be well attended to. He had traveled through Illinois for years, and had there found hundreds who were "Liberals on the quiet," but who, for all the agitation that had been going on, had never heard of the Liberal League. Thousands of voters hav become disgusted with the conduct of the two great political parties, and hav quit going to the polls at all. "To such," said Mr. Follet, "I would say, 'Don't do it, for by neglecting to vote you are delivering the country into the hands of thieves.'" Mr. Follet then spoke upon the subject of woman's rights, declaring it to be the belief of Liberals that the time has come when the ladies of this country should hav a voice in the affairs of the land.

Dr. Hastings, who followed, stated that he did not believe that the ballot-box could be relied upon as a remedy for the evils from which the people were suffering. Too many petty considerations were looked to by the average voter to permit of any attention being given the cause of Liberalism.

H. C. Boppe thought it advisable for the Liberal League to co-operate with one of the great political parties of the day.

A. Risk, of Iowa, believed the Liberal cause to be working admirably, generally, and knew it to so be in his state. Great care should be taken to not load it too heavily at this time, so that it will become top-heavy, and thereby be injured. There is an undercurrent in its favor, and Liberals should be careful not to direct that current in another direction.

W. J. Gorsuch took the floor. He was radical for the formation of a party distinct from the old parties. Referring to the remarks of President Wakeman, he said if it be true that the Republican party is owned by the church, and that no favor can come to the Liberals through the same, it is equally true of the Democratic party, which is owned and controled by the Catholic church. Ignorance supports the church and the priest, and the church and priest in turn support the political parties of the day. Referring to the various subjects embodied in the League's proposed political platform, and the danger of overloading, as had been suggested, Mr. Gorsuch said that the person who could not comprehend and fall in sympathy with the principles of the Liberal party, as there set forth, could and did not understand the first principles of Liberalism. Relativ to the possession of lands by the American people he said that there was not one inch of land on this continent that is in reality honestly owned by the occupant. It was all taken possession of at the point of the sword. The Liberal League now has a grand opportunity of being the party of the future. The Abolition party, by its great war, had only freed 3,000,000 blacks. The Liberal party has the opportunity of making free 50,000,000 whites. If the League's only object is to circulate Freethought literature, it has no business in the political arena. But it is understood that the object of the League is of a political nature, and such being the case, a firm, open stand in that direction should be made.

E. A. Stevens, taking the floor, said that he was astonished that President Wakeman, so true a Liberal, should insinuate that man develops and matures as does a flower; that man is not capable of consulting his own mind and acting promptly. He had a different opinion, and believed that now is the time to form a new Liberal party, with a platform broad and clear. Referring to the present condition of affairs in this country, he said that the government is not an aristocracy or a monarchy, but just what the people make it or permit it to be. Railroads and capital control both parties of the day, and a party entirely free from such influences is demanded. The Committee on Resolutions, of which he was a member, had important matters to present, and he hoped that the same would be indorsed by the Committee on Political Action, and adopted by the Congress. Mr. Stevens then read such parts of the committee's report as referred to political matters, the whole of which we print here:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

MR. PRESIDENT, AND DELEGATES: Your Committee on Resotions respectfully report the following:

WHEREAS, Under all climes, humanity presents little more than a spectacle of ruin, misery, and antagonism, resulting from the rule of force, founded or abetted by systems of theology, it is the paramount duty of Liberals to destroy these false systems, and supplant them by the truth:

Resolved, That a priesthood of "divine lawgivers" hav become an obstacle to reason, common sense, and social progress, and are a constant menace to democratic or republican institutions, and the National Liberal League hereby declares the same relentless war against their blighting, fabulous theology as they hav declared and waged against the living truths of science; therefore,

We demand, That all churches and ecclesiastical property be no longer exempt from taxation; that all chaplaincies over the army, navy, or institutions supported by the public, be abolished; that all appropriations for educational institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

We demand, That the use of the Bible, and all religious services of a sectarian character, shall be prohibited.

We demand, That affirmation be substituted for judicial oaths, and that all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

We demand, That appointments by public officials of religious festivals, fasts, or days of prayer, being unconstitutional, shall cease.

We demand, That our entire political system shall be administered in harmony with the Constitution; that all legal encroachments, looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, or abridging the freedom of speech, press, or mails, be abrogated, and that all changes necessary to place our government on a purely secular basis shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

We further resolve, That the New Era, which Liberalism is pledged to inaugurate, proclaims the universal republic of man, based upon the continuity and solidarity of the human race.

Resolved, That, as science establishes the unity of the origin of mankind, and thus leads to the logical deduction of the identity of human nature and human rights, we must necessarily advance toward a new social order or expression of scientific sociological truth, and this congress has outlined the changes and reforms which seem necessary to accomplish that result.

Resolved, That this new scientific cosmogony leaves no room for the existence of the Christians' heaven and hell; and that in this republic of man, which is to supersede the kingdom of God, the innocent Jesus will not be permitted to bear the sins of another.

Resolved, That we recognize the Liberal press as the life of the Liberal cause, and that we earnestly recommend to the patronage of the friends of reform such papers as THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Banner of Light, Boston Investigator, Radical Review, Spiritual Offering, Man, Der Freidenker, Der Reformer, Mind and Matter, The Word, The Universe, Liberty, and Lucifer.

SUPPLEMENTARY.

Resolved, That, as fellow-workers for the secularization of all governments, we tender to Charles Bradlaugh and his brilliant associate, Annie Besant, of England, our admiration and esteem for their heroic efforts to secure justice and establish truth, not only in the British Parliament, but in advancing the cause of liberty throughout the world.

While strictly adhering to the principles so eloquently enunciated in the declaration of principles of former congresses of the National Liberal League, and while desiring to labor for their realization with every energy and all the means at our command, we are of the opinion that our immediate as well as our remoter aims will remain unattainable so long as legislation is under the absolute control of one or the other of the existing incorrigible and corrupt party organizations, which are now without any principles whatever.

We hold that the true Liberal should in future abstain from all aids and services for the benefit of parties which will ever remain hostil to the aims of the National Liberal League and all radical reformatory demands, and should labor for the creation of a new people's party which dares to avow principles advocating the establishment of a democratic republic, and which demands liberty in religious, political, and social matters.

We acknowledge that the aims and reformatory demands embodied in the platform of the Union of Radicals are permeated by the spirit of true republicanism and radicalism, and recommend them to the serious consideration of the local Leagues as well as to the Liberals of the whole country.

The members of the National Liberal League should, individually and by the influence which they exert as an organization, strive with every energy for the foundation of an independent party which will uncompromisingly combat the so-called Republican and Democratic parties.

Should such a new party be created, we recommend for adoption in its platform, aside from the well-known present aims of the National Liberal League, the following political and social reformatory demands:

I.—POLITICAL.

1. No "states' rights" to be upheld conflicting with the idea of the inseparable totality of the Union, or with the tenor of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

2. Uniformity of the civil and criminal code, and of the law of procedure, throughout the whole territory of the United States.

3. Equality of the rights of all citizens, without distinction of color, nationality, property, sex, or opinion on matters of religion.

4. The right of the people—

(a). To recall legislativ assemblies, members thereof, or other officers elected directly.

(b). To propose laws, or to demand the repeal of obnoxious ones.

(c). To ratify or reject new laws enacted.

Whenever a certain proportion of the registered voters to be designated by law, demand a popular vote on any of the above matters, it must be ordered within a certain time.

5. Abolition of the "one man power" created in the form of the presidency of the United States, and the substitution of a revocable executiv council therefor.

6. We demand that all moneys—paper, silver, or gold—be issued directly by the national government.

7. No so-called temperance (prohibition) laws shall be passed. They are resultless measures of coercion against those at whom they are directed, and insulting restrictions of the personal liberty of those who do not need them.

8. The designation of Sunday as the legal day for elections.

II.—SOCIAL.

1. Abolition of all monopolies and of institutions tending to create them. Public control of railroads and other corporations, and enactment of laws leading to their ownership and control by the people, so as to prevent them from becoming engins of extortion or sources of public danger on account of the political and social power they wield.

2. The promotion of co-operativ associations with the aid of loans from public funds.

3. National legislation in regard to industrial labor, covering the following points:

(a). The introduction of a normal day's work.

(b). The untrammeled right of association guaranteed to laborers as well as all other citizens, so as to enable them to protect their own interests.

(c). A system of statistical bureaus, the main duty of which shall be to collect data concerning the conditions of labor and production, and to giv information and advice gratuitously.

(d). The prohibition of continuous employment of children under fifteen years of age in factories, mines, and workshops to the detriment of their mental and physical development.

(e). The sanitary protection of the laboring population, by regulations taking cognizance of the needs of the different ages and sexes, by a controling supervision of factories, and by inspection of dwellings and provisions.

(f). The responsibility of the employer for accidents to employees.

4. The enactment of laws on the land question, providing for:

(a). The discontinuance of all sales and grants of public lands, which are henceforth to be considered the inalienable property of the nation, to be intrusted only to actual settlers, under precautionary conditions, and in consideration of a reasonable rental tax.

(b). Assistance to indigent colonists by loans from public funds under conditions of reimbursement.

(c). The re-purchase by the government of all lands which are not brought under cultivation up to a certain time, at the original purchase price.

5. National educational legislation, providing for gratuitous instruction in all the public institutions of learning, which are to be made available to indigent youth by assistance out of public means.

6. The gradual abolishment of all indirect taxes. All taxation to be direct, and levied on income, heritage, and gifts at a progressiv (graduated) rate.

No exemption from taxation to be allowed, except of the minimum requisit for the support of a family.

7. Administration of justice free of cost. Laws and judicial documents to be drawn in a language simple and intelligible for the people.

The officers of the Liberal League are authorized and requested to take all necessary steps and adopt adequate measures for bringing about a movement in favor of the foundation of such a new party, and for instituting an effectiv agitation for the principles hereby expressed.

E. A. STEVENS,
C. HERMANN BOPPE,
MRS. H. S. LAKE,
O. CHILD,
Committee on Resolutions.

A motion of Mr. Schilling, that each section of the committee's report be taken up seriatim, was carried.

Mr. Stevens explained that the report did not call for the formation of a new party, but was a declaration to cut aloof from the old parties.

President Wakeman said that he was willing to take the committee's report, in whole, as the projected platform of the Liberal Party of the country. When once so taken, it could be put before the people and explained step by step.

Mr. Schilling stated his reasons for wanting the report taken up for adoption section by section. There were some things in it which he hoped would be changed. For instance, he did not believe in making Sunday a day for holding elections. He also wanted a Greenback declaration embodied in the report.

At this point, Mr. Follet called attention to the fact that the League seemed about to adopt a political platform before it had decided whether or no to take any political action at all.

(Concluded on page 637.)

Communications.

Paul's Fifth or Last Visit to Jerusalem.

Although Paul in his epistles nowhere alludes to a third visit to Jerusalem, much less a fourth or fifth, yet it is possible that he went there again after the second visit described by him in the epistle to the Galatians, which is supposed to be among his earliest letters. We will therefore presume a possible basis of fact in the detailed account in Acts of his last visit to that city:

"And when we arrived at Jerusalem the brethren received us joyfully. And the next day, with Paul, we went unto James, when all the elders were with him" (xxi, 17, 18).

Whether this was James the brother of Jesus or James the son of Alpheus, the surving apostle of that name, the writer of Acts does not inform us. But Paul speaks only of "James, our Lord's brother," and calls him, by implication, one of the apostles (Gal. i, 19).

"And we [Gr. he] gave them salutation; and Paul [Gr. he] narrated to them with particularity what God had wrought among the gentiles by his ministry. And when they heard it they glorified God."

Nearly twenty years before, according to the marginal chronology, Simon Kepha had come up to Jerusalem with the astounding revelation of salvation to the gentiles, and had convinced the apostles and brethren of the truth of that new revelation (xi, 18). Again, some ten years later a council was held at Jerusalem to adjudicate the question, and after Kepha, Paul, Barnabas, and James had spoken, all in favor of taking in the gentiles without circumcision, it was unanimously so ordered and recorded (xv, 12–21). But now, after a further interval of eight or nine years, the spread of the gospel among the gentiles appears to be news to these same apostles and elders at Jerusalem!

"And they said to him: Our brother, thou seest how many myriads there are in Judea who hav believed; and these are all zealous for the law" (20).

King James's Bible, as well as the Douay and the revised New Testament, has "thousands" instead of myriads. But the word is myriads in the Greek codices; it means tens of thousands, and so the writer meant to be understood. But neither the Romish priests at Rheims in 1582 nor the English Protestant divines at London in 1610, nor their successors in 1880, dared to indorse this manifest falsehood of holy writ.

"And it hath been told them, of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews that are among the gentiles to depart from Moses, by telling them not to circumcise their children, and not to observe the rites of the law. (What is it, then? A multitude must needs assemble.) Now, because they hav heard that thou hast arrived here, do thou what we tell thee" (21, 22).

The above words in parentheses are taken from the Greek codices; the Syriac omits them.

"We hav four men who hav vowed to purify themselvs. Take them and go and purify thyself with them, and pay the expense along with them, as they shall shave their heads; that everyone may know that what is said against thee is false, and that thou fulfillest and observest the law. As to those of the gentiles who hav believed, we hav written (and concluded that they observe no such thing save only) that they should keep themselvs from sacrifice and from whoredom, and from what is strangled, and from blood" (22–25).

The unimportant words in parentheses are in King James's version, but in none of the old MSS.

The writer tells us that Paul did as the elders suggested. If so, it was a repetition of what the same writer says he did at Cenchrea several years before, and it is needless to comment again upon such an inconsistent and hypocritical act.

At the end of the seven days of purification, Paul entered the temple, but he was recognized by the Jews from Asia, who became excited and cried out:

"Men, sons of Israel, help. This is the man who teacheth in every place against our people and against the law, and against this place, and he hath also brought Arameans (Gr. Hellenes) into the temple and polluted this holy place. For they had previously seen with him in the city Trophimus the Ephesian, and they supposed that he had entered the temple with Paul" (28–29).

"Trophimus I left sick at the city of Miletus," says the writer of the second epistle to Timothy; which, if true, would seem to contradict the writer of Acts. We do not know what to believe about Trophimus.

"And the whole city was in commotion; and all the people assembled together and laid hold of Paul and dragged him out of the temple; and instantly the gates were closed. And while the multitude were seeking to kill him it was reported to the chiliarch of the cohort that the whole city was in uproar. And immediately he took a centurion and many soldiers, and they ran upon them. And when they saw the chiliarch and the soldiers they desisted from beating Paul. And the chiliarch came up to him and seized him, and ordered him to be bound with two chains; and he inquired respecting him, who he was and what he had done. And persons from the throng vociferated against him this thing and that. And because he could not, on account of their clamor, learn what the truth was, he commanded to conduct him to the castle. And when Paul came to the stairs the soldiers bore him along because of the violence of the people. For a great many people followed after him and cried out, saying, Away with him! And when he came near to entering the castle Paul said to the chiliarch: Wilt thou permit me to speak with thee? And he said to him: Dost thou know Greek? [Gr., Hellenisti genoskeis?] Art thou the Egyptian who before these days madest insurrection, and leadest out into the desert four thousand men, doers of evil" (30–38).

For "doers of evil," the Greek codices hav "men of the Sicarii." About A.D. 55 there sprang up a band of men in Judea called Sicarii. They pretended to be divinely inspired and were revolutionists. Jonathan the high priest was their first victim, after which others were slain, chiefly at the festivals. Governor Felix pursued and destroyed a great number of them (Jos. War. ii., 13 § 3). Concerning the Egyptian Josephus says:

"But there was an Egyptian false prophet that did the Jews more mischief than the former; for he was a cheat, and pretended to be a prophet also, and got together thirty thousand men [four thousand in Acts] that were deluded by him. These he led round about from the wilderness to the Mount of Olives, and was ready to break into Jerusalem by force from that place; and if he could but once conquer the Roman garrison and the people, he intended to domineer over them by the assistance of those guards of his that were to break into the city with him. But Felix prevented his attempt, and met him with his Roman soldiers, while all the people assisted him in his attack upon them, insomuch that when it came to a battle, the Egyptian ran away, with a few others, whilst the greatest part of those that were with him were either destroyed or taken alive; but the rest of the multitude were dispersed, every one to their own homes and there concealed themselvs" (Ibid. § 6).

Josephus again, in his "Antiquities," says:

"Moreover there came out of Egypt about this time to Jerusalem, one that said he was a prophet, and advised the multitude of the common people to go along with him to the Mount of Olives, as it was called, which lay over against the city, and at the distance of five furlongs. He said further that he would show them from hence how, at his command, the walls of Jerusalem would fall down; and he promised them that he would procure them an entrance into the city through those walls, when they were fallen down. Now, when Felix was informed of these things, he ordered his soldiers to take their weapons and came against them with a great number of horsemen and footmen from Jerusalem, and attacked the Egyptian and the people that were with him. He also slew four hundred of them and took two hundred alive. But the Egyptian himself escaped out of the fight, and did not appear any more" (Ant. xx, 8. § 6).

The writer of Acts seems to hav drawn on Josephus for what he says about the Egyptian and the Sicarii.

And here we beg the candid reader to note the remarkable fact that Josephus, who was 18 or 19 years of age when the Egyptian false prophet appeared outside the walls of Jerusalem, takes not the slightest notice of this alleged later commotion about Paul, nor of any other event described in the New Testament or early Christian literature, in which any apostle or disciple of Jesus Christ appears as an actor. How is it possible to interpret this absolute silence of the Jewish historian otherwise than as a negation of the whole story of the crucifixion, A.D. 29, or later, and of the propagation of Christianity in his own lifetime?

"And Paul said to him: I am a Jew, a man of Tarsus, a noted city in Cilicia, in which I was born; I pray thee suffer me to speak to the people. And when he permitted him Paul stood upon the stairs and waved to them his hand; and when they were quiet he addressed them in the Hebrew, and said to them: (39, 40.)

The Greek version says "Hebrew tongue." But of course that means the vernacular of Palestine, for the Hebrew language would hav been almost as unintelligible to the crowd as the Chinese or Gaelic.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Mr. Lacy Challenged Again.—An Open Letter.

MR. F. D. LACY, Sir: When I first read your very liberal proposition—to demonstrate the power of disembodied human spirits to write upon a slate—contained in your open letter to Elmina, published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 25, 1883, I was faintly inspired with a hope that at last a waiting anxious public were to hav the benefit of a real bona fide trial of the spirits. I reasoned that an author of your prominence would not dare to make such a public, ostentatious proposition to a lady unless you meant to stand "square-toed" to the trial according to the terms and conditions proposed by yourself. But alas! "'twas ever thus from childhood's hour I've seen my fondest hopes decay."

No sooner did Elmina accept than you played the crawfish—virtually backed out of your own proposition by ignoring the proposed conditions, adjourning the trial to that indefinit "beautiful sometime."

Here are the exact words quoted from your very equivocal letter published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 15, 1883: "I reserve the conditions under which this phenomenon is to be accomplished. I should beg to hav whatever time will best answer my convenience. Nor will I be willing to submit such a test to one trial, nor be confined to any special time!" It is evident Elmina must wait. "It may be for years, and it may be forever." Now, for the purpose of allowing you an opportunity to clear yourself, if you can, from the charge of flaunting your proposition in the face of Elmina simply because she is a woman whom you must hav known has no money of her own to try experiments with professional mountebanks, and assuming that you really believe that spirits of the dead can write upon a slate, according to the terms and conditions embodied in your open letter, I am led to make you the following proposition: If you will come, with any medium in the world, to Syracuse and exhibit in my presence the spirit phenomena you proposed in your open letter to show to Elmina, I will not ask your $500, but will reverse the order by paying you $500 for your trouble. The first day, not exceeding ten hours, I will devote to the trial gratuitously. After that, should the spirits fail, I will sit with you or your so-called medium every day for four hours if you will pay me for my time, $20 for each sitting. I will guarantee, by depositing sufficient money in any bank in this city, to continue these sittings until the spirits (!) fairly win the $500, or you abandon the situation.

Yours for the "Bottom Facts" concerning the science of Spiritualism, JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

Syracuse, Sept. 20, 1883.

Mrs. Slenker Also Anxious.

DEAR FRIENDS: You hav read the letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER relating to my going North to see "independent slate writing." Many hav been very anxious for me to go, and I am anxious myself to see something of the phenomena that are so rapidly making converts to the belief in a "summer-land" in the great beyond. My backer says he will still hold himself good for my expenses to the amount of a hundred dollars on condition that the independent slate-writing is produced in my presence and that of one good witness. Now, I am wondering if among all the millions of believers there is none who will put up the hundred dollars for their side. Mr. Slenker will agree to my going so long as my expenses to New York or Boston and the fees at the seances are paid by believers or non-believers, and probably a hundred dollars will cover these.

Other incidental expenses I'll pay myself if friends will kindly order of me books and papers as per advertisment in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Full particulars will be given of all attempts to see the phenomena, in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I shall not be able now to start till April or May, so we hav plenty of time to arrange matters. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., Sept. 23, 283.

Bacon's Christianity.

[The subjoined article was found in an old book at a bookstall in Fulton street, this city.]

The London Tract Society has published Bacon's "Character of a Christian Believer," in which, in thirty-four seeming paradoxes and contradictions, Bacon sums up the cardinal maxims of Christianity. The London Athenæum says, in reference to this pamphlet, that in one remarkable paper, Bacon has drawn up the character of a Christian believer, in which he presents, under the boldest forms of contradiction, the dogmas of our creed. It is a sort of proof exercise of genius—a paper to rouse attention, to stimulate thought, to compel inquiry. As this document is one of the least known, perhaps, of Bacon's compositions, we shall venture to quote its articles entire. They are called, "The Characters of a Believing Christian," in paradoxes and seeming contradictions, and are thirty-four in number:

1. A Christian is one that believes things his reason cannot comprehend; he hopes for things which neither he nor any man alive ever saw; he labors for that which he knoweth he shall never obtain; yet, in the issue, his belief appears not to be false; his hopes make him not ashamed; his labor is not in vain.

2. He believes three to be one, and one to be three; a father not to be older than his son; a son to be equal with his father; and one proceeding from both to be equal with both; he believing three persons in one nature, and two natures in one person.

3. He believes a virgin to be mother of a son; and that very son of hers to be her maker. He believes him to hav been shut up in a narrow room whom heaven and earth could not contain. He believes him to hav been born in time who was and is from everlasting. He believes him to hav been a weak child, carried in arms, who is the Almighty; and him once to hav died who "only hath life and immortality" in himself.

4. He believes the God of all grace to hav been angry with one that hath never offended him; and that God, who hates sin, to be reconciled to himself, though sinning continually, and never making, or being able to make him satisfaction. He believes a most just God to hav punished a most just person, and to hav justified himself through a most ungodly sinner. He believes himself freely pardoned, and yet a sufficient satisfaction was made for him.

5. He believes himself to be precious in God's sight, and yet loathes himself in his own. He dares not justify himself in those things wherein he can find no fault with himself, and yet believes that God accepts him in those services wherein he is able to find many faults.

6. He praises God for his justice, and yet fears him for his mercy. He is so ashamed as that he dares not open his mouth before God, and yet he comes with boldness to God, and asks him anything he needs. He is so humble as to acknowledge himself to deserve nothing but evil, and yet he believes that God means him all good. He is one that fears always, yet is as bold as a lion. He is often sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; many times complaining, yet always giving thanks. He is the most lowly-minded, yet the greatest aspirer; most contented, yet ever craving.

7. He bears a lofty spirit in mean condition; when he is ablest he thinks meanest of himself. He is rich in poverty, and poor in the midst of riches. He believes all the world to be his, yet he dares take nothing without special leave from God. He covenants with God for nothing, yet looks for a great reward. He loseth his life, and gains by it; and while he loseth it he saveth it.

8. He livs not to himself, yet of all others he is most wise for himself. He denieth himself often, yet no man loveth himself so well as he. He is most reproached, yet most honored. He hath most afflictions, and most comforts.

9. The more injury his enemies do him, the most advantages he gains by them. The more he forsakes earthly things, the more he enjoys them.

10. He is the most temperate of all men, yet fares most deliciously; he lends and givs most freely, yet he is the greatest usurer; he is meek toward all men, yet inexorable by men. He is the best child, husband, brother, friend, yet hates father and mother, brother and sister. He loves all men as himself, yet hates some men with a perfect hatred.

11. He desires to hav more grace than any man hath in the world, yet is truly sorrowful when he seeth any man hav less than himself; he knoweth no man after the flesh, yet givs all men their due respects; he knoweth if he please man, he can not be the servant of Christ, yet, for Christ's sake, he pleaseth all men in all things. He is a peace-maker, yet is a continual fighter, and is an irreconcilable enemy.

12. He believes him to be worse than Infidel that provides not for his family, yet himself livs and dies without care. He accounts all his superiors, yet stands stiffly upon authority. He is severe to his children because he loveth them, and by being favorable unto his enemy he revengeth himself upon him.

13. He believes the angels to be more excellent creatures than himself, and yet accounts them his servants. He believes that he receives many good things by their means, and yet he neither prays for their assistance, nor offers them thanks, which he doth not disdain to do to the meanest Christian.

14. He believes himself to be a king, how mean soever he be and how great soever he be, yet he thinks himself not too good to be a servant to the poorest saint.

15. He is often in prison, yet always at liberty; a free man though a servant. He loves not honor among men, yet highly prizeth a good name.

16. He believes that God hath bidden every man that doth him good to do so; he yet of any man is the most thankful to them that do aught for him. He would lay down his life to save the soul of his enemy, yet will not adventure upon one sin to save the life of him who saved his.

17. He swears to his own hindrance, and changeth not; yet he knoweth that his oath cannot tie him to sin.

18. He believes Christ to hav no need of anything he doth, yet maketh account that he doth relieve Christ in all his acts of charity. He knoweth he can do nothing of himself, yet labors to work out his own salvation. He professeth he can do nothing, yet as truly professeth he can do all things; he knoweth that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, yet believeth he shall go to heaven both body and soul.

19. He trembles at God's word, yet counts it sweeter to him than the honey and honeycomb, and dearer than thousands of gold and silver.

20. He believes that God will never damn him, and yet fears God for being able to cast him into hell. He knoweth he shall not be saved by nor for his good works, yet he doth all the good works he can.

21. He knoweth God's providence is in all things, yet is so diligent in his calling and business, as if he were to cut out the thread of his own happiness. He believes beforehand that God had purposed what he shall be, and that nothing can make him to alter his purpose; yet prays and endeavors as if he would force God to save him forever.

22. He prays and labors for that which he is confident God means to giv, and the more assured he is the more earnestly he prays for that he knows he shall never obtain, and yet givs not over. He prays and labors for that which he knows he shall be no less happy without; he prays with all his heart not to be led into temptation, yet rejoiceth when he is fallen into it; he believes his prayers are heard, even when they are denied, and givs thanks for that which he prays against.

23. He hath within him both flesh and spirit, yet he is not a double-minded man; he is often led captiv by the law of sin, yet it never gets dominion over him; he cannot sin, yet can do nothing without sin. He doth nothing against his will, yet he doth what he would not. He wavers and doubteth, yet obtains.

24. He is often tossed and shaken, yet it is as Mount Zion; he is a serpent and a dove; a lamb and a lion; a reed and a cedar. He is sometimes so troubled that he thinks nothing to be true in religion; yet if he did think so he could not at all be troubled. He thinks sometimes that God hath no mercy for him, yet resolves to die in the pursuit of it. He believes, like Abraham, against hope, and though he cannot answer God's logic, yet, with the woman of Canaan, he hopes to prevail with the rhetoric of importunity.

25. He wrestles and yet prevails; and though yielding himself unworthy of the least blessing he enjoys, yet, Jacob-like, he will not let him go without a new blessing; he sometimes thinks himself to hav no grace at all, and yet, how poor and afflicted soever he be, he would not change conditions with the most prosperous man under heaven that is a manifest worldling.

26. He thinks sometimes that the ordinances of God do him no good, yet he would rather part with his life than be deprived of them.

27. He was born dead; yet so that it had been murder for any to hav taken his life away. After he began to liv, he was ever dying.

28. And though he hath an eternal life begun in him, yet he makes account he hath a death to pass through.

29. He counts self-murder a heinous sin, yet is ever busied in crucifying the flesh, and in putting to death his earthly members, not doubting but there will come a time of glory, when he shall be esteemed precious in the sight of the great God of heaven and earth, appearing with boldness at his throne, and asking anything that he needs, being endued with humility, by acknowledging his great crimes and offenses, and that he deserveth nothing but severe punishment.

30. He believes that his whole soul and body shall be full of glory as them that hav more; and no more full than theirs that hav less.

31. He livs invisible to those that see him, and those that know him best do but guess at him; yet those, many times, judge more truly of him than he doth of himself.

32. The world will sometimes account him a saint, when God accounteth him a hypocrit; and afterward, when the world branded him for a hypocrit, then God owned him for a saint.

33. His death makes not an end of him. His soul, which was put into his body, is not to be perfected without his body; yet his soul is more happy when it is separated from his body than when it was joined unto it; and his body, though torn in pieces, burnt to ashes, ground to powder, turned to rottenness, shall be no loser.

34. His advocate, his surety, shall be his judge, his mortal part shall become immortal; and what was sown in corruption and defilement shall be raised in incorruption and glory, and a finite creature shall possess an infinit happiness.

Glory be to God!

"Relativly to any form of orthodox Christian belief," says a church paper, "Renan is an Infidel. Relativly to the most radical schools of unbelief, he is still what may be termed conservativ, refusing to connect himself with the most radical party. He is, therefore, 'a beguiler of unstable souls.'" To which we may add, with Paul, he proves all things and holds fast to that which is good. That he comes out an Infidel after his elaborate researches into the life of Jesus and origin of Christianity shows precisely what is good. Renan is as outspoken an Infidel as his mild nature will permit.

Mr. Cobb's Opinion.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your last number Mr. Andrews has risen and explained. And he has done it well. There is no uncertain sound in the ring of his last letter. The argument has, I presume, been carried on almost as far as can be afforded by the limits of your columns. The subject has, however, been somewhat shifted from that which was started. The question propounded for solution was: "What is science?" The definition which appears to hav gained general acceptance by the parties to the discussion is: "Systematized knowledge." This is good, provided there be a full understanding of what knowledge is. It is evident, however, that such is not the case. The all-embracingness of knowledge is not admitted. It is even tacitly disputed. What Mr. Putnam puts before us as knowledge is in some respects a part only of knowledge, and in others is not knowledge at all, but merely a branch of speculativ philosophy. When we are told in two words what science is, the author is admirable. Had he refrained from writing another word, he would hav been also wise. But, unfortunately for himself, he has proceeded to tell us what science does and what it does not. Then he lays bare the limitations, which in his mind exist, as to the legitimate field of the operations of science, and he places boundaries to the arena (or arenas, as he seems to view the subject,) of knowledge.

But knowledge is coterminous with the universe, and until the all is known, knowledge does not exist, however convenient we may find the use of the full term for any part or branch thereof. The systematizing of knowledge brings it within the domain of science. Science then embraces all knowledge, and is itself coterminous with the universe. Until the all is known by man (and this must include all the subtil analogies that obtain between the different parts and members of this all), and until the knowledge of this all is systematized, and this again as well as its method known by man, science does not for him exist. This systematized all-knowledge is what Mr. Andrews has termed Universology.

Universology is then the only thing that can, with anything like strictness, be called science. It is indeed but another name for science. And yet this is that which Mr. Putnam has gone out of his way to tell us is not science. "I will not call Universology transcendentalism," he says, "but let it stand by itself as a new method of dealing with the universe; but at the same time I affirm that it is not a scientific dealing with the universe." And why? It may be admitted that it is not transcendentalism, because that maintains that mind comes first and makes matter; but it is said, it is not science, for that is driven to the conclusion that matter comes first and makes mind; whereas Universology affirms the equal eternity of mind and matter. So are we taken entirely out of the realm of science, to use its very essence and nature, as proof of an otherwise unsupported assertion. With the discussion as to the priority or posteriority of mind or matter, science (whether in its limited signification, or in its proper and extended sense, as known by the name Universology,) has nothing whatever to do. Science can hav nothing to do with anything which is open to discussion. It is only when a subject is taken from the realm of speculation, and relegated to that of knowledge, that it can come within the domain of science. The question here raised by Mr. Putnam as the test of Universology is not yet within the sphere of knowledge. It belongs entirely to speculativ philosophy, and science can therefore make no declaration whatever concerning it.

In making his statement respecting the operations of science, Mr. Putnam has departed very far from the bi-verbal definition. He but makes one of the matteristic school of philosophers who are continually uttering the word, and referring everything to it, without having, apparently, a conception of its import. "Science is king," they shout, fearing to use the word god. Yet a very god to them it is, and a god whose anthropomorphism is plain to all who will giv it close inspection. Indeed our ordinary matteristic and Spiritistic friends, there seems but little to distinguish from those within the religious ranks out of which they hav emerged. The Matterist (Materialist he calls himself, but this is a mistake) corresponds well with his Jewish prototype, who would hav but one God, and rejected as worthless the deities of other peoples. The name of this god is changed, but he himself remains the same. Science is his new cognomen, and under this appellation is ignorantly worshiped the very unknown god whom Paul, from the midst of Mars Hill, declared unto the Athenians. The Spiritist is polytheistic in his proclivities. He will not hav this god, call him by whatever name you will, to reign over him. He elevates the departed spirits of humanity to the thearchal rank, and upon them he seeks to shift the burdens that he himself should be man enough to bear. He calls upon them to manifest their presence to him, and even requires at their hands the procurement of the conditions which are necessary to such exposition. Then, with implicit faith in their omnipotence and good will, he throws himself into their arms, and calls upon them to provide, without any effort of his own, for his future, both in this life and that which is to follow. These, each firm and confident in the truth of his own philosophy and religion, then begin to cavil about the order of precedence to be given to their respectiv deities, and snarl at science itself because it will not take sides with either. Can we wonder that the Universologist, who has so much more important work to do, exclaims, "A plague on both your houses;" "All that we want is to escape from this hullabaloo, and be permitted to go on and demonstrate the latest and most important of all scientific discoveries?" If Mr. Putnam and those like him will take the trouble to examin Universology, without the aid of the colored spectacles which their prejudices hav furnished, they will, probably, in the course of time, see that they are now wasting their time upon things which are utterly insignificant when compared with the great work, in the performance of which they might be assisting.

John Storer Cobb.

Sept. 5, 1883.

A Freethinkers' Convention.

WESTERN NEW YORK, WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA, AND WESTERN OHIO.

The Rochester Freethinkers' Convention, and the other great Liberal conventions recently held in the West, hav aroused so much interest in the Liberal movement that it is thought best to keep the ball a-rolling in all parts of the country. We are pleased to notice that the New England people are soon to hold a great Freethinkers' convention, and it is thought best to hold one in the western part of New York state, to which will be invited the Freethinkers of Western Pennsylvania and Western Ohio.

The greatest railroad center in the vicinity of country above mentioned is the village of Salamanca. Railroads run out from this town in every direction. Seven lines of road center here. Salamanca has a good Opera House that will accommodate six or seven hundred people, and boarding houses and hotels sufficient to accommodate all who will attend the convention. And no place will charge over a dollar a day. The following large towns are near Salamanca: Rochester, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Erie, Meadville, Jamestown, Elmira, Hornellsville, Bradford, Titusville, Oil City, Franklin, and a hundred more small towns of from 1,000 to 3,000 inhabitants.

The Freethinkers from all these places can conveniently come together at Salamanca.

It is therefore proposed to hav a three days' Freethinkers' Convention at Salamanca, N. Y., to be held Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, the 4th, 5th, and 6th of January next. I earnestly request every Freethinker—and by Freethinker I mean Materialist, Spiritualist, or Free Religionist—within one hundred and fifty miles of Salamanca to write to me who will aid in making this proposed convention a great success.

H. L. Green.

Salamanca, N. Y.

Bishop Peck Talks in His Sleep.

At the request of a valued Western friend we print the following, because, as she says, no other paper will:

Earth Friends: When with you I was proud of the title you had bestowed upon me. The title of bishop pleased my vanity, and I received the homage of the church as my right, and felt that the church must be built up, and that the name of Christ must be sustained—not that I cared so much for souls, but the title was a synonym of power and grandeur.

But, friends, as you know, I passed from earth, and the church said, "He has gone to his reward." But let us lift the vail and see what that reward is. True, for many years I had preached Christ and him crucified, but I hav not done all that was in my power. I hav not used my best endeavors to raise the fallen or to relieve the needy, but with shame I say it. I hav been grasping. I hav exacted the last dollar which was allowed me for salary, whether the brethren were able to raise it or not. I hav not hesitated to accept the widow's mite, and I laid up of the world's goods to make myself a name. But, am I rich? am I great? No; far from it. On earth I never lived in as poor a home as I hav here, because I employed my time and talents in laying up riches on earth. Although I taught others, "Lay not up for yourselvs treasures upon earth," I practiced not what I preached. I see things in a different light now, and am in the condition of a man when financial ruin has overtaken him and everything has been swept away.

But I still liv and see that it is possible to retrieve the errors of earth; and, instead of sitting down in despair, I hav set myself dilligently to work to lay up for myself treasures in heaven, and hav made this confession as one of the steps which I must take. I find that instead of a home on high, with the blessed company of Jesus and his angels, I hav to remain on earth perhaps for many years, or until I hav retrieved the errors of earth life. The poor and fallen must be my care; the sick and those in prison I must visit. Friends, you hav not done with work when men say you are dead. You are ushered into a life of activities, and you can choose for yourselvs what your life-work shall be. But first you must be fitted for that work. You must be freed from the stains of earth; and I would say to my brethren, "Pratice what you preach."

Jesse T. Peck,
(On earth called Bishop).

"I am much struck—that is to say, pleased—with the widow Black," remarked a young curate to his bishop, and I think I'll propose marriage to her." "So I would," answered the elder divine, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "and next Sunday I'll come down and preach for you on the 'widow's smite.'"—Boston Courier.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY, Business Manager.

SATURDAY, - - - - OCTOBER 6, 1883.

☞WE hav quite a number of subscribers whose tab indicates that they hav not paid for their TRUTH SEEKER for the past year. To them we would respectfully say that the amount of their arrearages is needed, and we hope will be forthcoming soon.

Brag.

Ever since the Rochester Convention the churches hav been playing the game of brag. Their resources, according to the ministers, are unlimited, their membership includes all the earth, and some more, and their steady percentage of increase is beyond computation by any but lightning calculators. The two churches a day the Methodist church was building last year hav increased to from three to a dozen, according to who is telling the story; missionaries are so enthusiastic they sleep on the snow with the thermometer ranging from 60° to 70° below zero; the cannibals hav lost their liking for boiled preacher, and are rushing to join the church—in fact, Christianity is sweeping onward with a force as irresistible and overwhelming as Mohammedanism possessed when it overran all southern Europe. These tactics are rendered necessary, the pious people seem to think, by the fact that the Rochester meeting was so numerously attended and fully reported.

Now every intelligent observer knows that the churches instead of gaining adherents are losing—that is, the people now registered as communicants are losing interest in religion as exemplified in the Christian church, and are becoming Liberal. Beecher is a Congregational minister, yet he is as much an Infidel as Ingersoll. He rejects the creation, the fall of man, hell, and the atonement; and if any one who rejects these dogmas can be a Christian, there is nothing in the creeds to prevent Ingersoll being baptized to-morrow and receiving communion the next day. Heber Newton says that God did not write the Bible, yet he is an Episcopal rector in good standing in the church so far as outward appearances go. In fact, he is admitted to hav a little more brains than the old fogies who cling to the plenary inspiration dogma. Nearly every day the secular papers publish accounts of "Another Heretical Preacher!" until the matter has become so common that it ceases to excite remark. Real orthodoxy is a scarce article, not found in any churches outside of Presbyterian, Catholic, and Methodist circles. If the churches were gaining memberships, they would not be gaining Christians. They would be only enlarging the roll of social organizations, which appear to be what the church is evoluting into.

In proof of this view of the case we may cite the opinions of a few of the leading ministers of this city, gathered by the Tribune last Sunday. The Rev. Wm. Taylor is pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, and is a Congregationalist. His opinion is that "he would be a bold man who would announce himself satisfied with the progress of Christian work in this city during the past ten years. I cannot think the Protestant churches are increasing in proportion to the corresponding advance of the population." In response to the reporter's question as to whether, in his opinion, the Protestant and Catholic churches united had kept pace with the growth of population, he replied: "I doubt it; I would not say it. The establishment of a church or a mission is now attended with unusual difficulties." Treating the question of growth by immigration he said:

"On this subject Mr. Lewis Jackson, secretary of the City Mission Tract Society, who is probably better informed by an experience extending over years than any one, has presented a careful investigation of Christian work among us, in a recent report. He has given a page of statistics comparing the number of churches in the city and that of the population for a series of years extending over almost a century. In these figures the Roman Catholic as well as the Protestant churches are included. He shows that in 1830 there was one church to every 1,858 of the population; in 1840, one to every 1,840; in 1850, one to every 2,095; in 1860, one to every 2,344; in 1870, one to every 2,044; in 1875, one to every 2,139; in 1880, one to every 2,468. It is also shown that relativly to-day we hav really more church accommodation of all sorts than there was in New York eighty-two years ago. In addition new edifices hav often twice the seating capacity of the old, and usually a correspondingly large membership. This includes, as I said, the churches of the Roman Catholics, who in 1870 were in proportion to the Protestants as one to every nine, and in 1860 one to every seven, while in 1830 they were only one to every twenty-five. With these facts before me I cannot say that I am satisfied with the city's Christian work as keeping pace with its growth."

In the Methodist church, which maintains its orthodoxy as intact as can be expected, the situation is no more encouraging, if the opinion of Mr. James H. Lightburn, pastor of the Seventh-street Methodist Episcopal church is worth anything. He said to the reporter: "To your first question, whether Methodism is advancing in members, wealth, and strength, in proportion to the immense progress which the city is making, I am under the necessity of replying frankly in the negativ. The development of Methodism in New York falls below the general standard of increase."

The Universalist church, since it ceased to be progressiv—since it became orthodox instead of heretical—has the same story to tell. Its growth, according to the Rev. James Pullman, "has not kept pace, numerically, with the growth of the city's population," notwithstanding his statement that

"The liberalizing tendency of the times has affected our denomination to strengthen it. Whatever liberalizes the people sends them to liberal churches or into the open. The drift toward the sea of Positivism and Agnosticism has discovered to the Universalist church that it will not go there. It plants itself without a single question upon the authority as a divine teacher of Jesus Christ. This is not new with us, but it has been developed by the modern rationalistic tendency. We were in full sympathy long ago with the tide of Biblical criticism, both constructiv and destructiv, and it has developed our position. We are a Christian church. My personal experience is that within the last ten years there has been a strong and growing tendency toward fraternity between the ministers and people of the other denominations and the Universalist. There has been a decided change in our method of preaching doctrin; the old bitterness has pretty well passed away from theological controversy. Yet Universalism as a system of doctrin was never so strongly or clearly stated as it is to-day. The change has been that which has made us a positiv force for doing Christian work instead of mere reformers of theological doctrin."

It was but natural that people just emerging from, say Methodism or Presbyterianism, should stop awhile with the Universalists, but now that denomination is crystallized—fossilized—into orthodoxy, it ceases to attract, and consequently to grow. If the Universalists will start ahead, will become once more heretical, their organization will grow. It must keep in the van if it expects to lead. The divinity of Christ is only a stake around which that body moves. They will never get anywhere clinging to it.

The Unitarian clique has only three churches in the city, which Mr. Robert Collyer thinks are "doing fairly well; but none of them is very strong."

Considering these statements by ministers representing the several denominations, we think the recent boastings of several sensational pulpiteers is, to say the least, ill-timed. The church is losing ground in several ways. 1. Through the general advance of civilization, which makes a religion adapted to barbaric people seem out of place; 2. By a modification or practical abandonment of dogmas incompatible with the intelligence of the age; 3. By a rationalistic biblical criticism, which has destroyed the sanctity of the scriptures, and proved their falseness; 4. By scientific investigations and demonstrations that upset Christianity's foundations; 5. By the abandonment of the fundamental positions of the church by her most eminent preachers. No matter if a church here and there does gain a few members, these incontestable facts remain, and the few remaining orthodox preachers may as well admit it now as at any time. Liberal papers are multiplying; Liberal books are being read, and Liberal speakers are listened to by constantly increasing audiences. This indicates that the hold of superstition upon the country is weakening, and that sooner or later Christianity will hav been superseded by some religion more in keeping with the needs and knowledge of mankind. Evolution's changes are slow but sure.

Justice Only Partly Done.

The suit against the Catholic church by Archbishop Purcell's creditors has been decided by the Hamilton county district court, and forms a very notable event in American jurisprudence from the character of the parties involved. The failure of the archbishop is well remembered, for he left over 3,000 people penniless by his mismanagement of their funds. An appeal to the pope afforded no relief. His policy is to get all he can and keep all he gets. The assignee of the archbishop's estate, J. B. Mannix, then petitioned for an order of sale of all the property held in Mr. Purcell's name for the benefit of the 3,800 creditors. This property included orphan asylums, cemeteries, churches, schools, and every description of property for ecclesiastical use acquired since 1835, to the number of about 160 separate properties, one-third of them situated in Cincinnati, and the whole valued at from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. Mr. Mannix was assisted by Judge Hoadly, a Liberal, and now Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio. The decision has been awaited with great interest. The creditors were anxious to get their money, and the public is extremely desirous of knowing whether the Catholic church is to be allowed to gather millions from its dupes and then fail, and no redress possible. The finding of the court, epitomized, is:

"Did the archbishop hold this property individually, in part, or wholly as a trustee? And how far, in either case, is the property liable for his debts? Out of the nearly two hundred pieces of property held by the archbishop, fourteen were selected for this trial as being representativ of all. Nine of these were churches. The others were the cathedral, including the archiepiscopal residence and school, St. Mary's Seminary, the Cumminsville Orphan Asylum, and St. Joseph's Cemetery, old and new. The court found that in the case of the churches, although the title was in fee simple in Archbishop Purcell, yet they were built with money raised by members of different congregations; that the title was in the archbishop, by reason of the rules of the church, which in such a case as this the court is bound to regard; that the archbishop held the title only as trustee for the uses of the congregations, and that the property so held could not be subjected to the payment of debts contracted by the archbishop. In the case of the churches, the majority of the court found that the evidence showed that Archbishop Purcell had advanced some money to them, and that said churches were liable for that amount to the assignee. As to the cathedral and the cathedral school, they were erected by the archbishop, and paid for directly from the funds placed in his hands, except about $60,000, which was raised by subscription. The court held that, although the archbishop held the property in trust as he did other churches, yet to the extent of the amount he had advanced to them the assignee was entitled to recover the same, with interest, for the benefit of the creditors. The orphan asylum at Cumminsville was also decided a trust, not subject to sale, and the mortgage on it given by Archbishop Purcell to secure a creditor was declared of no binding force. The same view was taken as to St. Mary's Seminary, with an order for reference to a master to ascertain whether the archbishop had made advances to this property. As to the cemeteries, a majority of the court held that they were not dedicated to the public; that consecration did not amount to dedication, and that such portions as were not sold for burial lots could be sold for the benefit of the creditors. Judge Johnston dissented as to the property referred to a master for an accounting, and dissented wholly from the view that the cemeteries were not dedicated to the public and were held in trust by the archbishop."

This in effect forces the institutions that received money from Mr. Purcell to restore the amounts with interest, and even such portions of the cemetery as are not already sold may be disposed of and the proceeds applied to the relief of the archbishop's creditors.

This is just, so far as it goes, but it is only partial. The archbishop had money put into his hands in trust because he was a high church dignitary. The people did not giv it to him to be used to build churches. Common honesty demands, therefore, that the church hand it back to the depositors on demand. The institutions that received money from him should pass it over to the creditors; the balance should be paid from the exchequer of the Roman Catholic church. But that church proposes to appeal from the decision which asks her to pay back even a part!

To the unregenerate it looks suspicious to see a Great Moral Institution hiring lawyers to defraud penniless creditors.

J. K. STREET, of Waco, Texas, is now added to the long list of ex-reverends. He has been thrown out of the Methodist church for believing that all men would finally be "saved," and disbelieving that any one would be doomed to eternal hell-fire. He was also censured for preaching to a "Religious and Benevolent Association" of Waco, which numbers among its membership many more or less radical thinkers. What a mentally free people the Methodists are! How they must glory in their "liberty to think as they please!"

The Monument Fund.

We thankfully acknowledge the following additional subscriptions to the fund for erecting a monument to Mr. Bennett:

Previously acknowl'd,	$1174 46	W. H. Peck,	1 00
John Robertson,	1 00	H. Engelbrecht,	1 00
Samuel Freeman,	1 00	Mrs. Mary Peck,	75
L. P. Edholm,	1 00	D. E. Pendleton,	1 00
R. M. J. Vail,	1 00	Wm. McDonnell,	1 00
Thomas W. Higgins,	1 00	S. L. Highland,	1 00
A. K. Olds,	1 00	J. P. Palmer,	2 00
J. C. Shoafler,	1 00	Wm. Penfield,	1 00
Thomas Fryer,	1 00	Jacob Soble,	75
J. W. Scott,	1 00	John Hippert,	1 00
J. H. Collins,	1 00	Mrs. Grace Larson,	1 00
Sarah A. Haynes,	1 00
W. W. Walker,	1 00	Total,	$1197 96

Editorial Notes.

THE Rev. Mr. Overton, of McNutt, Ga., has censured the young men of his congregation for matrimonially addressing the young ladies on the "Sabbath day." If the boys do not teach that fellow to mind his own business while they attend to the girls, they do not deserve a sweetheart, much less a wife.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to hav a New England Freethought Convention every year similar to the New York State Association. This is an excellent idea, and we hope to see it carried out. There ought to be a thousand Liberals in New England who would attend, and that number would constitute a splendid gathering.

THE Brooklyn Baptist pastors held a conference this week, at which a paper was read by a Rev. J. B. Thomas on "The Failure of Protestantism." The essay was in the form of a lament that Rationalism had made such headway in this country. Dr. George W. Sampson coincided with him in asserting that Protestantism had failed.

SITTING BULL, the noted Indian fighter, has been "under conviction" to Romanism, but upon being informed that before he could be received into the church he would hav to giv up one of his favorit wives he "backslid," and his Christianity oozed out. What's the odds of a wife or two! Solomon had seven hundred, and isn't he in heaven?

THE building formerly occupied by a society calling itself the "Church of God," in Reading, Pa., has been converted into a schoolhouse. The room which once reverberated with idle prayers to a deaf and dumb unknowable will now be filled with childish voices reciting lessons of practical use. Would that every church in the world could be thus transformed!

THE Bible peddler whose duty it is to visit ships and supply the sailors with copies of the New Testament complains that he often finds among the mates an Infidel who is well read in scripture and who wants to argue the case. In such instances all the colporter can do is to "warn the men against him," regretting meanwhile that the law does not allow him to be burnt or drowned for his beresy.

C. C. MCCABE, commonly known as Chaplain McCabe, has the reputation of being able to talk and sing more money out of an audience and leave them "shouting happy" over it than any other man in the ministry, not even excepting Kimball, the noted "church-debt raiser." Judging from his speeches at the Illinois Annual Conference he can also tell more lies about Freethinkers than any other ministerial mountebank, not even excepting Joseph Cook.

A NEW sect has arisen in western Massachusetts, calling themselves Abelians. Their distinctiv tenet is that, as the world is so bad and everybody is totally depraved, good Christians should abstain from propagating their species. Their theology is Calvinism, and they would appear logical and kind in thus restraining the growth of more kindling wood for hell, for if this world is the abominable place that Calvinism states it is, the fewer children born into it the better, and the sooner the species is extinct the quicker will the devil find his occupation gone. All good Christians ought certainly to work for this end!

A CURATE at Wellinborough, Eng., having expressed the opinion that Mr. Bradlaugh was not respectable, that gentleman retorts in this wise in the National Reformer: "Is this kind of attack quite wise? Yesterday the Times reported the remand on heavy bail of one clergyman, to-day the same journal reports the arrest and committal of another, and the Bradford papers of this week tell me of the remand without bail of a prominent churchman, who was most activ in petitioning against me. I hav never used these columns as a Newgate calendar, but if I descended to the level of the Wellingborough curate, I could this week fill every page with records of church immorality during the past three months alone."

AT the Washington Avenue Baptist church, Brooklyn, the Rev. Emory J. Haynes preached last Sunday on the subject, "How many young men are there in Brooklyn? Some questions about them." He said that out of Brooklyn's population of 750,000 souls there were 150,000 young men between the ages of 17 and 25. The average attendance on church worship was about 100,000, out of which number the total attendance of young men was not over 15,000. Where, he asked, are the 135,000. Were not many of the young men in the concealed billiard parlors and card rooms on Sunday? Wherever the young men may be on Sunday, the Rev. Mr. Haynes may find consolation in one fact. Owing to the foresight of the clergy of Brooklyn and New York, the young men of either city are not exposed to the demoralizing influences of the theater, the art gallery, the museum, or the reading-room. If these places were open on Sunday Mr. Haynes might not hav to search the liquor saloons of his city for so many young men. If he finds satisfaction in this thought he has the Christian clergy to thank for it.

THE Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club hav issued a neat catalog of the publications in their library, which number several hundred. The books represented comprise scientific, biographical, Liberal, ethical, and miscellaneous, and hav been selected with able discrimination. As a guide for other societies which contemplate starting libraries, this catalog, which will be sent to any applicant addressing C. Stevens, 1310 St. Catherine street, Montreal, Canada, will prove valuable. This club maintains a reading-room open daily until 10:30 P.M., and the library is open for the exchange of books on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays. The chess, smoking, and conversation rooms are also open daily. The club invites the co-operation of all those who are in sympathy with the object of the organization, which is "to facilitate the association of those who hav at heart and hold dear that absolute freedom of thought and expression, which is the natural right of every rational being, to encourage the study of man in all his relations, and to seek to realize the truth in life, and so to aid in those movements that tend most to the improvement of the individual and of society, and to the unity and freedom of mankind."

THE pastors of the "Reformed Church of America" discussed co-education of the sexes at their meeting last Monday. The Rev. Dr. T. W. Chambers presided, and was the principal speaker. He argued against co-education, but favored an education of woman sufficient for her needs as a wife and cook. Co-education he considered against nature. Women differed from men in mind, body, and sphere. They did not possess the physical vigor required for the curriculum which men were accustomed to pursue, even if the education which men received were best for them to hav. Woman's genius, the speaker thought, did not run in the same direction as that of man. Her sphere was necessarily diverse. His is without, hers within. His empire is in the world's work, hers in the family. Co-education breaks down the barriers between the sexes and destroys the refinement in woman. In the informal discussion which followed most of the speakers agreed with Dr. Chambers. These ideas were commonly current from three hundred to a thousand years ago. In fact, the Christian worthies of those days went a little farther than Mr. Chambers, or even Dr. Dix. They said woman should hav no education at all. She was only God's after-thought for man's comfort, and if her husband knew a little something, that was sufficient. The church, as represented by Mr. Chambers, has certainly progressed a little.

GOV. BEN BUTLER of Massachusetts has a good joke on the clergy. When he was elected, Gov. Long, his predecessor in office, offered him his collection of cattle-fair speeches. Last fall Gov. Butler issued as his Fast Day proclamation the substance of that issued by Gov. Gore in 1809. Everybody remembers how the clergy attacked that proclamation. At the Bridgewater cattle fair lately, Gov. Butler referred to this matter as follows:

"You remember my immediate predecessor, Gov. Long. When I met him at North Easton, he was kind enough to offer me his cattle-show speeches. He said he had a fine collection of them, and if I would only take them I would get along at cattle shows very well. I declined, and after I did decline I was very glad on his account, because I found it wouldn't do for me to use his speeches. I had occasion to make a Fast Day proclamation, and, as I was a little driven for time, I used the proclamation of one of my predecessors, and the press tore that proclamation all to pieces, and said it wasn't fit for the dogs, because Gov. Butler issued it. Not only that, the clergymen took it up, and they riddled it all through Fast Day. Well, that taught me that I must not take any of my predecessors' speeches, and I hav gone on my own account ever since."

If Gov. Butler's proclamation had been an excerpt from the last will and testament of Jesus Christ, and the clergy had not recognized it, the result would hav been the same. It was not the document that was objectionable, but the writer himself, who is not popularly believed to be very favorably inclined toward humbugs.

Book Notes.

MR. TUCKER has sent us some copies of Michael Bakounine's "God and the State" to sell, and we shall be pleased to receive orders for them. The price is 15 cents.

J. E. REMSBURG'S "Life of Paine," has been translated into the Bengalee language of India. A second edition of his "Image Breaker" is soon to be brought out in the same language.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. H. S. LAKE, who spoke at the Michigan, Kansas, and Wisconsin State Conventions, will receive propositions for lectures for fall and winter months. Address her at Milwaukee, Wis.

J. E. REMSBURG gave a course of lectures last week in the Tabernacle at Decatur, Ill. Decatur was the scene of the "boy preacher's" famous revival last spring, and missionary work is greatly needed there.

THE annual meeting of the Kansas Liberal Union will be held in Forest Park, Ottawa, Kansas, on Saturday and Sunday, October 6th and 7th. Liberals are earnestly solicited to attend, as important business affecting the interest of Liberalism in the West will come before the meeting. Representativ Liberals from various parts of the state will be present. Good speakers are engaged and a pleasant reunion is anticipated. C. B. Hoffman is president of the union, and Annie L. Diggs, Secretary.

OUR colored brethren are holding a camp-meeting not far away, and one of them, holding forth from the text, "How old art thou?" said in his opening, "Brethren, this am a question that must be answered in the affirmativ."

Another Recruit.

Adirondack Murray has emerged from the obscurity of his Texan home and taken the lecture platform. His first appearance was here in New York last Sunday night. It is evident that he has progressed considerably in theology since he left the pulpit. He stands about with Beecher, but he has the advantage of being a much younger man and before he dies will undoubtedly rise to a higher plain than the Plymouth pastor now occupies. The Times givs the following abstract of his lecture:

"The question thrust itself on him at his study door, he said, whether what was put forth as the Word of God was right or wrong. The opportunity came five years ago when he left the ministry to consider it. He found that the thoughts of Jesus, were written years before the birth of the foundling boy Moses. He knew that races lived on the earth one hundred thousand years before Moses. They lived under equitable governments, were civilized, possessed arts now unknown, and built cities beside which modern ones appeared plain. Jewish books contained no knowledge of the past except traditions that were picked up and were mythical—traditions almost totally swallowed up by deepening ages.

"Mr. Murray enumerated a few things which Christian theology asked him to believe. First, that it was only six thousand years since the world was created. He found that for more than ten thousand times six thousand years human beings had existed on the earth. Second, that man was created out of clay and woman out of a rib. This was no better nor worse than a dozen other myths one thousand years older. Third, that in the earlier ages men lived for from five hundred to one thousand years. This was so opposed to the laws of structure and decay as to be incredible. Fourth, that four thousand years ago the world was inundated, and that two of every kind were put aboard a vessel no larger than ordinary ocean ships. This was absolutely beyond belief. Fifth, that at the bidding of a mortal man the sun and the whole solar system stood still. This, too, was incredible. The Old Testament was the work of a few painstaking Jews who wanted to preserve the history of their country and gathered together the scraps and traditions. One of them confessed that he borrowed from the pagans, and thus pagan fables became Christian doctrin.

"The doctrin of inspiration was not known to the primitiv church, but was progressivly worked up. As taught to-day it was not taught by Jesus to the disciples nor by them to the people. As it stood to-day it was a bold and gigantic fraud against the growth of thought, and the disposition of the soul. It was made up by church councils composed of ambitious scheming popes and priests, who packed the convocations as the political primaries were now, and often to spite the minority. Progressiv thought objected to the whole body known as dogmatic theology. Men were no longer tortured by theology. The laity were taking the place of priests and letting in rays of light. If the fog was swept away the sea was left. If the clouds were swept away the sky was left. Sweep away the fogs and clouds from the dome of Christianity and God was left. Him men would obey, trust, and love, and meet what was called death as the birds greeted the sunlight. Then tradition would be first a curiosity of religion, and afterward a horrid relic of barbarism."

THE National Reformer records some very interesting so-called mesmeric experiments performed at Newcastle, England. Owing to a correspondence carried on in the Newcastle Daily Chronicle, a committee of gentlemen was formed, and Mr. W. J. Grey, notary, undertook to present a bank check, if a sensitiv, under proper conditions, could read blindfolded the number of the check. Mr. Ogle, mesmerist, accepted this offer, and the conditions were agreed on by the committee. The subject employed by Mr. Ogle is known as "Dick the Pit Lad." Mr. Ogle mesmerized him, and he was put through a number of mesmeric tests such as singing, being compelled, while blindfolded by a handkerchief, to stop with a wave of the hand, and so forth. The check test, however, involved more stringent conditions. His eyes were completely plastered up with gummed paper by Mr. Ogle, and this was covered with other paper and surmounted by a thick handkerchief bound tightly around his head. Mr. Grey produced his check; the numbers on the corner were folded in a certain position and the check was handed to Mr. Ogle in a way that absolutely prevented the experimentalist from seeing the numbers. The latter were held about two feet away from the sensitiv, at an elevation almost on a level with his brow, and in that position he was expected to exercise his marvelous power. There was a long pause, undisturbed by a single movement on the part of the audience. Then the voice of the pit lad was heard—"There is a crease at the commencement; I cannot make out the first number." The note was handed back to the chairman, and, after the crease had been smoothed down, it was again placed in front of the blindfolded young man. "2 1 7 2 0 6," he remarked. The signal that the reading was correct was given by Mr. Grey himself applauding, a step that was followed by others throughout the hall. In the second test—the number of the date—the sensitiv was scarcely so correct, as he made out the numbers to be 4883, instead of 1883. He qualified his assertion, even before it was made, by the remark that he thought the first number was 4, but he was not quite sure. The test was at this point considered complete; the reading of the numbers representing the amount was not insisted on, and it was generally allowed that Mr. Ogle's subject had done all that could possibly be expected from him.

A PREACHER remarked one Sunday that it was said that Liberalism is creeping into all the churches. "If that is so," he continued, "I hope it will soon strike the contribution boxes."

An Explanation and Defense.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Some of the Radicals hav been shocked at reading Col. Billings's terrible book entitled "The Crimes of Preachers," and hav regretted that such a collection of facts should be published under Freethought auspices. They think that the secular press should be left to do the scavenger work of journalism by showing up the amours and other evil practices of the clergy and church-members; and that the Radical press should employ itself in a more tasteful way. I hav had such feelings myself, and hav, therefore, kept Col. Billings's book in my private drawer, where no one would see it. But further reflection has led me to change my mind, so that, if I had the means, I would publish a cheap edition of the work, and send a copy of it to every one of the 70,000 clergymen of the country, and to every lawyer, judge, doctor, teacher, and every other person who had brains enough to comprehend the reason why. The church has an astonishing representativ of her clergy and private members in all the penitentiaries and prisons of the country. Scarcely a paper do I open but it seemingly chuckles over the case of some preacher, or Sunday-school superintendent, that has gone astray from the path of good morals. I think it is nothing more than fair to say that no Radical, who has a good opinion of human nature and wishes to promote the honor and happiness of his fellow-men, can take any pleasure in reading the instances, so often occurring, of clerical lapses and rogueries of church-members. Then why, it may be asked, take the newspapers, from Dan to Beersheba, to gather up these cases and compile them into a book, and publish them to the world? This is a fair question and my answer to it is as follows:

The clergy all claim to be commissioned embassadors of Jesus Christ, called of God, because of their peculiar fitness and holiness of character, to lay down the terms of salvation to sinners, and to beseech them to be reconciled to God. The church-members all profess to be saints, converted and regenerated men. They walk with God. They sustain such a relation to God that they "cannot sin because they are born of God." They hav overcome the world, for "who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God?" "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but keepeth himself; and that wicked one (the devil) toucheth him not." The burden of the pulpit every Sunday is: "Come to Jesus and become an inheritor of the promises. Come into the church, for it is the ark of safety not only from the wrath of God in the future world, but from all sin in this. Your natural moral strength is but weakness; accept the grace of God by joining the church, for by his grace you can do wonders in holy living. If you repent, and confess Christ before men, he will confess you at the last day, and he is bound by his promis not to allow you to go into temptation and commit sin, but to preserve you to the end."

Everybody knows that the preceding paragraph is a sample of the teaching of the New Testament, and forms the staple of every Sunday sermon.

Now, when a preacher who tearfully and repetitiously talks in this way from his pulpit on Sunday, leaves his own wife and children on Monday, and runs away with some other woman, Col. Billings takes no pleasure in the fact, and only publishes it to show to the world that the popular religion, with all its pretensions to being a safeguard against sin, and with its devil and hell fire to frighten the people from transgression, has no sure effect whatever in keeping even its own ministers and professors from the most abominable delinquencies. We Radicals hold that a man's self-respect, and natural sense of what is right and wrong in all the relations of life, furnish a better security against his transgressing the law of good morals than his leaning upon an imaginary God and savior, and depending upon the grace, or supernatural strength, which the church offers him. If weeping were in order, Col. Billings has a tear in his eye to shed over every church-member who is hung for murder, or goes to the penitentiary for some other crime; and also for every preacher who cracks up the grace of God in the pulpit on Sunday as a preventiv to sin, and then gets drunk, or, like the sons of the priest Eli, commits fornication with the sisters of the church. His object in these exposures is not to gratify a love of scandal, or to injure a class of men who from their high profession of holiness invite criticism, but to show the absolute worthlessness of the popular religion as a moral and restraining force. Nay, more; he shows that the church, making allowances for the good people that are in it, is nevertheless, as an organization, a sham, a delusion, and a snare; that it is, and from its own history always has been, a harbor and house of refuge for hypocrisy and scoundrelism of all kinds; and that the sooner it and its creed are abated as nuisances upon the earth, the better for the cause of sound morals.

Then let Col. Billings go on in the terrible work of compiling from the secular press all the crimes, not only of the clergy, but of their pious dupes, the church-members; for every wickedness perpetrated by religious persons is an incontrovertible proof of the impotency, or inability, of their imaginary God to fulfil his promises to keep them from sin; and it is also a conclusiv proof of the hypocrisy and wickedness of the whole church system which teaches that men are safer in their morals when dandled in the lap of the church, than when each one stands on his own legs, and his own responsibility, and fights the battle of life in his own strength. It is not so much the clergy and their crimes which Col. Billings aims the shafts of his exposure at, as it is the falseness and danger of the church which makes them what they are. To hunt down preachers, and take pleasure in showing up their shortcomings to a vulgar and jeering world, would indeed be a small business for a Radical to engage in. But in this age of inquiry, to show from the transgressions of the church, and especially her clergy, the emptiness of ecclesiasticism as heaven's wisest and best means to make men do right, is the work of a philosopher and a reformer.

Vindex.

The Situation in Utah.

From Harper's Weekly.

It is more than a quarter of a century since the Republican party placed in its platform for the first national canvass in which it was seriously engaged a spirited denunciation of polygamy, as, with slavery, one of the twin relics of barbarism, which it was the duty of the republic to restrain or to abolish. For more than twenty years the Republican party has been in possession of the government, and slavery, by far the more formidable and extensiv of the two evils, has been abolished, and has become, even as to its most serious effects, as much a thing of the past as the law of entail or the colonial aristocracy. Yet Mormonism, with its peculiar institution, is in numbers and apparently in unity and energy, more powerful than it was when the ardent leaders of the young Liberal party launched at it their bitter and sounding condemnation. Brigham Young, the great leader, has departed, and many of the apostles and disciples of his strange religion hav followed him. But "the church" has grown apace; its members hav increased and multiplied and peopled the fertil valley and hills their leader selected for their home; thousands of converts, men and women, from the hardiest races of Europe, hav been brought across the seas; universal suffrage, in which even the women—the ones obviously the most degraded by polygamy—hav shared has only increased the influence, the disciplin, and apparently the stability of the Mormon organization. Nor has the Republican party failed to try to carry out its pledges of hostility to the disgusting evil against which it declared war at the outset of its brilliant career. In 1862, in the midst of the most trying difficulties of the war for the Union, Congress paused to enact a law which made polygamy an offense against the statutes of the United States, punishable by fine and imprisonment. Later laws were passed to secure juries unprejudiced in favor of the crime, by whom those accused of it should be tried. And finally in the spring of 1882, a law was enacted intended to take political power from the hands of polygamists, disfranchising them, forbidding them to hold office or act as judges of election, and providing for a commission to conduct elections in the territory of Utah in accordance with these requirements.

This is usually called the "Edmunds law," after the eminent jurist and legislator who was its chief champion in the Senate, and who is reputed to hav been its author. Whatever experience, acuteness, trained judgment, and perfect sincerity of purpose could do to insure an efficient law may be assumed to hav been contributed to this one. Under it two elections hav been held in Utah, one in the fall of last year for a delegate in Congress, and one in August of this year for a territorial legislature. The second was by far the more important, because the Utah Commission continues in office, by the terms of the Edmunds law, only until the "legislativ assembly of said territory shall make provision for filling the offices"—namely, election offices which the commission was appointed in the first instant to fill. The result of the election is a practical failure of the law to accomplish its purpose. Those actually guilty of polygamy, it is believed, were excluded from the polls and from the legislature, but of those who voted and of those who were chosen to the legislature a large majority were in cordial sympathy with polygamy as a religious institution, were wholly under the influence of the leaders who preach and practice that institution, and can be relied on to upset any calculations as to the extirpation of polygamy by disfranchisment or by exclusion from office. The population of the territory is about 144,000, of whom 70,000 are females. About 100,000 are nativs, and the remainder are of foreign birth. In this population, at present, the Mormon church reigns supreme. Careful observers believe that its rule is strengthened by the laws which hav been passed to break it down. The policy of the government is looked upon to be one of persecution, and those at whom it is aimed are regarded as martyrs, and the wrongs as well as the blood of the martyrs hav proved to hav been the seed quite as much of a false church as of a true one.

Yet in spite of the apparent failure of this last and heaviest blow directed at the offensiv feature of Mormonism, there is much evidence that polygamy is doomed, and that though the immediate effect of recent action has been to strengthen it, it is slowly but surely giving way. The railway has opened up the secluded retreat of the Mormons to the enterprise, not to say to the greed of the frontier population which presses toward it from both sides of the continent. The forces of free discussion, of trade, of the press, and of political activity are working. The Mormons are not in fact, and cannot long believe themselvs to be, a people physically "set apart." The number of them who actually practice polygamy is believed to be growing relativly smaller. Even when it was most common it was far more of a business arrangement than a religious one, and passion had even less to do with it than superstition. Now, as an economic institution, it is far less adapted to the mode of life which the Mormons are being gradually forced to lead, the activ, varied, commercial, and industrial life which is indirectly shared even by the tillers of the soil, than it was to the purely agricultural and semi-patriarchal existence which prevailed before mines and railways and trade invaded the chosen land. Polygamy has never been practiced in any considerable community not either agricultural or pastoral, or else one in which the general labor was servil; and as the Mormons are forced by the competition of the restless "gentiles" into the numerous activities of American life, they will be compelled to abandon the awkward and costly family arrangement necessary to polygamy. They may make a violent struggle, and polygamy may go down in blood, as slavery did, but it is as surely condemned by the resistless economic laws of modern society as was its "twin."

A Modern Daniel.

The Rev. Garvy Bradsted, a local Methodist preacher, who served a congregation at New Egypt, N. J. somewhat amazed his Sunday morning hearers some weeks ago by the anouncement that on Sunday, Sept. 8th, he would die a natural death, and join his dead brother in heaven. He stated that the brother had been killed in battle during the late war. Ten years ago he dreamed that he had met that brother in heaven, and was then informed that in just ten years he would meet him again, and would never return to earth again. The preacher then bade his congregation a final farewell, assuring them that at 10 o'clock the following Saturday night he would be called to join his departed relativ.

So impressed were many people with the solemnity of the preacher's manner that about one hundred members of the church gathered at his residence some time before the fateful hour. Mr. Bradsted was seated in a room opening upon the street. The door was open and the preacher could be seen by all who had gathered about. Evidently he was awaiting with confidence the approach of death. His head rested upon his arms. As the hour approached the crowd began to get nervous, and a portion of it appeared to expect that the Angel of Death would appear in person and carry off their pastor bodily. Ten o'clock however passed, but nothing happened, and the preacher still livs. He thinks he has made a mistake in the day and hour.

The Stuff to Make Men of.

An exchange says: "The youngest son of Massachusetts's famous war governor appears to be made of heroic stuff. According to the Pittfield Journal he is working for a local telephone company as repairer and lineman To be able to put on overalls and a shabby coat and visit, as a mechanic, residences where he has been a welcome guest at full-dress balls and receptions, shows Mr. Andrew to hav nerve and determination enough to win success in the higher ranks of business he has adopted." The young man's grit is indeed remarkable in this age of dudism and cigareticide. When a young man makes the best of the circumstances which surround him, when he will take off his coat and engage in honest labor, not afraid to soil his hands, he is the man that will be able to successfully meet any emergency. He is one of nature's noblemen. A young man who by force of circumstances has courage enough and strength of character enough to unhesitatingly put on the garb of a mechaanic and enter the house to work as a mechanic where in days gone by he has entered in full dress, one of a company of wealthy young men, that young man is composed of the stuff that makes men. He is an honor to himself his family and his country. He has force of character that givs him true independence that laughs at what his former companions may say, or at their snubs and jeers. He is bound to rise in the world, and nine out of ten who hav this independence liv to see the day when those who snubbed them will be glad to accept aid —the bread of charity from the hand they refused to take a few years before because it had the callous of honest toil, which is far more honorable and beautiful than the glove upon the hand which is not earned by the wearer. When a young man is in a position to afford all the fine personal adornments; when he has money enough at his command to liv without work, he certainly has a right to spend it as best pleases him. But if to this there be added that force of character that will enable him to step into ranks of the honest mechanic should a time come when his money takes unto itself wings and flies away, he is indeed a man whom the whole world should be proud to honor. There are, however, too many ten dollar a week young men who try to assume the airs of millionaires. If these young men would stop for an instant and think of the utter impossibility of success in such an attempt they would soon change their course, as they would realize that such is not the stuff men are made of.

Letters from Friends.

WHITEWATER, WIS., Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: As I am way behind I must remit without longer delay. Inclosed you will find $1.25 for six months. THE TRUTH SEEKER is growing better all the time, and I like it. It is my best friend. I think more of it than I did of the Bible when I was a skinflint Christian. But it is no wonder THE TRUTH SEEKER is as good as it is, since its editor and its writers hav a whole host of educated devils at their elbows instructing them, and inspiring every word they write. Under such circumstances it ought to be the best paper published, and I think it is.

O. O. LEA.

MR. WINTER IS STILL A MATERIALIST.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Here are some pleasant remarks to Mrs. E. Heddon. This lady, like many others, is very emotional. Her mind seems to be fixed on just what she would like, and not on what nature proclaims to be positiv. Now, madam, nature hath given you a beginning which is known to you as life; but that life which you possess was not yours one moment before your first breath was drawn, and although you hav been breathing for a considerable time, it doth not imply that your breathing will never cease. Madam, it will cease surely at the moment of death, for your lungs will die, and none can breathe without lungs. Life, no doubt, is pleasant to you—it is to millions, including myself; but the longing desires of human emotion change not the laws of nature. Madam, we are mortal—nothing more. We once began to liv, and by the inexorable mandate of nature's law we all must die, and that death, madam, is final, whether we believe it or not. You (perhaps) say such ideas and conclusions sadden the mind. Not so, madam; quite the reverse. Death is man's best friend. It relieves us from every ache, every pain, and every sorrow. It places us beyond the reach of false friends and malignant foes—in a word, it is a cure for all the ills of life. We quietly sleep beneath the sod, or perhaps beneath the rolling wave. It is all one; life is over, never more to return. We are as water spilt on the ground; it cannot be gathered up again, and the place which knows us now will know us no more forever.

No heavens allure the man of sense,
Or hells produce one fear.
He sleeps in everlasting peace,
And none need shed a tear.

Religious creeds hath made more fools
Than any sum could tell;
And silly mortals, to this day,
Believe in heaven and hell.

Life alone calls out such faiths,
And leads astray the throngs;
But death disperses all such freaks,
And blots out all the wrongs.

Madam. Otto Wettstein is more than right; he is faithful to truth. The sure way to be happy is to become a sincere Materialist, and I hope you will be one. Madam, all this is said in friendship.

THOMAS WINTER.

LEBANON, OR., Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In order that justice may be done to what I claim to be an injured party, I wish to giv you the truth as I saw and heard it.

Last May I read a communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER from Thomas Burke, being a letter from his friend, A. J. Prichard, stating that he had found rich gold deposits on the tributaries of the Coeur d'Alene river, and on June 4th I started for the gold field, and got in on the 14th, and found things unsettled. There was no prospecting that I would call prospecting. The water was too high to work to advantage, and all that were there, like myself, had only pan, pick, and shovel to prospect with; no means of making pumps or buckets to sink a hole, and the only means was by drain ditch, which was slow, and I do not consider that we could or did giv it a thorough test. I did all I could in three weeks, and came home. But I found gold in every place I prospected, and got one dollar in one pan of dirt washed out, it being one piece; but the gold is very light, and from indications it came but a short distance from the lead, being very porous and rough. I do not wish to be understood that I could get a dollar to every pan of dirt, for some pans I would not get a color, and the majority of the pans washed I would only get what miners would call a good color.

Now what I wish to say in justice to Mr. Prichard is this: I believe him to be an honest man, and that he wanted to help the Liberals to what he supposed to be a good thing, and did it with pure love for the Liberal cause. But I think he was mistaken. He had prospected on the high rim rock along the streams, and the gold being of a light quality it will lodge on the high rock, whereas if it was of heavy quality it would be found more in the bed of the stream. That is my experience in mining, and I am satisfied that there is or will be some good mines there that will pay well.

There was a party of about seventy-five men that came from Montana, who were not Liberals in any sense of the word. I was told by good authority (not Pritchard) that they acted like crazy men, and that they wanted to hang Mr. Prichard before they got on Prichard Creek, and wanted to burn his cabin, and they would hav done so only for a party of Californians that interfered in behalf of Mr. Pritchard. They helped themselvs to his provisions, and when I was coming out I was told by a soldier who was stationed at the telegraph station on the summit that the same party that wanted to hang Prichard stole his provisions, blankets, gun, pistol, and belt. There may hav been some good men among them, but I think they were a bad posse.

I lost my time and expenses going and coming, but I do not blame Mr. Prichard, as I think he acted in good faith, and believed all he wrote in his letter to Mr. Burke, and that he wanted to do his Liberal friends a favor. I hope he may yet find his fortune, for he deserves it.

I hope you will giv this a place in your valuable paper that justice may be done both Mr. Pritchard and Mr. Burke.

A. ERVIN.

ORANGE CITY, FLA., Aug. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes our duty, unpleasant as it may be, to chronicle another brutal assault on a spiritual medium while plying his vocation.

Last April, Geo. P. Colby, trance and test medium, and speaker, was engaged to giv a course of lectures in Michigan City, Indiana. His usual custom is, after speaking, to giv tests from the platform, and they invariably prove tests indeed.

In this instance, after the close of a lecture (while still unconscious), he described and gave the name of a young lady who had died in the place, sometime previously, and said, "The spirit says she died a victim to medical ignorance." It is needless to say that the medium knew nothing whatever of the circumstances. The lecture was given on Tuesday evening, and Mr. Colby remained in town until Saturday evening, when, after the lecture, he went home with a friend, living about two miles, or two and a half, out in the country.

The physician who had attended the young lady in her last illness, a Dr. Mullen, a resident of the city, although not present at the lecture, had, in the mean time, heard of the communication. On the Saturday night in question, having provided himself with a cane or cudgel, and taking, as companion and assistant in the base act he was about to commit, a negro of desperate character, a state prison convict, proceeded to the house where Mr. Colby was stopping for the night, although the rain was pouring in torrents.

Arriving at the house, he remained in his carriage, and sent the negro to the house to inquire for Mr. Colby, saying there was a gentleman out in the carriage wishing to see him. But Mr. Colby's guides warned him not to go, and he was not unprepared for what followed. (I should here state that it was now between eleven and twelve o'clock at night.) The M.D. himself then went to the house, and requested to see Mr. Colby, giving his name as Mr. DeLoss, of Chicago, who was connected with some paper in that city, and began making inquiries after some friend in spirit life, as if he was really sincere, when he suddenly sprang upon Mr. Colby, seized him by the collar and exclaimed, "My business out here was to waylay you, and by God, I mean to kill you," aiming a blow at him with all his strength, with his cudgel; but at the instant Mr. Colby's collar gave way and he escaped the blow, which fell with such force on the door casing where he stood as to leave a deep indentation.

Had he received the full force of it, the aim of the villian would probably hav been accomplished, and murder in fact, as it was in heart and intention, would hav been effected.

Mr. Colby had him arrested, and endeavored to hav him indicted before the grand jury, but failed, presumably from the sympathy of the prosecuting attorney, politically, with the defendant, and the jurors doubly sympathizing with him, many of them being members of the same church (Catholic), and belonging to the same political party as the defendant.

He is now prosecuting the doctor in a civil suit at his own expense, and we all know what that means.

We hav known Mr. Colby personally for about ten years, and for a part of the time he was an inmate of our house, and we know what we affirm when we say the most startling spirit phenomena hav occurred through his mediumship; besides, his power of giving clairvoyant tests while deeply entranced and wholly unconscious can never be excelled by any. These things we know to be genuin, occurring under conditions that precluded the possibility of fraud.

We call upon Spiritualists everywhere to come to the assistance of this persecuted medium. Let us, by preserving and protecting these gifted workers for the spirit world, keep the golden gates ajar. Let such bullying, murderous villians as Mr. Colby's assailant be warned in time to keep hands off!

MR. AND MRS. T. D. GIDDINGS.

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO, Sept. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The two copies of the fourth volume of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," with pamphlets ordered, were received all right. I was extremely well pleased, in reading "Letters from Friends" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 8th inst., to see that some one has at last taken up the pen in behalf of the children of Freethinkers. Thanks, Brother Hacker: I hope you will never lay your pen aside until something is done by our Liberal papers for our children, and that you will liv to see not only a youth's department in every Liberal paper in the land, but a Freethought paper for the young published weekly.

I fully indorse every word of our venerable friend's letter, and I think I but echo the opinions of hundreds of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER when I say that we should hav a youth's department in all of our Liberal papers, to help to counteract the mind-dwarfing effects of the partial Christian education our children receive at the common schools and from other sources.

It is easier by such means to fortify the minds of the young against the baneful influences of priestcraft and superstition, than by our periodical literature and lectures to convert those of maturer years from the ranks of superstition. Prevention is better than cure.

All parents are not qualified to impart the necessary instruction to their children as it should be, however willing and anxious they may be that they should be so instructed.

There is no lack of talent among our recognized teachers to supply this want. Had this branch of our work—the Freethought education of the young—not been so long neglected. I feel confident that the result to our cause would hav been much greater to-day, intellectually and numerically.

In a great many parts of the country we are so scattered that it is impossible to hav Freethought Sunday-schools, and we should hav the next best thing—a youth's department in all our Freethought papers.

Through all the proceedings of the Freethinkers' convention lately held in Rochester not one of the many speakers that addressed the convention (so far as I hav seen by the reports) raised his voice in behalf of the children.

Freethinkers ignore the fact that the children of to-day will be the men and women of to-morrow. Not so our Christian friends, who by their Sunday-schools and Sunday-school literature are able to keep the ranks of creed-bound superstition ever filled. I venture the assertion that had our Freethought papers devoted a due proportion of their space to the radical education of the children of their readers, even for the few years that the majority of these papers hav been published, to-day our school books would not be filled with extracts from that fountain of obscenity, and so much of our children's and the school teachers' time spent daily in worse than idleness—in prayer.

If, as our venerable friend says, Liberals prepare not the virgin soil by planting, cultivating, and keeping it free from weeds, they cannot expect to reap the reward they should. No Liberal, I think, will care to say that our children should not be provided with antidote to the moral poison they are daily forced to imbibe. And to whom must great numbers of parents look to provide this antidote but to our leaders and teachers, through the medium of our Liberal papers? And the absence of such proves a remissness of duty no less upon our leaders than upon parents.

Who can estimate the great loss our cause has sustained through such remissness in not having a portion of our papers devoted to and filled with mental food suited to the capacity of children?

I had intended to refer to other matters of interest, but the length of this letter admonishes me to defer this work until I write again. Hoping that Brother Hacker's letter will bear its legitimate fruit, I remain Yours fraternally, D. NEILSON.

WHITE CLOUD, MICH., Sept. 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 that I am pleased to be able to remit to THE TRUTH SEEKER as a motor to the enlightenment of the world. I also send you a trial subscriber and a list of names which I think may become regular on your subscription books after a slight acquaintance with the paper.

In canvassing for THE TRUTH SEEKER I find many men who would indorse it were their wives not obstinate and unwilling that it should be read in the family. In my experience this is one of the greatest barriers to the advancement of Freethought. Men in their hurry in looking after the indispensables of life naturally cast over to materfamilias the care of children's manners and morals; the true and tender mother becomes nervously anxious as to her responsibilities, and perchance in the mean time not forgetting the ways of her own mother, and even grandmother, cannot think of running any risks by allowing any new teachings to be thrown in the way of her darlings. Thus she makes a mistake in trying to avoid a mistake.

When will woman dare to lift up her head and try to reason out her rescue from the enthralled and priest-frightened state of mind she has so long labored under, and allow the world to move on? There are but few men who would not rather forego the reading of a favorit pamphlet, or the advocacy of a true inwardness, than endure sour looks at the dinner-table. I speak from the fact, or at least supposition, that woman as a class, including those of both pro and anti Christian sentiment of the more consequential parts of the world, claim they are debarred from certain natural rights that they would obtain could there be proper amendments to both both political and religious customs.

And now that these rights, if obtained, may be benefits, certainly the best use and application of them should be studied. Truly, no one would think to take a hand in the game at politics nowadays without knowing the innings and outings of most of its pet schemes. Would the ideas of only the one side help one out in this? And, too, ladies of Christian bent of mind who would put God in the Constitution must needs study the pros and cons of both politics and religion before they could expect to grace a plane in society in common with men.

Had they done this their demands would be fair and the chances of a forward movement in the world brightened. The Infidel side of religion then would hav been scanned, and justly stand or fall by its merits. I think it can be safely asserted that with the female side of society rests the long arm of the leverage that religious superstition has upon the world. Let the reason for this be what it may. If this is not the case, why do the intolerable clergy ever and anon so haunt this ingress to society?

We trust woman may one day realize her true relation to the world and cast a careful glance upon either side that she standeth not in her own light. and did we feel competent to advise we should recommend that the few ladies who now feel quite sure they see clearly the world's requirements make a specialty of conferring with their own sex, that they may perchance by this mode effect the greater good.

Please excuse me, Mr. Editor, as I do not often draw upon your time, this being the first since the sad news of Mr. Bennett's death reached me. We reluctantly say, He is gone. Let us not too much openly mourn his loss, lest our Christian friends take the greater chance to triumph. Mr. Bennett was one of nature's noblemen, notwithstanding the opinions of fools and the words of designing falsifiers. I inclose $1 toward his monument, hoping to do homage to his memory. And, by the by, as I close, I must say I fail to see any benefit to our cause from an apparent desire in the various isms to convince each other of their favorit beliefs, and to scorn opposing sentiments. In what a plight will we be to meet the common enemy, if we spend lavishly of our means and strength in contention among ourselvs during our march to the front?

It is possible that either Christianity or Freethought, before many years, will take a heavy retrograde from its present status. Which shall it be? Spiritualism claims to be the most vehement of all the late isms. I would like to ask if in its arrogance it chooses to meet the common enemy alone? I trust Mr. Winter has not forsaken his ancient valor in dealing out to the so-called clergy what all reasonable judgments would style necessaries—that is, if I am correct, "A little more grape, Captain Bragg."

We deem THE TRUTH SEEKER still highly relishable and indispensable. If its late editor was noted for dealing heavy blows at noonday upon the very doors of the musty old citadel of religious superstition with the battering-ram of truth, its present editor excels in removing, fox-like, the quicksands from underneath its walls, that at the appointed time all may tumble in one lasting ruin. O ye Fates! hasten the time, and may man damn the clergy. Adieu.

Yours, D. E. PENDLETON.

CATHLAMET, W. T., Sept. 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Finding you hav been loth to appreciate my timid yet somewhat ambiguous hint, I hav now no other alternativ but to respond to your generous confidence. Although at first I did think of having a lull in order to be thrown entirely on my own resources with a view, were it possible, to make matters doubly sure, that I had not been in too great haste to discard the crafty dogmatism of my youthful years, yet, on second thought, I hav come to the firm conclusion that such would be an utter waste of valuable time, for having tried the experiment times without number, not the faintest shadow of my error (if error it be) looms in the distance. And while reason, nature's supreme guide for humanity, is left me, it is emphatically impossible other than to follow my honest convictions, lead me to whence they may; follow it I must, yet with perfect complacency. Some people assert that the human absolutely is not a responsible being. Be that as it may, too well we know that in our sweet experience through life each has to bear the brunt of his or her actions, should they presume to transgress the laws of their existence. And while the supposition apparently contains some semblance of truth, we are at best but left to mourn that so cruel a fate should hav ever ushered us into being should the supposition hav a leg to stand upon.

Our sister Elmina, I observe, in a recent contribution to THE TRUTH SEEKER, makes in my humble opinion a very bold assertion, without adequate proof, I fear, to sustain her therein. To all appearances, I admit, death does end all. But then in our every-day routine of life, how often and again are we not deceived by appearances, wide awake as well as when sound asleep, and who, without infallible proof to the contrary, can say that death (so called) is an exception to the general rule? Being no Spiritualist, never having experienced in any manner or shape any bona fide evidence to convince me of a future life, nevertheless it seems highly unwarranted on the part of those in my estimation who assert the same to be impossible without at the same time adducing infallible proof for their say so. Life in the absolute, methinks, could never hav had a beginning, and if so, how shall it be possible for it ever to hav an end? Moreover, can such at any time be added to or taken from?—another problem too deep, alas! for human kind. In my opinion, Liberals everywhere could but add new laurels daily to their truth seeking efforts would they, while as but yesterday so many of us hav got out of the frying-pan, now keep themselvs from falling into the fire, and leave that insufferable dogmatism to the church militant and their hollow anointed.

The lithograph of our late lamented and worthy chief, D. M. Bennett, came duly to hand, and which I am more than pleased with, it being beautifully executed, and which no Liberal who has not had the pleasure of witnessing the original ought to be without.

So the colonel has again been interviewed. May it go on without ceasing, as his sledge-hammer criticisms never fail to make the most triumphant and visible breach in the strongholds of the enemy as could well be imagined, so much so that they that are blind should they never recover their sight will only hav themselvs to blame. H. A. ELLIOT.

HINSDALE, N. H., Sept., 17, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been very much interested in the discussion in THE TRUTH SEEKER between Mr. Putnam, Mr. Andrews, Mr. Wakeman, and others, on the definition and true meaning of science.

The claim of Mr. Andrews is the most extraordinary, so far as I know, ever propounded.

If I rightly apprehend his statements, he claims not merely to hav discovered a new system of philosophy which will restate in a new form the old ideas of the origin of things, and their most general arrangement, but to hav discovered a new and universal science, in the rigorous sense of that term, capable not only of classifying the sciences with absolute accuracy, but of entering into the body of each of the sciences and laying bare the principles which control the facts there, thus binding all the sciences into one common science; so that in some way all the sciences may be studed at once; this, I repeat, is the most wonderful pretense ever made.

Still, Mr. Andrews seems to me to be a man who understands himself remarkably well; and that fact raises a presumption that he may hav what he claims. If that should prove to be so, it would be a great pity if we should be hindering and embarrassing him, in exhibiting his discovery, by spending time beforehand in discussing what we may suppose it to be, whereas it may prove to be wholly different. If what he claims is true, it is of exceeding importance—more importance, even—for us to learn it, than for him to teach it.

Such a discovery, it seems to me, would revolutionize all human affairs; and the whole system of education first of all. For one, I am exceedingly anxious to hear from Mr. Andrews some actual, and, if possible, some popular showing of Universology; not writing's about it, or defending it from attack, but the thing itself. Can you not prick him up to the making of some sort of a showing of that kind, so that we may judge for ourselvs what he has, and what will be its uses to the world?

FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS STREETER.

[Mr. Andrews has considerable printed literature on the subj ct of universology, which he would no doubt be pleased to furnish those of an inquiring mind who wish to know more of his discovery than has been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. His address is 201 East Thirty-fourth st., New York city. —ED. T. S.]

ORANGEPORT, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of July 28th a correspondent signing himself "A Young Truth Seeker" makes the assertion that Christians claim that God did not make the devil. I was not aware that such was the fact, but I am constrained to the belief that he was substantially correct, which I will endeavor to show.

It must be conceded by every candid mind that the Catholic church was for many centuries the only church which could lay claim to being the church of Christ, notwithstanding she has been stigmatized by the Protestant church with such opprobrious epithets as "Antichrist," "the abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, "the mother of harlots" spoken of by John the Revelator, etc.

To them, therefore, belongs the credit of or reproach of inventing or originating the Christian system of faith, including his cloven-footed satanic majesty, "who goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour," and whom the Protestants hav adopted, with slight variation.

Now come the words of the text. In the Catholic catechism taught in all their schools as the foundation of their religious creed, we find the following section:

SUBJECT: OF OUR FIRST PARENTS.

Question. Who were our first parents? Answer. Adam and Eve.

Q. Where did God place our first parents? A. In the Garden of Eden.

Q. Did God cast them out of Eden? A. Yes.

Q. Why did God cast them out? A. Because they disobeyed God's commands.

Q. How came they to disobey God's commands? A. Being tempted by the devil envying their happy state.

Q. Who is the devil? A. One of the fallen angels.

Q. What are angels? A. Pure spirits created to adore God and administer around his throne.

Q. How came any angels to fall? A. Because through pride they rebelled against God, and he cast them out of heaven.

As proof of the above statements, they quote Isaiah xiv, 12, which reads as follows:

"How hast thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer! son of the morning," etc.

Here, then, we hav the original conception of his satanic majesty, whom the church has sent roaming about the earth for the last eighteen hundred years seeking whom he may devour, and by whose assistance they hav succeeded in deluding and terrifying the ignorant masses into supporting an army of indolent, haughty, tyrannical, and intolerant priests.

Whoever will take the trouble to read the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah will see at once that the whole chapter has reference to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who had besieged Jerusalem and taken many of the Jews captiv to Babylon, but who was afterward subdued and deprived of his kingdom, and according to Daniel turned out to grass for seven years to feed like the beasts of the field, until his hair grew like eagles' feathers, and his finger nails grew out like birds' claws (Dan. iv, 33). It was over these misfortunes of Nebuchadnezzar that Isaiah was rejoicing when he uttered the language quoted. To present his (Isaiah's) meaning more clearly, I will quote a few passages from the same chapter.

The first verse reads: "For God will hav mercy on Jacob, and will choose Israel and set them in their own land."

Fourth verse: "Thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon and say, How hath the oppressor ceased!—the golden city ceased!"

The sixth verse reads: "He who smote the people with wrath a continual stroke, he that ruled the nation in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth."

Verse ninth: "Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it has raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations."

The sixteenth verse says: "They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man (not devil) that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms."

The twenty-first verse: "Prepare slaughter for the children for the iniquity of their fathers" (splendid Bible doctrin—most merciful, loving God!), etc.

The above quotations will suffice to show the general tendency of the chapter, which is as plain as language can express it that it has reference to Nebuchadnezzar, and no one else.

Thus we see that the originators of the Christian religion hav resurrected the bones of poor old Nebuchadnezzar, clothed them with infinity and immortality, and sent him roaming to and fro upon the face of the earth, seeking whom he may devour.

This, my Christian friend, is the true origin of the Christian devil, whom the priesthood hav been using since the establishment of the Christian religion, and are still using (they could not carry on their trade without him), to terrify their ignorant, credulous, deluded dupes into contributing their hard-earned money for their support.

Query No. 1.—If heaven is a holy place, and no sin enters there, and angels are pure and holy spirits, how came they to rebel, or how could they rebel, being sinless—for rebellion and revolution imply sin in that instance?

Query No. 2.—If pure and holy spirits did once rebel against God and were cast out of heaven (Milton says, in "Paradise Lost," that about one-third of heaven were cast out), what guarantee hav you or I got, if we liv ever so good a Christian life, or are ever so orthodox in our faith, and succeed in entering through the pearly gates into the celestial city, that we will not some time be induced to join some rebellious spirit and finally be cast out of heaven into the pit and be doomed to fizzle and fry through all eternity, world without end?

M. E ATWOOD, P.M.

THE Commercial Advertiser says: "The Agnostic's definition of life is 'the predicament previous to death.'"

(Continued from page 629.)

Max Grossman offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That whenever or wherever any local or state League shall find it advisable to enter independently into political campaign, on the basis of the platform adopted by this convention, the National Liberal League pledges itself to render assistance to them in every possible way.

Reading and adoption of the committee's report was then proceeded with. Several sections met with opposition, some mild and others radical. Among the latter was that making Sunday a day for holding elections. The temperance clause was also warmly contested. The greatest division, however, was on the question of compulsory education. Time was consumed on this clause until the clock indicated the hour of 1 P.M. near at hand, and the matter was yet undecided. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock, with the presiding officer's request that all delegates be promptly on hand at the hour named.

The afternoon session opened at 2 o'clock, with a continuation of the consideration of the reformatory demands. A long time was taken for the discussion of the details proposed for adoption, but without coming to any definit conclusion beyond that arrived at in the morning, the final occurrence being left for the afternoon meeting. At 3 o'clock the election of officers was entered upon, with the choice of the following:

T. B. Wakeman, New York, president.

T. C. Leland, New York, secretary.

Courtlandt Palmer, New York, treasurer.

T. B. Wakeman, T. C. Leland, Courtlandt Palmer, New York; E. A. Stevens, Chicago; Mrs. H. S. Lake, board of directors.

E. A. Stevens was elected chairman of the Executiv Committee.

After the election the amendments to the Constitution were adopted. These amendments were printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 1st, page 548.

The Congress then adjourned until evening, when George Chainey, of Boston, lectured on the "Contest of Christianity and Humanity."

The congress concluded its session Sunday evening, after adopting resolutions thanking the Liberals of Milwaukee for courtesies extended and interest manifested. During the forenoon Mrs. H. S. Lake, of California, read an able paper on "Heroes," wherein she contrasted the heroes of moral history with those of the military world. Her deduction was that persons who distinguished themselvs in the field of morality far outshone those who made themselvs famous in open warfare.

J. E. Remsburg, of Atchison, Kan., delivered his great speech, "False Claims."

The Committee on Resolutions then submitted the previously printed report as the final report which was adopted.

TO THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE CONGRESS: The undersigned members of the committee appointed by your body last year, at St. Louis, to consider the project of relief and insurance among Liberals generally, would recommend, as a minority of said committee, the majority not being present—

First. That a system of insurance in case of death, and of relief for sick and distressed Liberals, is advisable, and we believe it would tend to cement in stronger bonds of fraternity the different elements of Freethought the world over.

Second. That we would recommend the approval by the National Liberal League of the system of insurance and relief formulated by the organization known as the Secular Benevolent Association of Port Jervis, as being the most simple and democratic in its workings of any that hav come to our attention, and the most likely to meet the demands of Liberals for an economical method of securing the ends named without encouraging and incurring the danger of accumulating large amounts of money into the hands of officers who may be tempted to use the funds thus held for their own purposes.

Third. That we recommend that subordinate Leagues interest themselvs in this plan of co-operativ insurance and relief, not only for the personal benefit of Liberals, but as a means of securing unity of action.

T. B. WAKEMAN,
W. T. DOTY,
Of Committee.

At the afternoon session Charles Watts, of London, England, spoke for the cause of Liberalism.

It was then announced that a statuet of Thomas Paine would be sold at auction, the proceeds to go toward meeting the expenses of the congress. The statuet is a model by David Richards, of Chicago, for a larger monument, to cost about $25,000, and to be erected in one of the Chicago parks. It represents Paine seated in a thoughtful manner, with his left arm resting upon a stand and supporting his head. It was presented to the League by E. A. Stevens, one of the delegates, and is said to be a good likeness. After a bid or two it was decided to raffle off the piece. One hundred and twelve tickets were disposed of at 50 cents apiece. The lucky number was 9, held by F. H. Maurer, of Oconomowoc, Wis., who presented the statuet back to the League to dispose of it as they saw fit. It was decided to again put it up at the close of the evening session. The meeting then adjourned.

The congress resumed its session at 8 o'clock in the evening, but unimportant business only was done. On calling the meeting to order, Mr. Wakeman stated that the statuet would be presented to the most popular lady, and that votes toward that end could be had for ten cents apiece. Mesdames Dr. Severance, Swank, and Lake were nominated. Delegates voted early and often for their candidates, and before taking up the regular order of business, the votes stood: Mrs. Lake, 135; Mrs. Swank, 100; Mrs. Severance, 60. The statuet was awarded to Mrs. Lake. It resulted in $103.70 for the League.

President Wakeman then delivered a lecture on the subject, "Scientific Basis of Liberalism and its Duties," adducing many strong and powerful points.

A new auxiliary branch of the League was organized in Milwaukee. The officers elected are: Max Grossmann, president; Mrs. Dr. Severance, secretary; James Ormsby, treasurer. Twenty members joined at the formation.

The Liberal Club.

The three hundred and sixth meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was not attended with any unusual excitement nor by a large number of people. Mr. Clinton Furbish was upon the program, but when the meeting opened he was not upon the platform. Listening to him by those present was therefore impracticable, and Mrs. S. Myra Hall volunteered in the emergency. It is said she has been waiting some time for this sort of an opening. Mrs. Hall stated that she had two lectures in her mind. One was the "Union of Forces," and the other was "Justice versus Charity." Versus is a Latin word meaning against. It is a proper word to use in reference to lawsuits and in the headings of letters written by the correspondent who signs himself "Justitia" or "Fair Play." Elsewhere the world has to struggle along without it, until it is relieved by finding the word in the title of an essay, though it is not necessary that the essayist should know its meaning or hav any appreciation of its correct use. But this is a deflection.

The lecturess did not make it very clear as to which of her lectures she was about to deliver; and the audience, who listened with a cheerful submission to the unavoidable that was pleasing to observe, were left in a state of doubt. Sometimes the union of forces seemed to be on top, and then again it appeared as if justice versus charity was getting the best of it. Mrs. Hall's ideas are hardly as exuberant as her person, and she is not so interesting as a public speaker as she might be as a conversationalist. She has an off-hand way of committing capital offenses against the rules of grammar, and the fact that the English language survives so many assaults goes far to confute the arguments of those who believe that death ends all. The speaker said she was ashamed of this nation, and wept for it. She appeared at times to be on the point of saying it might go to the dogs for all the help it would get from her, but did not, to the visible relief of as much of the nation as was present. Many people, the lecturess said, who appeared to be in easy circumstances habitually and persistently went to bed hungry. She spoke of a reporter who gave out all of a sudden, and the jury that sat on him found his stomach to be empty. The reporter denied the charge, and instanced a sandwich and glass of beer which he had indulged in only a week previously; but the mighty truth must go thundering down the ages that that reporter was hungry! It was tough. Mrs. Hall turned her attention to woman, and said that she was the under dog in the fight. Therefore her sympathies were largely in that direction. The lecture endured for forty-five minutes.

Mr. Henry Stone arose to inquire why the orators whose names were down on the card, which the members paid big money for, were not in fact the speakers. He did not desire a repetition of the last month's experience. Mr. Andrews, the chairman, spoke of malaria as an excuse for Mr. Furbish.

Mr. Channing Burnz was the first critic. His remarks were directed at "Justice versus Charity." He said the lecturess's definition of justice was what the world called charity. Justice was in fact what came in the natural course of events.

The rest of the speakers criticised the "Union of Forces." Mr. Ingalls said the primitiv method of commerce was to kill the owner of property and to carry away his possessions. That method tending to discourage industry, an arrangement was made by which the person who was robbed could save his life by binding himself to work for his conqueror as long as he lived. That established slavery, and was the foundation of the wage system. Mr. Ingalls's method of readjusting the affairs of mankind is that advocated by the Land Reformers.

Mr. Rosevelt said there was once an Irishman in court for some offense, who appeared to be in great perturbation. The judge told him not to get excited, as he was sure of justice in that court. "Arrah!" said Paddy; "that's just what I am afraid of." The reader can apply this story to either the "Union of Forces" or "Justice versus Charity," according as he thinks it will fit best.

Mr. Pink claimed that the masses required more confidence in one another's integrity before they could unite effectivly. The same spirit that caused the capitalist to oppress the laborer was inherent in mankind and would be put in practical operation by the workingman if affairs were reversed. Mr. Pink is a misanthropist.

Samuel Leavitt's remarks were to the effect that something more was needed than earthly endeavor by those in the flesh. The spirits of departed philanthropists were also doing their share to help things along. Mr. Leavitt has great faith in the Unknowable, and not a little confidence in the Vague.

Dr. Lambert said that two-fifths of the labor and money of the world were devoted to tobacco and alcoholic liquors. That made three-fifths of the people support the other two-fifths, who were practical nonproducers. A man that wanted anything he didn't earn was little better than a thief.

Mr. Stone argued that if the production of tobacco and alcoholic liquors kept two-fifths of the people at work, it would be a great disaster to the world to do away with those industries. Mr. Stone could not apologize for tobacco and liquor, as he had very little attraction for the one and none at all for the other.

The Great Universal Preacher was the next speaker. The way he looms up over most of the Liberal Club speakers makes them look small. While he is speaking the listener has an opportunity of judging how Moses must hav felt when he heard the voice of Jehovah reverberating in the thunders of Sinai. There is the crash of artillery about his method of delivering a speech, and he towers above the unresisting hearer like the Roman gladiator in the picture over his prostrate foe. He may not always convince an audience of the soundness of his views, but he can bring all but the most incorrigible to a realizing sense of their own comparativ insignificance. His remarks in this case, as usual, were designed to harmonize the discordant views of the other speakers, and to hold out the hope of something better to come in the near future.

Mrs. Hall closed the discussion. Mr. Wakeman and Mr. Leland, though returned from their trip West, were not present. Neither was Mr. Shook.

A Good Spiritualists' Convention.

The New York Central Association of Spiritualists assembled in Brown's Hall, Georgetown, N. Y., in accordance with previous notice. The day was fine, and as the hour approached, the people came pouring in from all directions, and many pleasant greetings were exchanged. It was a basket picnic, as usual, and the numerous tables standing in the spacious dining room were set and supplied by many a party of the happy comers. When all had partaken and the tables had been cleared, the visitors assembled in the large hall and opened the meeting, Dr. Beals acting as chairman. J. F. Baxter, of Boston, and Mrs. Colby, of Buffalo, were the speakers engaged. Mrs. Colby was accompanied by Mrs. Smith (as she has been for the past eleven years), who sings for her. There were five sessions during Saturday and Sunday, each evening being given to a session. The speaking was very fine, and much radical truth was uttered by both Baxter and Colby. The proceedings were interspersed with fine music and singing by Mr. Baxter and Mrs. Smith. The attendance was large, and on Sunday the large hall was full. Everyone seemed happy, and the attention was earnest and constant. Baxter's tests were entirely satisfactory.

The next session will be held at Cazenovia. At a late hour Sunday evening the association adjourned. Photographic negativs were made, of stereoscopic and 8x10 sizes, and parties wishing them can address T. Brown, Georgetcwn, or Parker, photographer, Sherburne, N. Y. H. R. P.

A Note from Mrs. Severance.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In the report of my lecture in Pittsburgh, in your last issue, a grave mistake in statistics is made. I said that thirteen and a half of all the ministers in the United States were criminal (not that thirteen and a half of all criminals were ministers), while only two and a half of the entire population were criminals, thus showing that the Christian religion did not make people more moral, as its advocates claim, even in the case of its consecrated advocates. Our National Liberal League Congress just closed a very interesting session here, wherein much good work has been done.

Since I saw you in Rochester I hav spoken in Pittsburgh, Salem, Toledo, Cleveland, Adrian, and Chicago. Hav been very busy, but am now at my sunny home resting from one kind of labor by engaging in another.

Yours for progress, JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.
Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 26, 283.

THE old woman at Leeds, England, whom the salvation Army announced as "the champion drunkard," and whose conversion was made matter of repeated boast, has been again sent to jail by the local magistrates for being drunk and disorderly. It would be interesting, says the National Reformer, to learn how long on the average Salvation Army conversions from drunkenness are found to last, especially if the drum and red flag excitement be allowed to diminish. "General Booth" has transferred the license of the Eagle Tavern; that is, he authorizes another to carry on under his lease, the liquor trade which he so vehemently denounced.

Poetry.

The Sunburnt Palmer.

BY ALHAZA.

Is there a shrine where we should kneel,
A column white beneath the sky,
Where now the sunburnt palmer rests,
Who laid so calmly down to die?

His sandals pressed the mournful dust
Where men are martyred everywhere,
And nought could still his earnest words
When blinded nations knelt in prayer.

Shall gorgeous temples rear their towers
Where tyrant forms ignobly rot,
While freedom's hero calmly sleeps
With no white shaft to mark the spot?

No tablet carved with truths sublime
His prisoned hand so mildly penned,
Which yet shall wake the earthquake dire.
That can the rocks of error rend.

How nature veiled herself in white
To welcome home her chosen son,
Embalmed with deeds, whose odor sweet
Is myrrh upon the south wind blown.

Then polished marble there should gleam,
And glow beneath the summer sky,
To honor him whose golden words
Hav taught us how to liv and die.

First Religious Services at San Angela.

From Texas Siftings.

The first religious services ever held at San Angela, a small Texan town which hovered under the protection of Fort Concho, could hav been aptly termed unique. At the fort were stationed three companies of United States infantry. At the town of San Angela, across the creek, there was a heterogeneous population, male and female, as wild, barbaric, and dissolute as the most sanguinary desperado might wish to find. There was the surviving hero of many a fatal brawl, the man whose ten fingers hardly sufficed to count the victims of his "ready reference" revolver. The hunted, battered, beaten wreck of womanhood was there, with the fierce, baleful light of a lost soul flashing from her eyes. It was a hard lot, these early settlers of San Angela, the wash and driftwood of the advancing waves of civilization.

It occurred to the superintendent of the government works at the fort that a series of religious meetings at San Angela might possibly temper the winds of wrath to the shorn lambs of iniquity, and, accordingly, he invited a local preacher, named Paxton, from the eastern part of the state, to come over to San Angela and inaugurate a revival. Brother Paxton arrived in due time, was hospitably received at the fort, and after supper, accompanied by Dillingham, the superintendent, he passed over the creek to San Angela to begin operations in the stubble-field of sin. The word quickly passed around that there was to be a meeting at the dance-house, a rough shanty with a clay floor, and at early candlelight the somewhat limited auditorium was completely filled. But it was a quiet audience, and disposed to listen attentivly and patiently to the words of wisdom from the preacher's lips.

Brother Paxton had traveled in the Holy Land, and was anxious to impart valuable information concerning that locality. Taking for his text, "Push Forward," he proceeded to draw a map of the Red Sea on a large piece of paper, which he suspended from the wall, and then he told how Pharaoh's host pursued the children of Israel down to the banks of the Red Sea, and how the Israelites were about to capitulate when they heard the voice of the Lord commanding them to push forward, and the great sea divided, and the children of Israel passed through dry shod, while the gorgeous host of the wicked Pharaoh were swallowed up in the vast meeting of the waters.

The motley audience appeared visibly affected, although the whole recital was strange history to most of them. But just at this juncture one of the roughest, toughest specimens of the inhabitants of San Angela pushed a great head of shock hair and coarse, disagreeable features through a window hole in the side of the dance-house, and resting his elbows on the sill, said:

"Say, parson, when yer git through with it, whattle yer (hic) take for that d—— map of yours?"

From the main body of the audience, Bob Baxter immediately arose in his seat. From one side of his belt hung a huge revolver with a long, glittering barrel. From the other depended a big knife, made from a cavalry saber.

"I'll shoot that —— ——— drunken disturber of public worship into hash," said Bob, his eyes blazing with indignation.

"Sit down!" chorused half a dozen voices in hoarse whispers; "don't you know you are making more disturbance than he is?"

"P'raps I be," replied, Bob, "p'raps I be, but,—— ——— it, it's always the way with him. We can't hav anything quiet and orderly and religious like, but, by the ——, he must put in his oar and howl and yawp around like a guinea hen. It's a —— ——— outrage."

"Come Bob," said Dillingham, "sit down, and he'll keep quiet."

"But I propose that the parson shall hav a fair show, I'll be ——— if I don't. There can't no men, nor no set of men run this meetin', or the parson, either, while Bob Baxter is in the immediate vicinity. Here, the very first time we ever tried to hav a meetin' here, this —— ——— fool must swing in with his —— ——— chow-chow and spile the hull matinee. He must button up his lip pretty middlin' —— ——— quick, or the parson will hav to stop over another day and conduct a funeral."

"But, Bob," persisted Dillingham, "don't you see ——"

"It's always the way with him, the scurvy, —— —— whelp; we can't do anything quiet and orderly like with him hanging around like a sore thumb, and he won't let us be godly and religious when we want to. Besides that, this ain't no place for a drunken man, and — where is he?" and Bob Baxter glared wildly toward the hole in the wall from which the man's face had disappeared as soon as Bob commenced to make remarks.

"He's gone home, probably," said Dillingham.

"He'd better go home, the —— ——— coyote," muttered Bob, "we are going to hav a quiet meetin', and I want everybody inside and outside of this tabernacle to remember it, and, here, parson, continued Bob, walking up to the little table which served as the, now thoroughly agitated and trembling parson's pulpit, "here's my bayonet, and you can cut the liver outen the very next man that interrupts. Now go ahead and get your Israelites across the creek, and shoot off your bazoo as much as you like—I'm here."

Then Bob laid his long knife on the parson's table, stepped back, folded his arms and watched the effect. But the remainder of the services were very short. Not that any further interruption ensued, but still the services were, somehow, abbreviated, and most of the awe-stricken audience swarmed out of the dance-house and went home. Bob invited the parson and some of his friends to take something, but the parson said he had never been in a saloon in his life. Dillingham whispered to him that, under the circumstances, it would be better and safer to drink with the boys, so the parson said he would take a lemonade.

"Lemonade the devil," whispered a voice on the outskirts of the crowd, "if you drink with this crowd you'll drink whisky."

Instantly there was a commotion in front of the bar, and Bob Baxter found the owner of the voice and held his revolver barrel under the man's nostrils.

"I want you to understand," said Bob, emphatically, "that the parson is drinking at my expense, and he will drink whatever he —— pleases, from cod liver oil to goat's milk. It's none of your —— ——— business what he drinks."

This episode, however, closed the religious exercises at San Angela. The parson could never be induced to return, and the religious excitement after that waned to a melancholy degree, notwithstanding the almost superhuman efforts of Bob Baxter to keep it up to concert pitch.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

House Wanted.

Wanted, a well-built, comfortable country house, and a few acres of land in New York State, in elevated, dry, and healthy district, free from malaria. The house must be in excellent sanitary condition, with Southern aspect; water pure and abundant—own spring preferred; convenient to station and post-office. Wanted to hire for one year with privilege of purchasing. In answering please state full particulars. Addres "W. K. D.," care of this office. 2t39

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 15 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Rome. Not Bethlehem, the Birthplace of Jesus.
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

Who Wrote the New Testament?
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

BOWLES PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 20 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 43 Clinton Place. New York

WETTSTEIN'S JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,

Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT STREET, and

286 FULTON STREET,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

WILLIAM WILSON'S ELECTRO-CHEMICO VAPORIZER.

THE CULMINATION OF OPTICAL PHYSICS DEMONSTRATED IN "ACTINA."

"ACTINA,"

THE GREAT EYE-RESTORER.

"Actina has an instantaneous action on the various and mysteriously complicated organs of vision, the nerves, the blood vessels, the muscular coats and complex membranes which make up that marvelous mechanism of nature, the eye. Whether in the human being, the insect, or brute, all diseases of the eye result from an irregularity of the secretions. This may be brought about in a variety of ways—overwork, anxiety, breathing impure atmosphere, straining the eyes over intricate mechanism, etc., etc.; while hundreds of thousands hav ruined their sight by the use of powerful drugs taken with a view of curing other forms of disease. But all these cases can be met successfully by the regular use of "Actina."

"Actina" will relieve colds in the head, inflammation in the eyes, headache, catarrh, neuralgia, sore eyelids, and humors of all kinds.

☞NOTE.—"Actina" is not a medicin or lotion, but a self-generating vapor, easily applied at all hours, times, and places, can be carried in the pocket, and used by any member of the family with perfect safety, from infancy to old age.

TRIAL FREE OF CHARGE.

By calling at our several stores you may try the remedy, free of charge; but be particular not to use any vaporizer unless it bears the signature of William Wilson, who will state positivly if relief and cure be possible.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN.

W. WILSON, President.

D. J. COTTER, Secretary.

[All checks, post-office order, and drafts payable to the Anglo-American Electric Association.]

CAUTION:

Beware of cheap imitations of our goods. Read your back copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four years, and note our thousands of testimonials.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.
200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, O.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

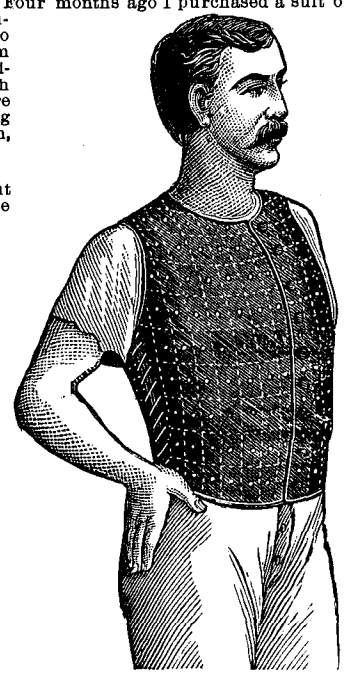
Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.



Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

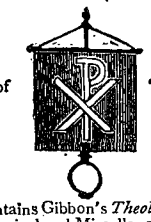
Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information,
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and



A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Meda awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill nnd experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by
my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.
80 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

I CAN hardly yield my consent that this is the last of our individuality; and I fondly think that grand, great, and glorious old Father and Mother Nature are able to make it all possible. They hav done so much that is wonderful, beautiful, great, and magnificent, that I am buoyed up with a hope that they will and do also accomplish this best, greatest, and most desirable of all problems—a continued individual existence.—D. M. Bennett.

"ALL flesh is not the same flesh. There is one flesh of men, another of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." And what then? Nothing. A cook could hav said as much. "There are also bodies celestial and bodies terrestrial; the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another." And when then? Nothing. And what is the difference? Nothing that he has told. "There is one glory of the sun and another glory of the moon and another glory of the stars." And what then? Nothing, except that he says that one star differeth from another star in glory, instead of in distance; and he might as well hav told us that the moon did not shine so brightly as the sun. All this is nothing better than the jargon of a conjurer, who picks up phrases which he does not understand to confound credulous people who come to hav their fortunes told. Priests and conjurers are of the same trade.—Paine's Age of Reason.

As his knowledge of the universe is extremely limited and very imperfect, the Atheist declines either to affirm or deny anything with regard to modes of existence of which he knows nothing. Further, he refuses to believe anything concerning that of which he knows nothing, and affirms that that which can never be the subject of knowledge ought never to be the object of belief.—Annie Besant's True Basis of Morality.

THEN farewell hopes o' laurel-boughs,
To garland my poetic brows!
Henceforth I'll rove where busy ploughs
Are whistling thrang,
And teach the lanely hights and howes
My rustic sang.

I'll wander on, wi' tentless heed
How never-halting moments speed,
Till fate shall snap the brittle thread;
Then all-unknown,
I'll lay me with the inglorious dead,
Forgot and gone. —Burns.

TO pass our time in the study of the sciences has, in all ages, been reckoned one of the most dignified and happy of human occupations, and the name of philosopher, a lover of wisdom, is given to those who lead such a life. But it is by no means necessary that a man should do nothing else than study known truths and explore new truths, in order to earn this high title. Some of the greatest philosophers in all ages hav been engaged in the pursuits of a true life; and he who, in whatever station his lot may be cast, prefers the refined and elevating pleasures of knowledge to the love of gratification of the senses, richly deserves the name of a philosopher.—Lord Brougham.

DEEPER, deeper let us toil
In the mines of knowledge;
Nature's wealth and Learning's spoil
Win from school and college;
Delve we then for richer gems
Than the stars of diadems.
—James Montgomery.

IF we will do away with all dishonest gods, all unjust devils, all false systems of theology, and all blind and erroneous creeds; if we will square our daily actions by the principles of honor, honesty, and uprightness; if we will make it a point to see how much we can add to the happiness of those around us; if we will resolve to dispense with all silly gewgaws, all the trappings of vanity; if we will strive for the beautiful and the useful; if we will be content with a moderate amount of wealth; if we be willing to dispense with luxuries; if we will, at all times, realize the truth that our own happiness is increased by adding to the happiness of others, we will do very much toward making this a brighter, an honester, and a happier world, and will need no blood of a god, nor a son of a god, to make us happy now or in the future.—D. M. Bennett.

It's hardly in a body's power
To keep at times frae being sour,
To see how things are shared;
How best o' chiels are whiles in want,
Whiles coofs on countless thousands rant
And kenna how to wear't;
But, Davie, lad, ne'er fash your head
Though we hae little gear,
We're fit to win our daily bread
As lang's we're hale and fier. —Burns.

THE whole condition of things was haphazard and neglected, as far as the church went; but the village was wonderfully moral, and "Mr. Fullerton's men" were a splendid lot of fellows, who did much to giv a tone to the whole place. They were men against whom slander itself could find nothing to say, save that they, too, disbelieved in the seven days and the staying of the sun and moon, and that they did not come to church but went to Mr. Fullerton's scientific lectures instead; and that they held the modern doctrins concerning evolution and the origin of species. But of what good is it that workingmen should be moral, sober, thoughtful, and in every way respectable and well-conducted, if they do not believe in verbal inspiration and the power of one man to bind or loose the sins of another? The church wants obedient sons and not moral Infidels; and between the brigand who believes and the Atheist who passes his life in charity and well-doing, she has most pleasure in the former and least hope of the latter. Under Which Lord? by Mrs. E. Lynn Lindon.

WHAT a strange palimpsest is every new-born soul, written all over, and, like a woman's letter, crosswise, with ancestral tendencies to truth or falsehood, holiness or sin! How earnestly it behooves us, seeing that those things are so, to make our contribution to this palimpsest a fair and noble one, something that may not fear the light.—Chadwick's Higher Reverence.

Odds and Ends.

SCOTCH enterprise: Twenty-two years ago a young Scotch boy arrived at Castle Garden with only twelve cents in his pocket. Now he is $1,600,000 in debt.

"HE may hav been a little crooked," remarked the undertaker mournfully, over the remains of a bad bank cashier, "but I guess I can straighten him."

"WHY don't you ask a blessing?" said a boarding-house keeper to a boarder. He looked all over the table and gloomily answered: "I'd like to know what for."

A COUNTY prisoner says he has always been taught to do in Rome as Romans do, and he finds fault because now that he is in jail he is not allowed to do as the jailers do.

A NEBRASKA boy chloroforms hogs at night, and is thus able to get away with them without any noise. When he can't get any chloroform he hires a minister to come and talk them to sleep.

"IT seems to me that the lard is dimishing rapidly, Mary," said the mistress to the servant girl. "Yes'm," was the reply of the maid; "but then you knew when you bought it that it was short'ning."

AN unfortunate love of liquor has cut off a Georgia negro woman at the age of 117. Poor young thing! Where were our temperance workers that they did not rush in and save her from the downward path?

"I PRIDE myself on my descent," said a spinster of uncertain age recently. "One of my ancestors came over in the Mayflower." "Which one was it," cried a cruel miss; "your father or your mother?"

"ARE those pure canaries?" asked a gentleman of a bird fancier with whom he was negotiating for a pair. "Yes, sir," said the dealer confidentially, "I raised them 'ere birds from this very canary seed."

"OH, we had such an excellent sermon to-day on the preamble about good Sam Arriton, I must look in the discordance and see who Sam Arriton was," was the soliloquy of Mrs. McGill after her return from church last Sunday.

A BOOKBINDER said to his wife at their wedding: "It seems that now we are bound together, two volumes in one, with clasps." "Yes," observed one of the guests; "one side highly ornamental Turkey morocco, and the other plain calf."

"WHAT is the next thing to a dude?" was asked in a fashionable parlor one night. One lady answered an ape, another an ourang-outang, but when a little girl said the next thing to a dude is his undershirt the subject was suddenly dropped.

"YOU ought to be in our room now," said Amy; "we hav a teacher that rules the roost." "Well," replied the high school girl, "I'd be ashamed of myself; you should say 'governs the horizontal perch on which the fowl reposes,' not 'rules the roost.'"

"BOY," said a gentleman to a disobedient youth whom he encountered, "don't you hear your father calling?" "Oh, yes," replied the boy; "but I don't mind nothin' he says, an' mother don't neither; and a-twixt her an' me we've about got the dog so he don't, too."

"IN my time, miss," said a stern aunt, "the men looked at the women's faces instead of their ankles!" "Ah, but my dear aunt," retorted the pretty young lady, "you see that the world has improved and is more civilized than it used to be. It looks now more to the understanding."

TWO Philadelphia lawyers got into a street fight the other day. Each swore if he had a pistol he'd kill the other. At once a dozen were offered to each by spectators. When they found how anxious the populace was to get rid of each they swore friendship, and vowed to liv forever, to spite the town.

A SIX-YEAR-OLD urchin was allowed to sit up at a hop at a summer hotel. His mamma, in full evening dress, was leading off in the grand march, and his young lordship was noticed to view her critically as she passed him; then he looked up to a stranger and ejaculated: "The old lady looks pretty well, doesn't she?"

"YOU'RE looking pretty fresh this morning," observed the managing editor, as the religious editor strolled into the sanctum and put his foot up on the desk to tie his shoe. "Don't feel very good!" growled the religious editor. "I got off with some of the boys last night, and we had a racket; now you hear me shout." "Who was the party?" inquired the managing editor, enviously. "A lot of clergymen were showing a stranger around," replied the religious editor, stretching out full length. "We went from one church to another to see how the prayer-meetings were getting on, and then we called on several old fellows who were too superannuated to get around with us. They all set 'em up"— "Set up what?" demanded the managing editor, rather startled. "Lemonade, and biscuits, and doughnuts," continued the religious editor. "By that time it was nine o'clock, and all hands were getting excited, and somebody said he knew a man who had cider in his cellar. After we had downed a quart or two of that, we began to get reckless. So we went to the house of one of the brethren and sang hymns till half-past ten. I got a notion how things were coming out and wanted to jump the game, but they wouldn't hav it, and the most hilarious man in the crowd said if we would come around to his house he would cut a pie. That made 'em all fairly wild, and away we went. After the pie we had some more hymns, and finally, to wind up the whole business, I sent out and bought a watermelon. That busted the racket. They got to throwing seeds at each other, and they laughed so loud that you could almost hear them in the next room." "Anything else?" inquired the managing editor, dryly. "No," responded the religious editor. "When we had finished the melon we all went home, but you bet some of those dominies hav got a head on 'em this morning."

To My Friends:

No God, no heaven, no hell,
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents. "John's Way," 15 cents. "Clergyman's Victims," 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances. "Studying the Bible," 75 cents. "Godly Women," showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. "Private Physiology for Girls," worth $5 to any woman if she heeds health, $1. Photos, card, 15 cents; imperial, 20 cents. "Crimes of Preachers," 25 cents. "Leaves of Grass," a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2. "Infidel School Teacher," 25 cents. "Little Lessons for Children," 50 cents.

DIANA.

A Startling Book. Original in theory, unobjectionable in language, scientific in treatment. None should marry without consulting "DIANA." Price, 25 cents. "Sexual Physiology for the Young," cloth, 50 cents. "Science in Story," a comic, amusing, scientific, and sensible story, cloth, illustrated, $2. "Plain Home Talk," the cheapest book in the world, and full of hygienic information, 1,000 illustrations, $1.50. "Health Hints," 25 cents. These four are by Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York. "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism," $1.50. "Vindication of Gibbon," a valuable work crowded with thought and truth, $2. Specimens of Herald of Health, Health Monthly, Herald of Industry, Alpha, THE TRUTH SEEKER, Iconoclast, Thinker, Queen Bee, Liberal, Investigator, Blade, and Matrimonial Review, 6 cents each. "Six Tracts," 6 cents each. And any other Liberal book you may want, at publisher's price. Address,

ELMINA D. SLENKER,
4t40 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Wanted.

In a Liberal family or school a position as teacher of English branches and art, or a good situation as housekeeper or governess, by a lady thirty-five years old, with experience as teacher and housekeeper, but who has now lost all her property through the knavery of some very pious people. Best of reference. Address, M. M., care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by

O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER

two of America's clearest thinkers.

Price, in cloth. $1

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

WITH AN APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

BIBLE SCIENCE.—To organize and restore the Holy Communism practiced by Christ and his apostles. Also to maintain the "Perfect Law of Liberty" by showing the difference between God's Righteousness and all other notions of right and wrong. This is Masonic Christianity, and intended only for zealous persons tired of talk and ready for business. Return papers, 10 cents.

Address, "REWARD,"
5t37 710 Broadway, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library. Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

[Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city

THE GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersol and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE

BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES

OF

The Pilgrims in the Land of Y hweh.

D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,

A JOURNAL OF

ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS

BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 41. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, October 13, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A WESTERN editor has a libel suit on his hands simply because he alluded to the church choir as the lyres of the town.

THERE is more truth, says the Screw Driver, in the motto, "It's a wise father who knows his child," than "In God we trust"—on an eighty-five cent dollar.

BARON MACLAY says that some tribes in New Guinea do not even know what fire is; which leads the Sydney Liberal to inquire, "How on earth are we to explain to them the glad tidings of great joy—hell?"

Two officers of the Salvation Army at Mold, in Wales, in applying to the town council of Ruthin for the use of the assembly room, wrote in this free and easy manner: "You can do no better than entertain them hospitably. They are the Lord's people, and I know the Ruthin people love the Lord, who was a gentleman without comparison."

"How did you like Myron Reed's sermon the other Sunday night, on 'Will the Coming Man Go to Church?'" said a member of the First Presbyterian church to a vender of dry goods on Massachusetts avenue a few days since. "Very well," replied the dry goods man; "but what puzzles me most about the whole thing is, where will the coming man find any church to go to?"—Indianapolis Iconoclast.

IT is not always the best thing in the world for a man to stand up in a prayer-meeting and tell what a wicked cuss he has been. A Lowell, Mass., man recently accused himself of once having committed larceny. The sexton had him arrested as he was leaving the meeting. This will rather dampen the ardor of some of the regenerated who delight to tell in prayer-meetings how much deviltry they hav committed.—Peck's Sun.

AN exchange says: "A Massachusetts woman who had not been able to stand upon her feet was miraculously cured the other day. A bad boy threw a mouse into the room, and in less than eight seconds the invalid had hopped across the room on three chairs and was standing on top of the bureau with her clothes wrapped around her ankles." This proves that mice were not made in vain. A miracle performed by the aid of a mouse is as good as any, and proves as much.

As long as the authority of the Christian church is acknowledged so long will woman be deprived of her rights. An indication of this is the following in the New York World: "Baltimore, Oct. 5th.—In the Evangelical Lutheran Synod a motion to admit the members of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society to a participation in the proceedings was objected to by Rev. Dr. John Morris, on the ground that the scripture commands the women to sit quietly in the church, and he thought they ought to do so."

A COUNTRY editor, after writing a powerful and exhaustiv article on the earthquake in Java, from force of habit wound up with, "Let the strictest official inquiry be made into this terrible loss of life, and let not the guilty heads escape that punishment a horror-stricken, outraged community demands." The foregoing is from the Richmond Baton, and has been copied by other papers as a good joke. But, seriously, would it not be pertinent to inquire into the character and motivs of the almighty individual who, according to the Christian belief, is responsible for the catastrophe alluded to, before putting him into our Constitution? Does the way he has treated Java tend to inspire people with confidence in his ability to manage the government of this nation?

THE Cooper Union reading room in this city was thrown open at noon last Sunday to a score of persons who were waiting at the door. It was the beginning of the tenth year of the reading room. "There are always more readers on Sunday than on any other day of the week," said the lady at the desk. "They are mostly mechanics. They read good literature, and I am no longer surprised when a request is made for a scientific work in a modern foreign language. Most of the readers naturally liv in New York, but a good many are from Jersey City, Newark, Hoboken, Brooklyn, or cities even further distant. On Sundays in cold weather, the place is most crowded. I hav to close the library sometimes when the room is full, because there's no use in letting a man hav a book if he has to stand up and read it. On rainy Sundays we hav all we can wait on. The readers had rather come here than go to church." The hours on Sunday are from noon to 9 P.M.

MANY of Truth's contemporaries are scolding the sheriffs for permitting the travesties of religion that occur at almost every execution. The growls should, however, be leveled at the clericals who instigate them—clericals generally of the more popular and less disciplinarian of the sects. No Catholic priest humbugs his penitent with the idea of an instant translation, like good old Elijah, to heaven; for he believes that purgatory awaits even the comparativly good man. But other sects are not so particular, and, while taking the Bible as a whole, seem to forget that by Revelations, the twenty-first chapter and eighth verse, the murderer is expressly excluded from heaven. No, no, contemporaries, the men and women to be hanged do not enact religious travesties; it is the foolish clericals who are the stage managers, prompters, and actors in such travesties.—Truth.

THE Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton, in the temple, in Clermont avenue, Brooklyn, last Sunday said that Monsignor Capel was going to do good in this country by recalling attention to the false claims of the Catholic church, which was patronized and defended in Brooklyn on account of the Catholic vote. The pope was supposed to be poor, and yet he lived in the largest and most magnificent palace in Europe. Although he was a bachelor, and had 1,025 servants and a $1,000,000 income he demanded from the poor people of Ireland the Peter's pence. Capel like Rome, ignored the scripture and wanted to hav heart, brain, and conscience in subjection to the church. The saddest thing in connection with Dr. Fulton's work in Brooklyn was that he was surrounded by so many cowards. There were men afraid to appear in the temple that morning because they were doing business with Catholics, and they thought it would injure them to appear there. Shame on them, he said.

A FEW days since, while returning from a trip to the Yellowstone Park, a Bismarck family consisting of father, mother, and a bright six-year-old son, stopped at Little Missouri to view the Bad Lands. They secured a team at the station and rode out six miles south to see that wonderful curiosity, the Burning mountain. While sitting upon the grass near by, watching the heated vapors arise from the burning pit, the little one asked: "Mamma, who kindles that fire?" "God does, darling." The youngster sat for a moment in deep thought, and, looking up into the maternal eyes with a knowing glance, asked: "Mamma, does God jump out of bed and kick over the chairs, and say he'll be dad-damned if he'll stand this thing much longer, when he wants Mrs. God to get up and build the fires and she won't do it?" There was a painful silence of several moments, and then the man gazed dreamily and abstractedly away off to the south, and softly remarked that the Bad Lands never look so beautiful as they do in September.—Bismarck Tribune.

THE career of a bigamous Episcopalian parson, one Hughes, is exciting attention in England. In 1875 he got five years for fraudulently obtaining a certificate for the burial of his stepdaughter's child, of which he was the reputed father. In 1879 he left jail with a ticket of leave, and in 1881 he left his wife and, although obliged to report himself periodically to the police, got a chaplaincy. As curate of Wellesbourne, he deluded a girl into matrimony in February, 1881. In October, 1882, he assumed sole charge of Bickenhill parish, in the vicar's absence, and made himself very popular, especially with the vicar's cook, whom he soon afterward married. Yet another bigamy has now came to light. While curate in Staffordshire in 1872–4 he married under a feigned name a young and handsome governess by whom he had two children. She went to America and died. Since July he has lived by borrowing and writing begging letters. His second victim has lost her reason from shock at the perfidy of this reverend scoundrel.

THE streets of the Holy City are narrow, badly paved, and crooked as a corkscrew; the principal being the street of David, leading from the Jaffa Gate to the Haram; the street of the Gate of the Columns, running from the Damascus Gate to the street of the Gate of the Prophet David, under which name it continues to Zion's Gate; Christian street, running from the street of David to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher; and the Via Dolorosa, running from the Church of the Holy Sepulcher to St. Stephen's Gate. There are very few open places, and not one street in which a carriage can be driven; the bazars are poor and not to be compared for a moment with those of Cairo or Damascus; they are in narrow lanes, for the most part vaulted over, and exhibit the usual articles to be found in Eastern bazars—shoes, pipes, tobacco, hardware, jewelry, cutlery, and so forth—each stall being under the superintendence of a man in flowing robes and turban, who sits cross-legged and smokes while the crowd buzzes unceasingly around him. There are two good hotels, the "Mediterranean" and the "Damascus," and several hospices—the Casa Nova of the Franciscans, the Austrian Hospice, and the Prussian Hospice of St. John—but the majority of travelers who are making the tour of Palestine, camp outside the city, as indeed do many of the inhabitants in the summer-time, for the sake of purer air. Almost every house in Jerusalem has a cupola, with a flat surface on the roof to allow a stroll round it, and all the houses are of stone. Very few of them exhibit any traces of architectural beauty; in fact, the dwelling-houses generally suggest poverty and dirt.—Cities of the World.

THE difference between the attitudes of the Index and THE TRUTH SEEKER toward Bakounine's "God and the State" is interesting. The Index review is patronizing, ignorant, superficial, thoughtless. One sentence in it is particularly stupid: "An acquaintance with evolution, as now taught by English and German thinkers, and especially with psychology and sociology, would hav enabled the writer to correct many of his errors, and see the unscientific and unphilosophic character of many of the statements advanced by him as truisms." One would suppose from this that Bakounine died 20 years ago, instead of in 1876, and no doubt the editor of the Index supposed such to be the case. The facts are that Bakounine was perfectly familiar with all the principal languages, and resided for long periods in almost all the chief European countries. With their literatures he was thoroughly conversant, with their principal writers he was in many instances personally intimate, and, if he had a passion for anything outside of the actual revolutionary movement, it was for philosophy, especially German philosophy. THE TRUTH SEEKER, on the contrary, which is not, like the Index, one of those "pale phantoms eternally suspended between heaven and earth" described by Bakounine, appreciates the power and importance of "God and the State," and gives it a four-column review, including liberal quotations for which it has our heartfelt thanks. It is enthusiastic and intelligent in its praise. While not entirely indorsing Bakounine's views of government, it says: "The book, taken all in all, is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call." A book seldom receives higher compliment.—Liberty.

News of the Week.

THE Ohio election last Tuesday was close, with a probable Democratic result.

THE Prohibitionists of Brooklyn hav nominated a clergyman as candidate for mayor.

THE Mormon church claims to hav received 23,040 new members in Utah the past six months.

PERE HYACINTHE, the celebrated French reformed Catholic priest, arrived in this city last Sunday.

THE authorities of Switzerland hav concluded to expel the English Salvation Army from the country.

FATHER KEARNEY, a Catholic priest at Hempstead, L. I., was fined $10 last Saturday for assault and battery.

THE National Convention of Socialists will open in Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 13th inst., and remain in session several days. Herr Most is expected to preside.

THE king of Spain was hooted and hissed at in the streets of Paris last week. Spain feels much insulted by the act. France has officially apologized.

THE Rev. Dr. Houghton, of New Haven, Conn., whose remarks in the pulpit on the Rose Ambler case won him so much notoriety, has been asked to resign.

THE trial of O'Donnell, the slayer of James Carey, is set down to commence the 15th inst. Gen. Pryor, of Brooklyn, has been retained as American counsel for the defense.

ORANGEMEN and Catholics had a street fight last Saturday in Belfast, Ireland. The Orangemen were in procession, and the Catholics in a mob. Many persons were wounded.

A GERMAN newspaper says that Nihilist proclamations hav been issued solemnly sentencing the czar of Russia to death because he has failed to grant liberty to the people.

A FORMER member of the German Reichstag from Alsace has been arrested for high treason, his apprehension being based on the fact that he was contemplating the publishing of a paper which would be anti-German in its tone.

THE archbishop in Ecuador has ordered a letter to be read in all the churches, in which he informs the people that as many of them are ignorant of how to vote at the coming election, they must cast their votes as instructed by the clergy.

A PAPAL decree regulating procedure before the civil tribunals of the Vatican is published. The decree ignores Italian law, and ordains that all contracts between any portion of the pope's household and parties outside shall be regulated by pontifical law.

A MAN named Austin was arraigned in this city last week on a charge of abandoning his wife. Mrs. Austin produced in court over one hundred letters from as many different women, most of which showed that Austin had been intimate with the writers.

THE woman suffrage party rejoices that Dr. Morgan Dix, the author of the work, "Woman's Place To-day," was beaten in the race for the assistant bishopric in New York by the Rev. Henry C. Potter, who is a warm friend of co-education and woman suffrage.

THREE Baptist church-goers at Comanche, Texas, met at a baptism in that town one day recently, and engaged in a quarrel. One man received the contents of a shotgun in his body and died instantly, and another was so severely beaten that he will probably die.

THE Rev. Charles Monck stayed one night last week at a hotel in Hoboken, N. J. After he had gone a gold watch and other valuables were missed. He was arrested and the stolen property found on his person. He was held for bail. Previous to the theft the Rev. Mr. Monck had visited several of the concert saloons of New York city, where he had drank to intoxication and spent or been robbed of all his money.

The Fall and the Redemption.

It is taught by believers in orthodox Christianity that about 6,000 years ago Adam and Eve fell from a state of purity and perfection, by an act of transgression. That act, it is urged, involved all races of men throughout all time in depravity and punishment. It was thought necessary, therefore, that some plan should be devised whereby "fallen humanity" should be redeemed from the consequences of the disobedience said to hav been committed in the Garden of Eden. To obtain this redemption the Christian scheme of salvation was originated. What this scheme is has been variously explained by different schools of theologians, all of whom, however, hav professed to base their explanations on Bible teachings. The Augustinian school held that mankind were doomed to hell through the fall of Adam, and that Christ's death canceled sin committed, and thus saved them from being utterly lost. The Calvinists believe that God foresaw that Adam would fall, and that posterity would thereby be damned, and therefore selected a few, termed the elect, to be saved, while the many will be lost. Before, however, this partial salvation could obtain, it was deemed necessary that Christ's life should be sacrificed as a vicarious punishment for the misdoings of our "first parents." This belief is so unjust and inhuman in its naked form that those who still retain it hav to modify it considerably in their advocacy. If it be true that God foresaw that Adam would fall, and that posterity would be damned, should he not as a beneficent, all-powerful being hav prevented the calamity altogether, or, failing in this, hav included the whole human race among the "elect?" The Evangelical Christians suppose that the vicarious sufferings of Christ obtained conditional pardon. In order, however, for persons to partake of the advantages of those sufferings, they must hav faith that Christ died as a substitute, that is, that the innocent was punished for the guilty. This is justice peculiar to Christianity. The Roman Catholic, while teaching the fall of man and his salvation through Christ, also teaches that none will be saved unless they accept the authority of the church and observe her rites. This of course is priestcraft, but then what religious sect is there which has not its priests? The difference between Catholicism and Protestantism upon this point is that while the Catholic is honest and acknowledges the necessity of a priesthood, the Protestant is dishonest in denying its right, and at the same time practicing its evils. The principle in both cases is the same; it differs only in degree. The Universalists consider that no one is damned beyond his personal sin in this world. If he be ever so vile, all evil at death departs, and he is ushered into heaven pure and spotless. It must be very gratifying to the immoral and licentious hypocrit thus to believe that his career of debauchery will be no barrier to his admission into the celestial city. The Unitarians, rejecting all the above theories, regard the object of Christ's life, rather than his death, to be the reconciliation of man to God. Relying on such biblical statements as "Every man shall die for his own sin;" "To punish the just is not good;" "In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure," they consider the popular views of the atonement fallacious. This diversity of opinion in the Christian world, as to the nature and object of the scheme of redemption, indicates its perplexing character. Apart from sectarian interpretations, the Bible plan of the atonement appears to be that nearly 6,000 years ago, an ill-wise, all-powerful, beneficent God created the world, and then set man in the midst of a scene, surrounded by temptations it was impossible for him to withstand; God implanted in man's breast certain desires which, as God, he must hav known would produce man's ruin. A tree is then placed by God near Adam, bearing the very fruit which God must hav been aware would meet those desires which he had just planted in the mind of Adam. God, all-good, then makes a serpent of the worst possible kind, in order that it might be successful in tempting Adam to eat. After this, God commands Adam not to eat of the fruit under the penalty of death, knowing at the same time that Adam would eat of it and not die. God allows the serpent to succeed in his plan, and then curses the very ground for yielding the tree which he (God) had caused to grow. Not content with this, the almighty dooms both man and woman to a life of pain and sorrow; further, he assures them that their posterity shall feel the terrible effects of their doing what it was impossible for them to avoid. At length the unchangeable God changes his mind; he will no longer commit wholesale injustice. He determins to send his son, who is as old as himself, and therefore not his son, to die, but who is invested with immortality, and therefore cannot die, to atone for wrongs which had never been committed, by people who had never been born, and who consequently could not very conveniently commit any error. As a conclusion to the whole, this all-merciful being has prepared a material fire of brimstone, to burn the immaterial souls of those who fail to see the necessity and justice of this jumble of cruelty and absurdity. Such is the Christian scheme of redemption. And the first objection to it is that it is opposed to the attributes Christians ascribe to God. They believe, or think they believe, that the godhead is composed of three persons of one substance, power, and eternity. On this supposition, the first person could hav no virtue not possessed by the other two. Admitting, then, that infinit justice demanded that an atonement should be made to God the father, a like plea could be urged for an atonement to God the son, and atonement to God the Holy Ghost. For as the three persons are indivisible, the "transgression" was made against all equally. But we do not read of any sacrifice being made to the two last persons in the trinity; the redemption is therefore incomplete. Again, the three persons being one in substance, could a part be wrathful and a part merciful? The New Testament speaks of God's wrath; and it was from this that the atonement was to save us, according to the teachings of Christians, including such writers as Flavel, Wesley, and Dr. Watts. If God and Christ, however, are not distinct, the one could not be vengeful and the other forgiving at the same time. Thus this scheme robs the trinity of the virtue of forgivness. And really this is so. The first person demands payment before granting pardon; the second exacts belief as the condition of salvation; and the third refuses forgivness for sin against himself under any circumstances. The same difficulty is manifested in the death of a part of the indivisible godhead. If Christ alone died and remained lifeless in the grave for three days, he was not equal in eternity to his father; if on the other hand the whole of the deity expired, then we hav the spectacle of a dying and dead God, and the world for a time subsisting without a God to govern it. To say that it was only the manhood of Christ which suffered, is to advance another difficulty by allying humanity with divinity, thus adding a fourth part to the trinity, and destroying the perfection of the whole. For where the human element is, there cannot be perfection. And, moreover, on the Christian theory, a mere human death was not adequate to redeem all humanity; for this, the suffering and death of a divine being were required.

It will be seen that there were two principal causes which were supposed to render the scheme of redemption necessary. First, the alleged sin on the part of Adam, and secondly the enmity between God and man which is stated to hav resulted from the partaking of the fruit. Now, were these causes real? Was there any sin in the case, and did enmity exist? Samuel Taylor Coleridge says, "Sin must be a state originant in the will of the actor, entirely independent of circumstances extrinsic of that will." Evidently there was no such sin as this on Adam's part, for the Bible shows that he was not independent of external circumstances, but rather that it was by the force of those circumstances that he was impelled to do what he did. Can it be deemed sinful to do that which cannot be avoided? As to enmity, if God exists and he created man, he either created the enmity or else man acquired it apart from him. God could not hav created it; being infinitly good, how could he hav implanted that which was bad in his children? Man could not hav acquired it apart from God, inasmuch as there is nothing but what is from God.

It may here be suggested that if this act of redemption was necessary, it should hav been made immediately after Adam's transgression, so as to hav prevented a single generation going to the grave with the curse of original sin unremoved. But, according to Bible chronology, God was not disposed to show his fatherly care too soon. He allowed 4,000 years to elapse, and numbers of generations not only to liv and die, but to run riot in all descriptions of ignorance and iniquity, ere the tardy reparation was made. Why was this? Did it take God—to whom consideration of time is said to be as nothing—4,000 years to determin how to get out of the difficulty which he himself had created? This cannot be, for, according to the Bible, God had the whole plan of the atonement arranged before Adam's fall. Was it that Christ hesitated to obey his father's decree? If no man could be saved except those who believed in Christ, what has become of those millions of human beings who passed away prior to his birth? and what will be the fate of those now living who hav never heard and never will hear the name of Jesus of Nazareth? Were the former saved by anticipation, and will the latter be excused on account of their igrorance? If so, where was the necessity of the atonement at all? If men could enter heaven without the crucifixion, then Christ need not hav suffered at any period. His sorrow, agony, and bloody sweat might all hav been avoided, and numbers of saints might hav died quietly in their beds, instead of enduring tortures at the stake or on the rack. Besides, if ignorance of this scheme will save from damnation, is it not useless and cruel to send missionaries to the heathens with the "glad tidings?" Let them not know of it, and they cannot be punished for rejecting it; inform them of it, and their eternal happiness becomes at least doubtful, for their diversity of organization and education insures that not all of them can accept it as true. As already stated, if the death of Christ was absolutely necessary to redeem the world, it was unjust upon the part of God to permit 4,000 years to elapse before the people had the benefit of his atoning blood. If on the other hand the crucifixion of the savior was not required to restore a lost race, then it was a most cruel and unnatural act for a father to giv his son to a rabble mob to be tortured and executed, amidst the exultation of a disappointed and fanatical people. Again, if it was desirable and praiseworthy upon the part of God to send his son to save the world from eternal damnation, how is it that when he did arrive so many nations were kept in ignorance of his mission and purpose? Even the Jews, God's peculiar people, had no knowledge whatever that incarnate deity was about to expire on the cross. If the regeneration of the world was really the object of Christ, how much better would it hav been if, instead of ascending to heaven to sit at the right hand of his father, he had remained on earth, preaching practical truths, and showing by constant personal example how the world could be rescued from that moral and intellectual darkness and despair to which 4,000 years of a corrupted theology had reduced it. This would hav been the true salvation, the best redemption, and the only atonement necessary for the welfare and progress of mankind.

The scheme of redemption is also objectionable, because of its essential injustice in teaching that the innocent was made to suffer for the guilty. Justice has been defined to "consist in rendering to every one according to his moral deserts; good if he be good, and evil if evil, for the purpose of promoting goodness and discouraging guilt." If Christ, therefore, was without sin, as stated in the New Testament, was it not unjust to punish him for the misdoings of others? Suppose a parent who has seven children, six of whom are bad, and the seventh good. Would it be deemed right on the part of this parent to punish his innocent child because the other children were disobedient? Such injustice would insure for its perpetrator emphatic condemnation. If a judge, knowingly, were to sentence to death an innocent man as the substitute for a criminal, his judicial position would be forfeited and his conduct regarded with horror and detestation. No government would retain the confidence of the people of this country if it were to introduce a measure enacting that all priests should die a lingering death in prison, simply because their predecessors, in outbursts of religious fury, violated the law of right and equality, and defiled the earth with human slaughter. Recognizing this indignant condemnation by human nature of one of the leading principles of the atonement doctrin, can we consistently ascribe an act to God which his creatures would blush to perform? Besides, the doctrin manifests cruelty in proclaiming that, although we had no control over the deeds of Adam, still we are all "born in sin and shapened in iniquity." The moment we enter this life, in our infantile helplessness, our childish simplicity, our youthful innocence, we are the victims of the wrath of God. Granting that in the earliest period of the world's history a sin was committed, will that justify a wrong being wrought upon us? Are we on that account to be banished from eternal bliss, to be condemned to eternal agony? If so, the conduct of God to man is fiendishly cruel and unjust; and we, though unable to resist his power, must rightly scorn and detest his evil nature.

It is frequently asserted by defenders of the atonement doctrin that in this world, in the course of nature, the innocent suffer for the guilty; as, for instance, in the case of drunkards and debauchees, who transmit disease and debility to their offspring. The assertion, however, is groundless. The children referred to do not suffer for, but through the vices of their parents. Moreover, in such suffering, there is no punishment. The children of criminal parents are not charged with guilt simply on account of their birth. But, according to orthodoxy, Christ was punished for the sins of the world, which were expressly imputed to him.

The inconsistency of this scheme of redemption is as palpable as are its cruelty and injustice. We are told that the death of Christ was ordained before the foundation of the world; and we are likewise told that man was created perfect and immortal. The inconsistency here is so glaring that it is really marvelous how it can pass undetected. If it was ordained that the son of God should die for the redemption of the world, the transgressions of Adam and Eve were only a part of God's plan, and certainly did not merit any curse, but rather a blessing. To urge that man had a free will does not remove the difficulty. If man had any choice in the matter, and supposing he had chosen differently, God's plans would hav been thwarted. The scheme implies that man was so made that he could follow but one course, the course which should ultimately lead to the sacrifice of Christ. Thus the fourth gospel tells us that Christ knew from the beginning that Judas would betray him. Further, if the mission of Christ on earth would hav been fruitless unless he was crucified, then, instead of denouncing unfortunate Judas, he should be considered by Christians as a hero worthy of having a monument erected to his memory. Now, if the death of Christ was pre-ordained, so also was "the fall of man," for the one depends upon the other. "For as in Adam all died, so in Christ shall all be made alive." If this be true, it was impossible for man to be created perfect. But the very fact of man's "falling," or giving way to temptation, must be a proof of his imperfection. Again, notwithstanding that Christ is represented as having made a full and complete satisfaction for all sins, that we may secure a share of what Christ died for, we are to lead a life of sacrifice and penitence, whether it agrees with our honest opinion or not. If Christ did pay the debt for our sin, why should we be called upon to make a second payment? Another inconsistency is to be found between the statement that God sent his son to save the whole world, and the conduct of Christ while on earth. If universal salvation was the object of Christ's advent among men, his mission has been a decided failure. Christ, however, never attempted to achieve this result. While thousands were dying without the knowledge of the Messiah, he, instead of going among the vast heathen nations, imparting what information he had, remained hurling bitter reproaches at the Pharisees in his own insignificant country. But Christ did not come to save the whole world; his own words clearly and unmistakably deny the supposition. His mission was to the Jews, and to the Jews alone. And even among them his labors were not crowned with success. Following Christ to the close of his career, hav we not a "sorry sight" in beholding the culmination of inconsistency as manifested in the garden of Gethsemane? Here we see a man who all his life had preached the utility of a faith which, it was said, not only afforded consolation through life, but was also capable of robbing death of its terrors; yet when the hour of death approached, when the period had arrived for him to prove to the world the efficacy of this faith, we find him tortured with agony and racked with fear. In that scene, which was not only to rivet the attention of an amazed multitude, but also to consecrate a life of divinity—a scene which was not only to be the great climax to the scheme of redemption, but was also to remain a lasting monument of love to a wondering people; at this moment, when the hopes of his believers were about to be sealed, when he should hav maintained his position bravely and nobly, we find him weak, vacillating, and in bitter despair praying that the cup might pass from him.

Where do we find consistency in this doctrin of atonement? Is it in the conduct of its hero, who came to die for man, yet, when about to fulfil his destiny, implored to be allowed to evade the task? Is it in the assertion that finite man had committed an infinit offense against an infinit God, and that therefore an infinit atonement was necessary, while we nevertheless learn that it was only the manhood of Christ that suffered? If this be correct, it was after all but a finite atonement. Is it in teaching that Christ came as a voluntary sacrifice, yet was betrayed by man? Is it in condemning the majority of mankind because they are fulfilling the decree of their God? Is it in beholding a God of love and kindness inflicting unnecessary torture upon his sensitiv son? Is it in our being informed by the voice of Christ that by asking he could obtain any amount of assistance from his father, while yet we find that his fervent supplications were unheeded and his dying prayers unanswered? Finally, is it in contemplating the mercy of a God, who, having placed his son on a felon's cross, allows that son to yield up a sorrowful life, after muttering unavailing reproaches in those memorable words, "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?"

Of what use has the Christian scheme of redemption been to man? Has it abolished the supposed effects of Adam's fall? Has it improved the condition of the people? Hav we less pain and misery, less folly and ignorance, less crime and injustice, through the advent of Christ? Are Christians more valiant and virtuous than were the ancient Romans? Has the erection of the cross frightened the miscreant or appalled the tyrant? Has the voice from the hight of Calvary reached the captiv and set the slave free? Has it destroyed error and cemented truth? Has it dethroned wrong and established right? In short, has it abolished ignorance, crime, and oppression, and made knowledge, virtue, and justice permanent? Has it produced such conditions of society as render it impossible for man to be depraved or poor? In the powerful words of the great Frenchman: "Two thousand years hav passed, during which entire nations hav knelt before a gibbet, adoring in the sufferer who gave himself up to death the savior of mankind. And yet what slavery still! What lepers in our moral world! What unfortunate beings in the visible and feeling world! What triumphant iniquity, what tyranny enjoying at its ease the scandal of its own impunity! The savior has come—whence comes salvation?"

Once impress the minds of the people with the idea that this scheme of redemption is true, and they are then made ready recipients for a gloomy faith. If we lament the poverty and wretchedness we behold, we are told that deity has pronounced that "the poor shall never cease out of the land." If we seek to remove the sorrow and despair existing around us, we are reminded that they were "appointed curses to the sons of Adam." If we work to improve our condition, we are taught that we should learn to be content, to remain "in that state of life in which it has pleased God to call us." When we endeavor to improve our minds, to cultivate our intellects, we come in contact with the statement that "we are of ourselvs unable to do any good thing." If we seek to promote the happiness of others, we are assured that faith in Christ is of more importance than labor for man. Talk of redemption!—what can redeem us from all this wrong, all this misappropriation, and all this folly? For nearly 1,800 years hav Christians preached "Christ and him crucified" to a misguided and wronged world. We of the nineteenth century hav but a vague idea of the extent of the influence this doctrin once exercised over the minds of its believers. Although this erroneous faith is now giving way, there are still thousands and myriads who, despite all its inconsistency and injustice, sincerely believe that man's eternal happiness depends upon the belief in the efficacy of the blood said to hav been shed on Mount Calvary. This is the doctrin which has so permeated the minds of orthodox Christians, stifling their reason and perverting their judgment, till they cherish the forlorn delusion that the reasonings of philosophers, the enchantments of poets, and the struggles of patriots are all worse than useless unless purified by the "atoning blood of the Lamb." It is against such delusions that we protest. It is this doctrin which fosters the erroneous and retarding belief that every thought which does not aspire to the throne of Christ, every action which is not sanctioned by his "scheme of salvation," every motiv which does not proceed from a love to the "savior of the world," should be discouraged as antagonistic to our real progress in life.

CHARLES WATTS.

Something About Religion in Public Schools.

At the closing term of our district school (No. 6 in the township of Raisin, Lenawee county, Michigan,) your correspondent was present, with many other visitors both old and young. When the pupils were through with their exercises an opportunity was given for remarks from anyone. After a little pause, your correspondent arose, and, addressing himself to the children, said:

"This day ends the school term of the present year, and I hope you all hav improved the opportunity that has been afforded you to learn something that may be of use to you in after years, as this was the end and aim for which this house was built, and for which this district employs a teacher to come here to giv you instruction in the art of thinking and studying out the primary branches of an education that you will need in coming years. But remember this, children, that no teacher can do this thinking for you. All that he can do is to giv you instruction in the science of learning, and it is for you to make the application of this instruction to yourselvs, and thus you will learn and so get knowledge. Then as you are wise in the use that you make of this knowledge as a stepping-stone to the acquisition of more knowledge, you will grow mentally into the likeness of a higher manhood and womanhood. Physically we attain to our full stature at a little over one score of years, but mentally we grow on and on in knowledge while the brain is able to think and we apply it to study; and the great secret to human happiness in this life is in thinking right and meaning well, and as this life is what we hav to do with, it is of importance that we should try to make the best of it for ourselvs and others."

Here your correspondent took his seat, when the invitation was extended to an aged orthodox Quaker lady, a preacher, who was brought there by one of the church-members who has more religion than wisdom. She was quite brief in her remarks. The main point with her was to advise the children to trust in the Lord. When she took her seat your correspondent arose and said:

"Now, children, you hav these two plans before you. I hav recommended self-reliance to you; Aunt Mary has recommended you to trust in the Lord, and of course you can invest in whichever plan you choose."

Our director now invited the female minister out to the grove to ask the Lord's blessing upon the pies and cakes that were in readiness to supply the alimentary wants of the company. After she went over her mummery all hands partook of the bounties of the tables to their full satisfaction. This over with, and while the children were enjoying themselvs with their swings, one of our principal taxpayers, and one who has protested time and again against having our public school turned into a religious church for a portion of the school day, by having the Bible read in it, took the opportunity to speak with the director, who is another orthodox Quaker, and who, like the other I hav mentioned, is more religious than wise. The taxpayer said to the director that he had no sympathy with thus turning our public schools into churches for any portion of the school day; it was not for this that he paid his school tax, and that the law of this state did not warrant him in any such course, but, on the contrary, it forbids it.

The director replied that he did not care for his protest or the law either; the Bible would be read in the school all the same. The taxpayer, he said, was an unbeliever who would be damned and go to hell.

The taxpayer said this was rather harsh language for a Quaker to be using to a kind neighbor who had never thrown a straw in his way.

The director replied that this was the language of the Bible, and he felt justified in using it in the case.

This language of the director, in his disregard for the statute law on this subject, as well as the feelings and sentiments of a citizen of the district, was addressed to a man more than three times his age in years of activ life, and whose moral character stands second to no one's in the town. But merely because the taxpayer, knowing the character of the Bible as well as he does, and that of the Christian church built upon it, opposed the reading of it in the public school, he must be damned and sent to hell. And this Bible is brought forward by the director as the taxpayer's condemner, and of course the director would be ready to be its executor if he only had the political power in his hands as his predecessors had less than three hundred years ago.

But, Mr. Editor, seeing that these Christians are so anxious to hav their religious text-book brought forward into our public schools and there read to the children as a model book of morals, I think it becomes the duty of every lover of American institutions to giv that old book a canvassing and see what it contains, and what use the Christian church has made of it. In doing this the honest, intelligent truth seeker will find that it is unscientific as a book throughout, and as our public schools are based on science, this of itself ought to a sufficient reason for it to be kept out of the schools. But the honest, intelligent investigator will find a few more reasons for his objecting to the book being read in our public schools. He will find that it abounds in contradictions, both in the Old and New Testaments. He will find that it is full of coarse, obscene reading, which, if found in any other book, would condemn it in the eyes of the refined reader, who would certainly object to its being placed in his children's hands.

I will not quote this book in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but as a specimen I would like to call the attention of some of our schoolmarms to the nineteenth chapter of Genesis, and 2 Kings xviii, 27; then take the seventh chapter of Solomon's Songs. Indeed, if there are schoolmarms that are interested in this kind of reading they can find plenty of it. Then, for a change, you can turn over to Ezekiel and read the whole of chapter xxiii, and there you can see what the Lord had to say to Ezekiel. I might fill a dozen sheets of paper with this kind of reading from the Bible, and while you can pick out some decent reading from it to read to the children, think of the other kind of reading that is in this same book.

We know that the Bible has been made a leading string to immorality and crime, particularly the New Testament; and how any lady with a womanly regard for her virtue and ladyship can take that book into her hands, either in our public schools or in the Sunday-schools, to read to bright-eyed boys and girls, without a blush of shame on her cheek, is a mystery to me that I can only solve by concluding that she is not well posted on the character of the book.

The Bible indorses slavery and the slave trade; it encourages ignorance and even falsehood and hypocrisy; it recommends persecution—indeed than this recommendation there is nothing in the Old or New Testament that stands out more prominently. If the writer of these lines had lived but a few hundred years ago and talked as he now is writing, he would hav been not only threatened with damnation and hell for his hereafter, but these Christians would hav given him a taste of hell-fire here.

Then this holy Bible has been used by all Christian nations to incite their soldiers to deeds of butchery on the field of battle, each army having this Bible for its religious text-book, with a Christian minister on either side asking this Bible God to help his side in the work of human slaughter. Then, again, this Bible will admit of as many interpretations as there are various interpreters, so that it establishes nothing but a religious text-book for religious lunatics to fight over. Therefore, taking this view of the character of the Bible and the religion built upon it, we say keep them both out of our public free schools, and let the latter be conducted on a purely secular basis, always with an eye to natural morality and sound physical and intellectual development. Let school government rest on a basis similar to that which was intended by our forefathers to constitute the foundation of our national government—purely secular; no Bible, no God, no Jesus Christ about it, but simply the rights of man.

The Christian Statesman, in whining over this matter some time ago, complained of it in this way:

"All acknowledgment of God, of Christ, and of the moral standard of Christianity, the Bible, was purposely excluded from it. The name of God nowhere appears, not even in the president's oath. God's law in reference to the qualification for rulers is disregarded, and instead of restricting the choice of electors to men who fear God, it is declared that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States. The treaty with Tripoli, signed by the president and Senate about eight years after the Constitution was adopted, and never called into question as to its constitutionality, declared the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion. Then our own state law is premised on the same basis when it says that no money raised by general taxation shall ever be used for sectarian purposes."

But, then, our director says he don't care for the law or the taxpayer either; the Bible will be read in the school all the same. That is Christian-like every time.

S. D. MOORE.

The Liberal Club.

Reported for The Truth Seeker by a Universologist.

The Manhattan Liberal Club seldom has the pleasure of listening to a more finished (cardinated, hingewise) discourse than was given on the evening of the 7th by Mr. Caleb Pink (dianthus Chinensis). "A Good Conscience" was Mr. Pink's subject. The lecturer's aim was to show that to believe or to think a thing right does not make it so; that the conscience needs enlightening—needs a subjecting to the scientific test—the Test of Experience. There were different consciences—or consciences in diverse domains. The test of the mechanical conscience was the construction of a machine that would work; the test of the medical conscience a medicin that would cure disease or benefit the health; of a moral conscience, that which would conduce to the good of ourselvs and our fellows. The standard could be gained only by experience. Mr. Pink said his voice had been spoken of by some as having a "Metallic Ring" in it. We would say, rather, that it has an Egotistic Ring! This was almost entirely absent during the philosophic part of the discourse, while he was treating of the two Antithetical Phases of Conscience—the submission to authority and the ratiocination of the mind; but, nevertheless, adverting to the third—the linking together (dynamic unity) of these two phases, the "I am (w)holier* than thou" Ring (that which Universologists denominate the pietistic, mystic (the ng Ring), always legitimate in due proportions, was disagreeably apparent. When picturing the (w)holy† man, the man who could perceive "these Things" clearly, the speaker unmistakably had Caleb Pink before his mind's eye, to the eclipsing of all others.

Mr. Pink accords insufficient attention to the principle of predominance and subdominance. He reasons too much in a vicious circle. For instance, "the institutions are as they are because the people are as they are." The people make the institutions, and the institutions make the people. Were this true, absolutely, as Mr. Pink asserts, there would be no escape; they would always remain, while the fact is they are never just balanced—one gets a little better, and then the other, and so, through the convoluto, evolutiv, spiroserial, progression direct and inverse, progress is made. The influence of Mr. Pink's teaching, as he makes himself understood, is to hinder reform. In one sense no doctrin is so malicious as one so near the truth as to be taken for truth. A ladder that is just too short is more disastrous than one much shorter, as it provokes a waste of time.

Mr. Pink was exceedingly happy in his statement of the utter incapacity of man to escape from either authority or reason. One cannot escape authority even while repudiating it, and the human mind uses reason itself to argue that it must not listen to reason—uses the authority of reason to displace reason.

The lecturer was followed by Mr. Langerfelt, who disagreed almost wholly with all that had been said. He didn't "like all this sort of business." He criticised Mr. Pink's use of analogies, and stated what to his mind the analogies suggested.

Mr. Andrews was then called upon, and in compliance he made a masterly statement of the many-sidedness of truth. There was truth in what Mr. Pink had said, and likewise there was truth in what Mr. Langerfelt said, though he differed so completely from Mr. Pink. Mr. Andrews would utter dogmatically (he had no time for aught else) that where a healthy-minded person sees a truth, there is a truth; and it would be found that every dogma of every sect was an intuitiv perception and foreshadowing of a fundamental scientific truth. Lately the scientists hav become impatient of theology, and are endeavoring to ignore the subjects that hav been engaging the attention and vexing the souls of men for ages—such, for instance, as fixed fate and free will. But they only appear again under another name. Take Auguste Comte's philosophy, for illustration. The two first and most fundamental propositions of his system are: 1. The Invariability of Law, and 2. The Modifiability of Phenomena; but nothing is so well settled by the scientific mind as that all phenomena are rigorously subject to law. The invariability of law, taken absolutely, is therefore exactly synonymous with predestination and fixed fate of the theologian and the ancients, while the modifiability by human intervention is in the same manner and degree with the apposit doctrin of free will. We are therefore, here in the stronghold of scienti-philosophy, confronted with the same old problem of fixed fate and free will which must find their reconciliation in fact itself.

Dr. Lambert was the next speaker, and he commended highly and justly both the manner and substance of the lecture (taffyismal). There are not many, he said (and he added, in his own funny way, probably Mr. Pink and himself and a few others), who can hold a discourse so philosophic and profound as this in his mind, and giv it with such grace and ease as this has been given.

Mr. Cohen made a few desultory and wandering remarks scarcely to the purpose of the lecture, however.

*Joke. †Joke.

No other speaker caring to enter the lists, Mr. Pink replied to his critics. His remarks were again pervaded by that self-sufficiency or egotism which had been so disagreeably apparent through the latter part of his lecture, and which so nearly vitiates all he says. He sees very plainly "that divine order" that rules in "the very nature of things," and which makes everything "right just as it is," but fails to see that devilish disorder (the antithet of "divine order") that rules as well and is as apparent everywhere. In this respect Mr. Pink needs to be made more (w)holy.*

The evening was marked by the appearance of Mr. Wakeman on the platform for the first time this season, as he has just returned from his Western tour, where he and Mr Leland hav been attending to Liberal duties. During their absence they attended the New York Freethinkers' Convention at Rochester, the Liberal League Congress at Milwaukee, and also lectured at various times and places on their way. Mr. Wakeman promised to giv us, as booked on the program, an outline of the convention and congress, and what the Liberals are doing. He was greeted most cordially by the club.

[We are indebted for the foregoing report to the kindness of one of the officers of the club. The regular Liberal Club reporter was unavoidably absent from last Friday's meeting, but he got around in season to edit the manuscript.]

*Joke. Getting monotonous.

The Rev. W. H. Murray on Divorce.

"I propose," said the Rev. W. H. Murray, as he faced a large audience in Chickering Hall last Sunday evening, "to discuss to-night the question known as the American divorce question as worthy of your serious attention. There are in this country two parties at issue on this question. One of them holds that the marriage tie should not be severed except for scriptural cause. This I shall call the ecclesiastical party. Those who declare that divorce should be granted for several other causes than those mentioned constitute the popular party.

"The first division includes all who hold to the indissolubility of the marriage contract. In fact it is not indissoluble, since Jesus himself permitted divorce, for one cause at least. The people hav taken the matter from the church and say through their legislatures that marriage and divorce are civil contracts. Who shall marry, and under what conditions, are questions for the courts, not for the churches. The church makes rules for the guidance of its members, but its voice and that of its founder are only advisory. While Jesus allows one cause for divorce, Paul enlarges the permission to include desertion. Luther widened the lines of Paul. Zwingli added cruelty and plotting against the life of a consort. Calvin held that desertion for one year was a valid ground.

"When the great leaders ceased to be mere theorists they saw that no five nor dozen causes for divorce would meet the demands of justice. The cause must be left to the good sense and affection of the parties. Whether a man and a woman can continue to liv happily together can be decided only by themselvs. The church should hav no voice, nor should the law, beyond protecting individual rights and the welfare of the community. To this position the people hav given their consent.

"When husband and wife feel that they must part they go to a competent court and petition for a dissolution of their contract. No power, civil or religious, married them. Their union was their own act, as their divorce should be.

"Maine, in 1870, passed a law allowing divorce whenever a judge of the Supreme Court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, should consider it proper. The ecclesiastical party object to this measure and call it in derision the 'omnibus clause.' It has been assailed by pamphlet, sermon, and petition. Its enemies claim that it has a tendency to multiply divorces and to spread corruption in society. In contradiction of which I claim that it should stand.

"The power and character and learning of our higher courts amply qualify them to do justice in the matter. If our Supreme Court, after a full, fair trial, deem it proper to grant a divorce, who shall impeach that decision?

"But press and pulpit cry out that divorces are too numerous. That assertion is in itself no proof, and I hold that no proof can be brought to support it. In 1880 332 divorces were granted in Connecticut, but will any one say, without investigation, that the number was too large? In each case the parties declared the marital connection intolerable, and a competent judge assented to the decision. The presumption is that in each case the law was complied with, God honored, and the conjugal state freed from taint.

"Let those who complain that divorces were too frequent in Connecticut in 1880, ask what the influence of the court's decree has been upon the parties separated, their children and the community.

"In one of these 332 cases the petitioner was a woman—a wife for twenty years. She represented to the court that her husband was an habitual drunkard. Do you know what that means? It is a horror which silk and satin cannot hide. Yet the ecclesiastical party says it must be borne without complaint. In another case the petitioner was a mere girl, though five years a wife and twice a mother. Her husband was cruel. In court she showed the gray-haired judge the black and blue marks of a monster's fingers upon her fair throat and the red and purple blotches upon her arms and bosom. Yet the ecclesiastical party would hav her sent bock to blows and bondage.

"The number of divorces simply shows widespread domestic infelicity. That we all know and regret. What we want to know is if the remedy is as good a one as we can make and apply. Let gentlemen who bemoan the multiplicity of divorces go to Connecticut and bring us a divorced party who will say that he has been injured. Let them show that the children or the community has suffered. Until they do this, the law should stand as it was in 1880.

"How can you make marriage permanent, do you ask? Not by making separation difficult. Divorce maintains the sanctity of marriage by preventing its association with drunkenness, cruelty, and infidelity. Otherwise, young women would shun marriage and be driven to alliances unsanctioned by church and state.

"Ex-President Woolsey has called attention to the spread of divorce in New England. But he has failed to prove that this is due to any prevalence of ignorance or corruption. While New England has her churches, colleges, homes, and incorporated charities, whose dispensations, like the dews of heaven, fall alike on the just and the unjust, it cannot be said that her civilization is a failure. Yet divorce is growing there, and the applicants for it are mostly women.

"New England womanhood is independent in its individuality. The New England woman is a wife but not a slave. If her self-ownership is ignored and her modesty outraged she asserts her purity by an appeal to the laws of her country. She will die for the man she loves if he treats her rightly, and will leave him quicker than lightning if he doesn't.

"The ecclesiastical party hold that recent legislation has spread divorce, and that divorce corrupts society. In answer to the first proposition, let me call your attention to the fact that the divorce laws of New Hampshire hav not been changed in twenty-five years, yet divorce is as prevalent there as in the other New England states, where the laws are much less stringent. It is clear, therefore, that recent legislation does not increase divorce. If divorce corrupts society, then domestic morality should be highest where the institution does not exist or is under severe restrictions. Is France, where there is no divorce, a purer country than England? Are the Spaniards more continent than the Germans, or the Italians than the Swiss?"

In explaining the cause of divorce, the speaker said that the institution was due to a great historic movement which tended towards individualization and the greater freedom of woman. So great an evolution could not be accomplished without clashing. The movement would work out its own remedy.

The Wonders of Mesmerism.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The great question of the time is, whether mind, soul, astral spirit, or whatever we may term it, can giv manifestations of force and consciousness independent of matter. The different schools of Materialists ignore the existence of individual mind or spirit force, capable of acting outside and independent of what they term matter—e. g., something tangible to the senses, that can be weighed, measured, seen, or felt. It seems to me that a solution of this question of questions can be found in simple experiments of animal magnetism. It is now about thirty-six years ago that I was a party in a series of experiments, in which a certain person was magnetized, and whilst in that condition could tell (through the use of the physical organization, of course) of what was taking place at a distance, matters being so arranged that there was no possibility of deception in any way. It was a common thing for me to magnetize that person, expressly to find property lost under various circumstances. Not only was lost property traced and found by this process, but even the motivs connecting the parties with these matters seemingly just as apparent as the actions. I could magnetize that person just as easily through will-power (I know of no better term) as through physical contact. I also possessed, and satisfied myself and others of having, the same power over other persons; and these things would hav been readily sworn and subscribed to by many if there had been any occasion for it, and I trust there are some living yet, who, if they should see this over my name, would at once recollect the time and circumstances.

Now, this, I am satisfied, is only the A B C of the possibilities of phenomena that can be produced in this way. I claim no particular mesmeric power (a will-power, by the way) in what I hav demonstrated for myself and many others. There are thousands that could do the same, and much more. Can we help giving more or less credit to this kind of power, said to be in possession of the priests of India, taking into consideration the amount and credibility of the testimony attesting to these things. They are accredited of doing things (as they claim, through the astral spirit) that, if really done, would demonstrate the independent action of spirit from matter in the materialistic sense, proving spirit power over matter in its gross form, and the intelligent existence of something, under certain conditions, capable of being propelled from the physical body.

Now I call upon any of your Materialistic contributors to inform us how the body, viewing it from their standpoint, can accomplish anything of this kind. To ignore it, and say it is all bosh or collusion, will not do, for there must be many that the above facts are presumaby much more familiar to at this present writing than they were to myself. If the Materialists were to devote the brilliant talents that many of them possess to the study of metaphysics, I would not be surprised if, like myself, they might feel that there was an easier horn to ride than the one endowing matter, as understood by them, with consciousness, intelligence, and force.

Yours for the truth, A. LANSDELL.

Lompoc, Cal.

This World, This Life, Humanity.

BROTHER S. P. PUTNAM: Your "Bond of Union" is, to me, the most sacred, holy, and inspiring bond I ever read. It stirs my deepest, highest, sublimest life, and inspires me to reach out to you "my heart and hand," and say emphatically, Amen brother, amen, to your grand, glorious, saving, human, utterances. I want you to know that I am with you; that I fully appreciate your appreciation of this earth-life; its significance and realities; its capacities and possibilities to become, through the human material organism, a blissful state, an embodiment of a spirit world, an incarnation of the summer-land.

In vain, for thirty years, under orthodox teaching; in vain for thirty-five years in the "light" of Spiritualism, hav I tried to be a philosophical and scientific Spiritualist. With all my vast accumulation of phenomena, I am compelled to refer them to causes mundane and organic, to forces embodied and incarnate.

After forty-five years of warfare, persecution, and peril, in search of truth, I am, philosophically and scientifically, compelled to renounce the assumed, but to me unproved, entities and forces of the spirit world, and to "take nature's path and mad opinions leave."

"I lean on the bosom of the universe." I here and now, with you, wholly dedicate myself to this, my only life; to this earth, my first, my last, my only home; to nature, to matter; to my own and to all physical, tangible, material, human organisms, which I would fain and quickly so improve, exalt, refine, mentalize, and spiritualize, through parentage and culture, that they would be sacred temples of love, wisdom, and worship of all things below and above, and receptiv and impressible to all the forms, forces, and qualities of nature.

O my exalted brother, how I, how we all, more or less—if I may so speak—hav been cheated out of nature's free, healthful, spontaneous, glorious life; been hindered and prevented from growing by having been falsely (to me) taught, and trying to believe there is a far higher and better world and life than this!

If we are so unhealthy, unhappy, and short-lived in this life, by what facts, analogy, or logic can we prove that we are to be any better in any succeeding state of individual existence? Of the fifteen hundred million of human forms on mother earth, how many are worth a supermundane and eternal existence? The time may come, I conceive it to be possible—"nature's possibilities are infinit"—that human beings may be so germinated, gestated, organized, and environed that they will be immortal, or exist a long time on earth; that when the earthly machine is worth running and its mind knows how to run it, it will run a thousand years, and be in and of itself "the millennium."

Ah, how, by ignorance, false education, and preaching inhuman absurdities, hav we ignored, abused, and perverted "the-house-I-liv-in;" this complex organism, the human brain and body.

How we hav been "fooled" in trying to believe irrational absurdities and unthinkable impossibilities, about "a never-dying soul to save, and fit it for the sky," while we hav treated as vile and contemptible the sacred human form, with all its capacities for perpetual growth, and "the kingdom of heaven within" it, and a spirit world, a summer-land, a "sweet by and by," at, and within, and around its gorgeous, glorious summit, effulgent and radiant; a perpetual sun of love and wisdom!

Oh, how I love nature! "From my very boyhood hav I loved to look on Nature in her loftier moods."

O my penetrating, clear-sighted, impressible, nature-loving Brother Putnam, with you I will walk the earth with gratitude and hope, in my last years of a life devoted to the study and elevation of man, while suffering in material poverty and with inherited weaknesses.

I am rich in the higher commerce of the upper brain; in its divine emanations, radiations, impingments, influxes, and impressibilities. With you will I walk abreast and in front on the pathway of human life and help to remove every obstruction to the new integration, the incoming republic of man.

Through the upward growth and refinement of the human brain and body I see "the promis and potency of every form and quality of life." All hail! the spirit and purpose of your "Bond of Union."

Columbus, Kan. J. H. COOK.

Whither Goes the Vital Spark?

This great question remains unanswered. Here the book of nature is closed. The spark of life, the soul, may be indestructible, immortal, because it can produce an immortal thought; but even if we could prove this, it does not follow that it would be conscious of this existence. Why then puzzle the mind about the future, when it should be engaged in the welfare of the present? Nature, the mighty regulator of the universe, will make no blunders in guarding the future.

Suppose, for the sake of the argument, the soul to be indestructible; the fact that in this existence we are not conscious of a prior existence is strong evidence against the consciousness of this existence in a future state; and if not conscious of this existence, then why should a future existence concern us now. There are incentivs enough for upright action here, without the sordid hope of reward or the fawning terror of a punishment hereafter.

That man has evolved from a lower order of being is evident to any man who studies the analogy and progress of the human race; and the thought that, in ages to come, his descendants, in whose veins runs his own blood, and in whose spark of life his own is permeated, will go on to inconceivable hights of intellectual development as civilization progresses, should be an exalting gratification for his having lived this life, even without the slightest evidence of being conscious, in another state, of his having lived before.

JOHN M. STEARNS.

New England Freethinkers' Convention.

Many Liberals in New England and in New York hav, from time to time, expressed the desire to hav a Freethinkers' convention held in Boston, but no action, until recently, has ever been taken in the matter. At a meeting of the Boston Liberal Club, held Sept. 15, 1883, a committee was appointed to arrange for a convention. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the project was not only practicable, but that there was every reason for believing that the convention would be, in every way, a grand success. The season of the year is favorable for convening a large portion of the Liberal hosts of this part of the country.

It is especially well timed in view of the great interest taken in the Paine celebrations, in Paine Hall, every year on the 29th of January. Another fact, which will greatly aid in giving popularity to this convention, is the notice given of it so long in advance

The writer, who was appointed corresponding secretary, will be happy to hear from all those who expect to attend the convention, and to giv such information, so far as he is able, as may be desired. Address,

W. S. BELL.

18 East Springfield street, Boston, Mass.

The Atoms.

MR. JAMIESON: In reply to your question in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 29th, regarding the "branch of science in which I found the theory of the homogeneous nature of the atoms," I would say that I do not hold myself responsible for the scientific accuracy of theories employed by Materialists in the elucidation of their views. I am not quite sure that anybody knows anything positivly about the "ultimate atom;" yet all hav a right to reason from any hypothesis which is put forth as a basis of argument.

In Webster's Unabridged I find that there are three distinct theories of the nature of the atoms (all hypothetical), and according to Chambers's Encyclopedia, it appears that there is nothing definitly known, even of the shape of the atom, although the most popular theory is that it is spherical and surrounded by an atmosphere. If science shall ever reveal the whole mystery of the primal elements, it will then be quite early enough to attempt to settle the question of "spirit and matter" in the court of the atoms.

When I called force a "mysterious nothing," I was viewing it from the Materialistic standpoint to me it is a glorious something, the vital energy of the universe. But according to your philosophy it is unconscious, aimless, and undirected, a mere effect of present conditions, and that I call pretty near to nothing. You hav quite an array of scientific names, as if there were so many different forces; I supposed these were all one force, acting under different conditions. How is it? MRS. E. HEDDON.

Dowagiac, Mich., Oct. 3, 1883.

To Subscribers for Mr. Wakeman's Lecture.

I wish to announce that Mr. Wakeman is hard at work revising and preparing his lecture for publication, and it will be ready for delivery in about two weeks. It has been suggested that Mr. Mitchell's lecture be published with that of Mr. Wakeman, but the greatly added expense of doing this will prevent. All those, however, who desire a copy of Mr. Mitchell's lecture, can procure one of THE TRUTH SEEKER for 25 cents. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A Sabbath-Breaking Christian Judge.

Chief Justice Waite, it appears, is a Sabbath-breaker; he and his judicial brother, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, went to Coney Island on Sunday, where they dined on the piazza to the music of Gilmore's band. "This example," says the Christian Intelligencer, "will fill God-fearing hearts with sorrow." Just so; but how now about the allegation of "Antichrist" that Chief Justice Waite is one of the eight Freethinkers' on the supreme bench? The Christian at Work says that Waite is an Episcopalian, and doesn't believe there is an Infidel on the bench. Is Dr. Talmage mistaken, or is "Antichrist" a liar? One of the Christian (?) judges swears like a trooper and another breaks the Sabbath. Let us pray.

ANTIC.

Why Not State that Opinion?

From the Independent.

We hav our opinion of the Christian honesty of getting around the probibition of the founder of Girard College, as to Christian ministers entering it, which is reported. It is said they hav a chapel in the institution and get young unordained theological students and others to do the regular preaching.

Book Notes.

MR. WATTS's excoriation of the doctrins of the "Fall and Redemption," printed on another page of this week's TRUTH SEEKER, can be obtained in tract form at 5 cents per single copy, and 45 cents per dozen, postpaid. It is a most excellent document to set Christians thinking.

"SUNDAY LAWS," by John G. Hertwig, is a 12-page pamphlet devoted to a consideration of the relation of Sabbatarian enactments by the state legislatures to the United States Constitution, showing them to be illegal, as being opposed to that instrument. Mr. Hertwig is a clear reasoner and his addition to the literature of the Sunday question fills a vacant place. The price is 10 cents. It may be obtained by addressing the author at Washington, D. C. His post-office box is 706.

THE call for Mr. Remsburg's speech on "False Claims Made by the Church" has been so great that the edition of THE TRUTH SEEKER in which it appeared has been exhausted, and we shall bring it out in pamphlet form, Mr. Remsburg having kindly given his consent. Many hav written us that they would distribute them by the dozen or hundred, and to help them on in the work we hav fixed the price at 10 cents singly, or 75 cents per dozen. Friends, send your orders in generously.

OF Mr. Jacobson's little pamphlet, the "Bible Inquirer," Mr. W. H. Herndon, Lincoln's old law partner, speaks thus highly in a letter to the author:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 18, 283.

MR. JACOBSON, My Dear Sir: A few days since I received your most excellent pamphlet, the "Bible Inquirer," and for which I am much obliged to you. It has gone through the first edition, and should run through the hundredth, until it is in everybody's hand. The arrangement is methodical and excellent. How any sane man or woman in the world can hold that the Bible is God's special revelation, as contended by the Christian world, I cannot conceive. Your one hundred and forty-eight propositions quoted from the Bible refute the idea that God had anything to do with the book. If God revealed it he is a poor God. It smells of the ignorant and barbarous human. It is a record of the struggle of the human soul in the process of its grand evolution to know the unknowable—to know nature—its laws, causes, etc. Your book is a manly attempt to enlighten the world on the subject of revelation, etc. I hope you will scatter the pamphlet over this broad land. You hav done in this matter a most noble deed for humanity. It has most certainly cost you much intellectual toil and effort. Your pay will be the gratitude of your fellow-men. Among the great men of the world is he who removes ignorance and superstition, and substitutes therefor fact and science. You hav done your duty bravely and nobly. I do sincerely recommend your book to all Free Religionists, Liberals, and those who would be free. The book is a good thing; it is no sham; it is fact—solid facts, well and sharply put. I hope you success, my good sir.

Heartily your friend, WM. H. HERNDON.

THE first protest of a religious body against slavery was by the Germantown Quakers in 1688. The Quakers were the Freethinkers of that time, and suffered martyrdom at the hands of the orthodox churches.

IN the preface of "Principia" Sir Isaac Newton said: "By the propositions mathematically demonstrated in the first book, we there derive from the celestial phenomena the forces of gravity with which bodies tend to the sun and the several planets. Then from these forces, by other propositions, which are also mathematical, we deduce the motions of the planets, the comets, the moon, and the sea. I wish we would derive the rest of the phenomena of nature by the same kind of reasoning from mathematical principles." What would Mr. Newton hav thought about this desire of his being fulfilled if he had lived until Mr. Andrews discovered Universology, which is understood to derive all the phenomena of nature by the same mathematical principles which he applied to a few?

Communications.

Paul's Fifth and Last Visit to Jerusalem.

We will now consider Paul's speech in detail.

"Brethren and fathers, hearken to my defense before you. . . . I am a man who am a Jew; and I was born in Tarsus of Cilicia, but was brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and instructed perfectly in the law of our fathers" (xxii, 1–3).

The Syriac for "Gamaliel" is Gmlihil. If Paul said anything at all about his preceptor, the name was probably Hillel, who appears to hav been enough older than Paul to hav been his tutor. Gamaliel, who is generally identified as Paul's alleged tutor, is supposed to hav died about A.D. 50 or 52. Some suppose him to hav been Hillel's son, but Hillel was too old to be Gamaliel's father.

"And I was zealous for God, as ye also are. And I persecuted this way, even to death; for I bound and delivered up to prison both men and women, as the high priest is my witness" (3–5).

What high priest? This was after the murder of the high priest Jonathan II. at the hands of the Sicarri; so the writer of Acts tells us. Now the next high priest was Ismael II., A.D. 56–62. But we shall see hereafter that the predecessor of Jonathan II. is named by the writer, to wit, Ananias, who was high priest A.D. 48–55. Does not this indicate either a fabricated story, or a fraudulent corruption of the text?

But if perchance Paul did call the high priest to witness, the name of that high priest was either Simon IV., 5–23 B.C., or Jesus I., 23–35 B.C., or Ananeel, Aristobulous, or Antigonus, 35–41 B.C. Paul must hav died during the high priesthood of Simon IV., 23–5 B.C.

"And likewise all the elders, from whom I received letters, that I might go to the brethren in Damascus, and bring those who were there prisoners to Jerusalem, to receive capital punishment" (5).

Such letters could hav been given prior to 63 B.C., but positivly not after A.D. 30.

The account which follows, of the journey to Damascus and conversion, we now parallel with a repetition of the same before King Agrippa.

Acts xxii, 6–18.

"And as I traveled and began to approach Damascus, at noonday, from amidst tranquility, a great light from heaven burst upon me. And I fell to the earth; and I heard a voice which said to me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And I answered and said, Whou art thou, my Lord? And he said to me, I am Jesus, the Nazarean, whom thou persecutest. And the men who were with me saw the light, but heard not the voice that talked with me. And I said, My Lord, what must I do? And our Lord said to me, Arise, go to Damascus, and there it will be told thee all that it is commanded thee to do. And as I could see nothing, because of the glory of that light, those with me took me by the hand, and I entered Damascus. And a certain man, Ananias, who was upright according to the law, as all the Jews there testified concerning him, came to me. And he said to me, My brother Saul! open thine eyes. And instantly my eyes were opened; and I looked upon him. And he said to me, The God of our fathers hath ordained thee to know his will, and to behold the Just One, and to hear the voice of his mouth. And thou shalt be a witness for him before all men, concerning all that thou hast seen and heard. And now why delayest thou? Arise, be baptized, and be cleansed from thy sins while thou invokest his name. And I returned and came hither to Jerusalem. And I prayed in the temple. And I saw him in a vision, when he said to me, Make haste, and get thee out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me. . . . Depart, for I send thee afar to preach to the gentiles."

Acts xxvi, 12–21.

"And as I was going for this purpose to Damascus, with the authority and license of the chief priest, at midday on the road, I saw, O king, a light exceeding that of the sun, beaming from heaven upon me, and upon all those with me. And we all fell to the ground; and I heard a voice which said to me in Hebrew, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It will be a hard thing for thee to kick against the goads. And I said, My Lord, who art thou? And our Lord said to me, I am Jesus, the Nazarean [Gr. omits 'Nazarean'], whom thou persecutest. And he said to me, Stand upon thy feet; for I hav appeared unto thee for this purpose, to constitute thee a minister and a witness of this thy seeing me, and of thy seeing me hereafter. [Gr. revision: 'Of the things wherein thou hast seen me, and of the things wherein I will appear unto thee.'] And I will deliver thee from the people of the Jews [Gr. omits 'of the Jews'], and from other nations to whom I send thee, to open their eyes, that they may turn from darkness to the light, and from the dominion of Satan unto God; and may receive remission of sins and a portion with the saints. Wherefore, King Agrippa, I did not contumaciously withstand the heavenly vision; but I preached from the first to them in Damascus, and to them in Jerusalem, and in all the villages of Judea; and I preached also to the gentiles, that they should repent and should turn to God, and should do works suitable to repentance. And on account of these things the Jews seized me in the temple and sought to kill me."

Note now the discrepancies:

Acts xxii.

"The light burst upon me."

"I fell to the earth."

"The men who were with me saw the light, but heard not the voice that talked with me."

(Omitted. See King James's version, Acts ix, 5; Peshito and old Greek codices omit).

"And I said, My Lord, what must I do? And our Lord said, Arise, go to Damascus," etc.

"And our Lord said to me, Arise, go to Damascus, and there it will be told thee all that it is commanded thee to do."

"And he [Ananias] said: The God of our fathers hath ordained thee. . . . And thou shalt be a witness," etc.

"Arise, be baptized," etc.

(Omitted. See Acts ix, 19–23.)

"And he [Jesus] said to me: Make haste and get thee out of Jerusalem; for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me. . . . Depart, for I send thee afar, to preach to the gentiles." Nothing about killing; but see ix, 29, 30.

Acts xxvi.

"And upon all those with me."

"We all fell to the ground."

(Omitted. But in Acts ix, 7, "The men . . . heard merely the voice," and no one was visible to them!)

"It will be hard for thee to kick against the goads" (See Acts ix, 5).

(Omitted. See King James's version, Acts ix, 6; Peshito and old Greek codices omit.)

"And he [Jesus] said to me, Stand upon thy feet; for I hav appeared unto thee for this purpose," etc.

"And he [Jesus] said, I hav appeared unto thee . . to constitute thee a minister and a witness," etc.

(Omitted. See Acts ix, 18.)

"I preached from the first to them in Damascus."

"And to them in Jerusalem, and in all the villages of Judea; and I preached also to the gentiles, that they should repent. . . . And on account of these things the Jews seized me in the temple and sought to kill me."

Comment on such shockingly false reports of Paul's speeches would be superfluous.

We now append a passage from chapter xxii which we omitted:

"And I said: My Lord, they well know that I hav delivered up to prison and hav scourged in all the synagogs those who believed in thee. And when the blood of the martyr Stephen [Onias?] was shed, I also was standing with them, and performed the pleasure of his slayers, and took charge of the garments of those that stoned him" (19, 20).

The writer of Acts says that Paul informed the Lord about the death of Stephen; why didn't Paul tell us something about it in his epistles?

The mob listened to Paul until he told them that the Lord Jesus said to him: "Depart, for I send thee afar, to preach to the gentiles."

"And when they had heard Paul as far as this word they raised their voice and cried out, Away with such a man from the earth! for he ought not to liv! (22).

Where was Bishop James, the brother of Jesus, at this time? Why didn't he come and speak a good word for Brother Paul?

"And as they vociferated and cast off their garments and threw dust into the air, the chiliarch gave orders to carry him into the castle; and he commanded that he should be examined with stripes, that he might know for what cause they cried out against him. And as they were stretching him with ropes, Paul said to the centurion who stood over him, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man who is a Roman [citizen] and not yet found guilty? And when the centurion heard it he went to the chiliarch and said to him, What doest thou? For this man is a Roman. And the chiliarch came to him and said, Tell me, art thou a Roman? And he said to him, Yes. The chiliarch replied and said to him, With much money I acquired Romanship. Paul said to him, And I was born in it. And immediately they who were intending to scourge him fled from him. And the chiliarch was afraid when he learned that he was a Roman, because he had stretched him" [for scourging] (23–29).

If the writer of Acts meant to say that Paul became a Roman citizen by being born in Tarsus, he made a blunder. Smith's Bible Dictionary says that although Augustus made Tarsus a free city, "we are not to suppose that St. Paul had, or could hav, his Roman citizenship from this circumstance;" and the same authority adds that "many commentators hav fallen into this error" (Art. Tarsus).

McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia not only affirms the same, but points out that in Acts the Roman "chief captain (chiliarchos) knew Paul to be a nativ of Tarsus, and yet was not aware of his Roman citizenship" (Art. Paul).

Christian scholars try to get over this difficulty by presuming that Paul's citizenship was acquired by services rendered either by himself or some of his ancestry to the Roman state.

On the question of Paul's citizenship Voltaire's Dictionary says:

"Was Paul a Roman citizen, as boasted? If he was a nativ of Tarsus in Cilicia, Tarsus was not a Roman colony until a hundred years after his death; upon this point all antiquaries are agreed. If he belonged to the little town or village of Gischala, as St. Jerome believed, this town was in Galilee, and certainly the Galileans were not Roman citizens" (Art. Paul).

It is evident, therefore, that St. Jerome, who lived at Bethlehem A.D. 400, did not believe the truth of the statement attributed to Paul in Acts: "I was born in Tarsus."

If the claim of Roman citizenship was false, it was either one of Paul's "lies for the glory of God" (Rom. iii, 7), or one of the many lies told by the writer of Acts. But we prefer, if possible, to believe that Paul did acquire Roman citizenship somehow. In the time of Herod the Great the Roman government was far more friendly to the Jews than in the reigns of Claudius and Nero; and Paul was born during the revolutionary period, prior to the dictatorship of Sylla. And if Pollio, who had leave to lodge with Alexander and Aristobulus, sons of Herod, in the palace of Augustus Cæsar (Jos. Ant. xv, 10, § 1), was our Paul, who, writing to the Philippians, says: "My bonds on account of the Messiah are matter of notoriety in all the palace," then we certainly hav a right to believe that Paul was a Roman citizen. Furthermore, if Paul wrote: "Salute the members of the house of Aristobulus; salute Herodion, my kinsman" (Rom. xvi, 10, 11), is it not a plausible inference that he was in some degree related to the family of Herod the Great?

MANY people experience what they think is a change of heart, when it is only their liver that is affected.

Prohibition.

All forms of government are an evil; all laws made by man for the purpose of controlling the actions of human beings are wrong in principle; all the animal creation preceding man are perfectly free, and never restrict themselvs or limit their freedom, only as the ties of love and devotion imprison them.

Nevertheless all mankind hav recognized some form of government as necessary for the regulation of society, and for the protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and accordingly hav made laws for the purpose of protecting each other in the enjoyment of personal rights, and attached penalties thereto, to punish those that trespass upon those rights.

Government at present, then, is considered a "necessary evil;" hence that government is best that governs least. Having taken the responsibility of punishing certain acts that infringe upon personal rights, which are called crimes, the limits of legislation cannot properly extend beyond protecting those rights. On the other hand, if law-makers hav a right to make any law to protect rights, and to punish those who trespass thereon, they hav a right to legislate to prevent all acts, of whatever name or nature, which are infringements of personal rights whereby one person suffers for the acts of another. To prove, then, what is wrong in principle is to prove what we hav a right to legislate to prevent, if there is a right to make any laws.

The reason there is such a unanimous opinion in favor of prohibiting and punishing certain acts, and such diverse and various opinions in regard to prohibiting and punishing other acts, is owing to the immediate and direct suffering occasioned by the former, and the remote and indirect effect or suffering occasioned by the latter.

No one disputes the right to punish a person for knocking another down, because the effect is immediate and direct. By experience we know what it is. So if a person steals, robs, or murders, the result is so direct and immediate, and, consequently, the wrong so obvious, that no person says the offender should not be punished.

But in regard to prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, there are antagonistic opinions, because the effect is indirect and somewhat remote. I may be robbed of fifty dollars yearly, owing to intemperance, by taxes, bad debts, and various other ways which are the indirect result of the manufacture of alcohol. But there is no public indignation about it; while great excitement would be aroused if a thief should take that amount out of my money drawer.

Personal rights seem to be little understood. If it is not wrong in principle for a person to commit an act that either directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely, injures another, or causes them to suffer in any manner, then there is no such thing as personal rights. And no person can be true to others unless true to themselvs, and cannot be true to themselvs if they violate nature's laws. I think right here is the fulcrum where many are unbalanced, or is the turning-point in their decision as to the propriety of prohibiting the manufacture of alcohol. The indirect and remote injury that comes to them from others' abuse of themselvs they do not fully realize; nor do they see that it is wrong in principle to cause ourselvs to suffer, even if it extended no farther, which it certainly will do.

It has been proven beyond controversy that four hundred out of every eight hundred maniacs in our insane asylums owe their loss of reason to the use of intoxicating drinks; that seventeen hundred out of every nineteen hundred paupers in our poor-houses owe their pauperism to the same cause; that thirteen hundred out of every seventeen hundred criminals commit their crimes while under the influence of alcohol; 43 out of 44 murders are committed while under the same influence; that the cause of 75 diseases out of every 100 is intemperance; that six dollars out of every ten dollars tax we pay go to support the paupers, criminals, and insane that the use of alcohol has made.

In any town, county, state, or country, the poverty of the people, pauperism, crime, and suffering, are always in proportion to the amount of liquor drank.

Besides, intemperate people, as a class, are non-producers, and the wealth of a country is, other things being equal, in exact proportion to the labor done in that country. Everything is of value that requires labor to procure or make. These non-producers hav to be supported, and we hav been taxed to educate and school them, and instead of their giving us an equivalent by industry and paying taxes in turn, they giv us crime, poverty, and pauperism. Manufacturers are worse than non-producers, for they destroy annually 40,000,000 bushels of grain.

Now which is the wiser, to legislate to prevent crime, or to punish the criminal? Shall we try to stop the effect, without stopping the cause?

Is it not just, right, and proper to prohibit an act that indirectly compels me to pay 60 per cent more tax than I otherwise would, when the act to be prohibited in no way increases the wealth of the country, or the prosperity and happiness of the people?

Hav we no right to prohibit the traffic in liquor, when that is the actual cause of nearly all the crimes committed? It is much more humane and just to prevent a person from committing a crime than it is to put temptations before him that lead to the offense, and then punish the offender, if the Lord did set the example in the Garden of Eden.

Those who are opposed to legislation in regard to the liquor traffic say it destroys personal freedom, and is an infringement of personal rights; that every person has a right to the control of their own body. I ask, where is the freedom in not only allowing, but licensing men to make criminals, paupers, and maniacs, and then compel the honest, industrious people to support them by direct taxation? There can be crime committed without infringing on personal rights; hence the prevention of crime can in no way infringe on personal rights to the extent that crimes committed do, even if prohibitory laws were passed for that purpose. In regard to the control of our person, it has often been answered by this reply that no person has a right to do as he pleases when he invades another man's right. Now, no person can do wrong without invading others' rights. Families are made up of individuals, towns of families, counties of towns, etc. So he who injures himself injures not only his immediate friends, but the whole state. The crime is just as great, though remote and indirect, as though immediate and direct.

In matters of belief as to what is right and wrong, owing to education or otherwise, where various opinions are held, legislation upon such points should not be tolerated. Belief is not crime. But every person admits the traffic in liquor to be an evil. Every person knows that any country would be better off without alcohol. Nearly every one knows that it never did anybody any good, but always an injury, and is nothing but an evil. No overseer of any business will employ a man who drinks alcohol. Railroad companies giv them a cold shoulder. They are not to be trusted. Scientists, and men of all creeds, are agreed in one thing, that the use of alcohol is an evil, because it injures those who use it, and consequently the whole country in which they liv. Legislators hav recognized the evil of the liquor traffic by forbidding it without license, the greatest inconsistency imaginable—"You may do wrong if you will pay for it."

Those who traffic in liquor admit their crime by darkening their windows, and concealing, on one hand, all they can, yet doing all in their power to allure young and thoughtless men into the incubator of criminals, paupers, and maniacs.

But some say there is a difference between a crime committed by a personal injury to one's self, and a direct injury to another person. So there is, but the greatest crime is where the injury is to one's self first. The result or effect of an act is what determins the criminality. If money is taken from me on account of the traffic of liquor, which is not for the public good, it is a crime as much as though it had been stolen from me direct. If a husband, by drinking, enfeebles his wife by her sorrow, and by the care he specially requires on account of broken health, and thereby shortens her days as well as his own, the crime is as great as though he had enfeebled her and shortened her days by slow poisoning, as the result was the same. It is a crime even to make ourselvs sickly, and thereby place extra care and work upon our friends. Every time a person takes a drink of intoxicating beverage, he is robbing me of my honest earnings, endangering the safety of my life and property, and retarding me in my progress in the pursuit of happiness. Thus, while I say the less any country governs the better, yet if they hav a right to make any laws for self-protection, they hav a right to prevent a traffic that is of no use whatever, but, on the contrary, is the cause of more poverty, misery, and crimes than all other doings combined. It is a crime to cause a crime, and therefore right to prevent a crime.

FRANCIS M. BUCK.

The Gods.

It is very evident that all the gods we read and hear of are made by men They are such "perfect pictures of their daddies" that no sensible person, not biased by religion, can examin their characters and mistake their parentage. The selfish man, who wanted to liv better than his children, made his god, and forbade Eve from plucking fruit from the best tree in the garden.

I hav seen hundreds of old deacons just as selfish as that. If they had fruit of extra quality, their children did not dare to touch it, except as Eve did, by stealth. Such men would make their god as selfish as themselvs.

A wicked, revengeful man, whose wrath would pour out vengeance on his enemies, makes his god threaten the wicked with eternal punishment.

The man who coverts honor and praise makes his god command that a whole tribe be slain because they did not go up at a certain time to worship and praise him.

And thus it goes on through the Old Testament and other god books, and the careful reader will find almost as many gods as there are writers, each writer making his god like himself, and all the gods together possessing all the virtues, vices, and characteristics of the men who made them. This is what has made so many contradictions in the Bible. Had it all been written by the same person it would hav been more consistent, but being written by different men, and each having a god of his own creation, we can expect nothing but contradictions and absurdities; and when we are told that all of the Bible is from the inspiration of one and the same God, the contradictions, absurdities, and falsehoods become the more glaring. The way to get rid of this trouble is to giv up all the gods; let them all go, and turn our attention to humanity; labor for the universal good of the race here and now; knowing that if we faithfully perform our duty here, it will be the best preparation for a hereafter, if there is such a place, which is not at all probable. J. HACKER.

Berlin, N. J., Sept. 28, 1883.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You will find inclosed $5 for two yearly subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER, to be sent as directed in my private letter, and I only wish I could send you more. I present the claims of both THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Boston Investigator everywhere I lecture, as I know that the success of our cause of mental freedom largely depends upon efficient and widely circulated newspapers, devoted to the spread of truth; and I would that I could inspire every Liberal man to take at least one Liberal paper.

The lecturer can only sow the seed in a course of lectures, and pass on; the effects in large part can be only temporary.

Not so the paper; it comes to feast your reason every week in the year, and I find everywhere the most mental life and greatest interest in the cause in the minds of those who take a radical Liberal paper.

Since I wrote to you last from East Portland, Oregon, I hav lectured at Pendleton, Island City, Somerville, Union, North Powder, Prairie City, John Day, and Canyon Cities—all thriving towns, somewhat widely separated over a wild and broken country, largely devoted to stock raising.

Our audiences everywhere hav been good and appreciativ; and it is but just to say that Pendleton "takes the cake" in the form of a scrub editor on the poor, mangy little sheet known as the East Oregonian, which for low-down meanness has no equal in the northwest; and the unfortunate drunken thing credited with managing the editorial department is conceded by all who know him to be without principle, and the champion liar of eastern Oregon. His name is Wager; and, like every other unclean thing, he needs to be let severely alone.

Our sincere thanks are due to Jerry Despain and his noble good wife, for much kindness during our stay in Pendleton; also to I. S. Bennett, a warm friend of our late D. M. Bennett. This friend could not attend the lectures, but expressed his good will toward me and the cause of truth, by sending in a nice little present in coin to help me on my way. May his good angels do so more to him and his.

From Pendleton, an all night's ride by stage over the blue mountains along the line of the Oregon Shortline railroad, rapidly approaching completion, finds us at Island city, in Grand Round valley, Union county. The people here are quite alive in the cause, and showed their faith by their works—good audiences and ample renumeration for our labor.

Our thanks are due to A. C. McLelland, D. McLane, Dr. Rhinehart, and Mr. Alexander; and a little short man with a big heart whose bible is THE TRUTH SEEKER, and whom they called "Jimmy" showed us much kindness at Union. I must not forget to mention the name of Mr. Kenny, formerly of The Dalles, who, at the close of one of my lectures on the "Definition and Defense of Infidelity," came forward and placed a ten-dollar gold piece in my hand, with the kind words, "That lecture is worth just ten dollars to me." So it is rays of sunshine unexpectedly come in here and there to brace me up.

At Baker City our cause is almost dead in the hearts of the Liberals, and Romanism has almost swallowed up the common schools of the city; and if there is anything in the world for which I hav an utter contempt, and which I am inclined to handle without gloves, it is the entire red-mouthed tribe who are seeking to undermine our government and destroy our schools. May the mildew and dry rot of a bad cause rest upon them, root and branch. Frank Pixley, of the Argonaut, should hav the sympathy of every Liberal man and woman, as he is the best purgativ medicin we know of for that disease known as the pope's Irish.

Our thanks are due at Baker City to our friends Tracy, Cleaver, Scofield, and especially to E. S. McComas, former editor of the Mountain Sentinel, who was as kind to us as a brother could be—not alone in words, but in a far more substantial manner. He is engaged in real estate and large mining interests in and near Baker City, and we hope we shall never forget his kindness to us and his true loyalty to our cause; and also to the aged mother and accomplished sister of E. S. McComas, at Union, are we indebted for home and kindness while lecturing there.

Will wonders never cease! The world is full of wonders, and eastern Oregon has at least one great wonder, and that is a medical lake, situated a few miles from Cheaney, whose waters are highly curativ for many diseases, abundantly attested to by the best people of the country. The water, reduced by evaporation, leaves a salt containing all of the healing properties of the water, put up for market in neat tin boxes, and said by many who hav used it to be a dead shot for rheumatism, piles, dyspepsia, and many other diseases. For any information in regard to it apply to E. S. McComas, Baker City, Oregon.

At the present writing I am at Pararie City, in Grant county, which is almost a wilderness of forests and broken stretches of grazing hills. This town and Canyon City, eighteen miles apart, are 86 and 98 miles respectivly from Baker City; about two hundred miles from The Dalles, and are utterly cut off from the outside world except by stage, without any hope of rail communication in the near future. And yet the people here seem bright and happy, which can only be accounted for by the fact that Infidelity is the predominant thought and THE TRUTH SEEKER is largly taken and read here. A large Liberal League also exists here, and by its leading spirit, A. S. Blinn, was I called here to giv a course of ten lectures, divided between this and Canyon City.

Our audiences here hav been large and appreciativ, and we hav been treated with great kindness, and well remunerated for our labors in this far-off field.

Our especial thanks are due to A. S. Blinn, a live man and a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who looked upon the death of our old chief, D. M. Bennett, as upon the death of an own brother. Our thanks are also due to A. Thompson, Jules LeBret, Mr. Cleaver, and others of whom I will carry away many kind remembrances from Prairie City.

Our next and last point on this already too long trip is Emmetsville and Boise City, in Idaho, where I am called to giv a course of six lectures at each place, after which I hope to turn my face once more toward the garden city, San Jose, California, to go into dry dock a brief season for rest and repairs.

With many good wishes for the success of the Truth Seeker Company, I am, Yours for truth,

DR. J. L. YORK.

[The following resolutions concerning the labors of Dr. York hav been received:]

The officers of the Prairie City Liberal League take this method of expressing their satisfaction in Dr. York and his recent labors in our county:

Resolved, That we tender to Dr. J. L. York our sincere thanks for his course of ten lectures in our county, which hav been both instructiv and entertaining, covering the whole realm of physical, mental, and moral development.

Resolved, That Dr. York is a radical, magnetic speaker of rare talents, and, although his lectures are usually of nearly two hours' duration, holds his audience with unflagging interest to the end; and it is the unanimous desire of the friends of mental freedom that Dr. York should favor us again in the near future, and we are glad to commend him as an educated and courteous gentleman, and an able exponent of the gospel of nature and the Freethought philosophy.

Resolved, That the above resolutions passed at Dr. York's last lecture be sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Boston Investigator for publication. JULES LEBRET,
Sec. Union L. L., No. 160.

Prairie City, Or., Sept. 16, 1883.

Mind and Matter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav read with increased interest the various articles in your journal on mind and matter; and permit me to say that neither mind nor matter is first; they are co-existent and coherent, and force is the activ principle of their nature. When a person dies, mind and matter alike disintegrate, and resolve into their constituent elements; the collectiv force of each is lost and mingles again with the common whole, to be again organized into new identities, with new forms of thought and action. The mental force thus reorganized is the progress of the world, without which there would never be any improvement. This has been my belief for nearly a quarter of a century; and that, when we are dead, we are dead, except as we liv in the continued influence of our past existence. I hope I hav made myself understood.

Barre, Mass., Oct. 1, A.S. 283. ELLA E. GIBSON.

That Anti-Prohibition Plank.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I feel almost ashamed that the Liberals of this nation put such a disgraceful plank as this into their platform:

"7. No so-called temperance (prohibition) laws shall be passed. They are resultless measures of coercion against those at whom they are directed, and insulting restrictions of the personal liberty of those who do not need them."

I deny every affirmation in that "demand" of the Liberal League. I regret that the League is made, directly or indirectly, the tool of the rum-selling power; and will fight that seventh plank to my latest breath, with whatever strength there is in me.

Yours, believing that Liberalism itself countenances no vice, W. F. JAMIESON.

Lake City, Minn.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - OCTOBER 13, 1883.

To the Patrons of The Truth Seeker.

DEAR FRIENDS: Continued ill health, though not serious, has rendered it necessary for me to retreat from the city and the cares incident to the business of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I hav, therefore, disposed of my pecuniary interest in our paper. As you know, a Company had been partially formed, and as soon as the organization of a similar Company is effected the business will be conducted by it, with some changes from the original names, but no change in any other way. Mr. Macdonald will giv the same generous service to the cause of Freethought in editing the paper, while Mr. Charles P. Somerby, long and widely known as a stanch Liberal and experienced publisher of Freethought books, will be the Business Manager. Thus ably equipped, THE TRUTH SEEKER will be a better paper than ever, and remain what my husband strove so hard and so successfully to make it, the leading advocate of mental liberty. I hav not lost one iota of love for the cause, and were it not for my infirmities I would stand at the helm as long as life lasts. But that is not possible, and therefore I ask you to giv to my successors the encouragement so long given Mr. Bennett and myself. I can conscientiously do this, knowing the paper will remain the same sturdy advocate of right and opponent of wrong.

I would also say that the past summer has been a dull one in the matter of subscriptions and book sales, and I know that the money is needed in the office for all arrearages now due. I ask that it be remitted at once to Mr. Somerby, that all bills may be promptly met.

Firmly hoping and believing that you will support the paper in the future as strongly as in the past, I remain

Your grateful friend, MARY W. BENNETT.

Stock "Arguments" Examined.

In the following letter are embodied the regular falsehoods about Freethought and Freethinkers, and the stock assumptions about Christians and Christianity. We choose this out of several that hav reached us lately because this preacher has exhausted the list, while the others, more modest, or with remnants of a conscience left, hav confined themselvs to repeating one or two of the misstatements:

"JOHNSTOWN, MICH., Sept. 29, 1883.

"DEAR EDITOR: The 25th of August the Liberals of this place had a picnic, which was practically broken up by the howling Methodists who attended and insisted on F. L. McCoy, D.D., their big gun, speaking. He talked till sundown, cutting short the time of S. D. Moore, of Adrian, who could speak for only a short time.

"I am writing some in answer to McCoy, and wish to be informed on a few points.

"1. He says he can prove that Christianity has existed since Christ; 2. He says all colleges are presided over by Christian ministers; 3. He says the Protestants are building two churches a day, and will soon make the number four; 4. He says the original naming of God is 'good;' 5. He says all Infidels are blacklegs, and all blacklegs are Infidels; 6. He says the real cause of the Dark Ages was because the Bible stepped out, and that all lives are failures without Christianity.

"Now please giv me the names of some of the men in high standing who are Freethinkers, also the names of a few of the ministers who hav turned Infidel, and some other facts to place before him, for facts are the best arguments with which to refute these 'fools for Christ's sake.'

"Yours in the cause of Freethought, H. M. KING."

To all of which we would kindly remark, the minister does not know what he is talking about.

1. An unbroken succession of "Christians" cannot be historically proved, that is, aside from the Bible, which cannot enter into the question, as that itself is disputed. The Catholic "traditions" go back to "Christ," but the Protestants reject these traditions in all things else, and they cannot be allowed in this. That church maintains that Peter was a bishop at Rome from the year 42 to 66, but outside of the church's assumption there is no authority for the statement. The epistles of Peter are spurious according to Dr. Davidson, a Christian critic. There is no "heathen" record of the first century that refers to Christ or Christianity. The term Christian, according to Acts, was first used at Antioch, about 43, but as the "Book of Acts" was certainly not written till the year 125 and probably not for sixty years after, that is no proof. The early Christians were not Christians—they called themselvs Disciples, Believers, Elect, Saints, or Brethren (See Bingham's "Antiquities of the Christian Church"). Another point is, these early priests did not believe as the Christians do now. Everybody knows how the church has drifted from the ancient simple faith. So the men who were connecting links between Christ and Constantine were not Christians in name, and those who call themselvs Christians now are not of the same belief as those who followed Christ, but did not call themselvs and were not called Christians. The passage in Josephus relating to them is admitted by all to be a forgery, and Suetonius's expression calling them "a villainous race" (A.D. about 110) most probably referred to the followers of Chrestus, a leader of riots in Rome. But whether this be so or not, it is the first undoubtedly genuin reference to the word Christian. From Christ's death, A.D. 30 to A.D. 110, the word Christian was not used. It would seem difficult, in the face of these historical facts, to prove that Christianity has existed since Christ. Paul, the real founder of Christianity, is a historical character, but no sect of Christians lived in the first century.

2. The assertion that all colleges are presided over by ministers is idiotic. What use would a medical college hav for a minister? Or a law school? Theological seminaries hav D.D's for presidents, and Yale, Harvard, and Princeton hav more or less ministers presiding over their courses of study, but Cornell, Columbia, Girard, New York, and others are not weighted down in that manner.

3. Whether two churches a day is the right number or not to say the Protestants are building we do not know. We hav only the Christians' word for it. The question is, Do they pay for all they build? A search in the various county clerks' offices would show that nearly all the churches in the country are mortgaged, and many employ professional debt-raisers to help pay their liabilities. What would Jesus hav thought of a "professional debt-raiser?" But if the increase is two buildings a day, the increase in attendance is not encouraging. The little city of Dover, N. H., furnishes a good illustration, perhaps, of the indifference of the people toward churches. Dover has 12,000 inhabitants, and eleven churches, which count as communicants about 2,000. The state of those eleven churches, we are glad to say, is very bad. Three of them are entirely out of ministers, and four more are closed for repairs for periods ranging from one week to six. Whether the repairs will extend to the theology or not our informant does not say. Twenty-five years ago all these churches had forenoon, afternoon, and evening services, with week-day prayer-meetings. Some years ago, when it was proposed to open an observatory on Sundays in this city, every blessed minister in the town signed a protest against the "desecration." The result is seen now in the empty churches. The people deserted the churches because the churches were opposed to their welfare.

On the whole, we are satisfied with the condition of the church edifices.

4. If "God" means good, what does "Devil" mean? But, as a matter of fact, "God" is not good; does not do good; does not mean good, and there is nothing good about it. From its similarity in form it has been assumed by ignorant people to mean the same. Some derive it from the Persian choda, meaning "possessor." The Latin Deus and its Greek equivalent hav been derived from the Sanskrit div, "to giv light." Others derive it from Greek words meaning "to implore." But most people, when they say God, mean the Jehovah of the Jews. Jehovah is really Jahwé (pronounced Yahwa), one of the meanings of which has been asserted to be, "He who causes to be."

5. The insult that all "Infidels are blacklegs and all blacklegs are Infidels," is beneath serious notice. With every day bringing to light some new clerical crime, with a larger percentage of ministers in state prisons than any other profession yields, while the most eminent scientists and men of letters of all lands are Infidels, it ill becomes upstarts in theology to open the flood-gates of slander.

6. As a historian Mr. McCoy would be a failure It is a pretty well settled fact that the Dark Ages were dark because the church cast her infamous shadow over them. Science was imprisoned in the monasteries; the priests would not let the people learn to read and write, and would not learn themselvs, in Italy not one in a hundred being able to write a letter; even the Bible was chained to the pulpits; inquisitions were scattered over the country from Spain to Germany; the courts and courtiers of all the rulers were noted for their piety, licentiousness, and ignorance; medicin was called a black art, and the Moorish physicians subjected to inquisitorial tortures; astronomers were imprisoned for their heresy in deriding the Ptolemaic system of astronomy; in short, utter desolation was over all that portion of the earth, the people just eating, sleeping, telling their beads, and living the life of stupid animalism. The black pall of the church covered them, and through its meshes of death no ray of light could penetrate. A few geniuses flashed up only to be cut down by the church. Those were the palmy days of superstition. Everyone was ignorant and believed in the divine power of the priests, who fostered the ignorance that they might preserve their power. Witches and devils were thoroughly and honestly believed to be realities, and hundreds were killed because they had been possessed. The church's sway extended to the cut of the people's garments, and to the preparation of their food. Their slavery was abject, servil, complete. The church's rule was haughty, tyrannical, and universal. There wasn't a Freethinker west of the Bosphorus. If the Mohammedans had not fought their way to the Atlantic there would not be now. If to any book is Europe indebted for civilization it is the Koran. If Mr. McCoy would read Lecky's "History of European Morals," Hallam's "Middle Ages," Draper's "Intellectual Development of Europe" and "History of the Conflict Between Science and Religion," with a few special works, he would not be betrayed into making such astonishing statements, and denying what is as well established as that the earth moves around the sun.

A few gentlemen of high standing may be mentioned who are Freethinkers, of those living and dead whose services to science, government, and humanity hav made their names pre-eminent: Charles Darwin, Prof. John Tyndall, Ernest Haeckel, Herbert Spencer, Auguste Comte, Thomas Huxley, John W. Draper, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Franklin, George Washington (the two latter were Deists, as was Paine), Stephen Girard, James Lick, Peter Cooper, Robert Dale Owen, and a host of others not so well known, but no less practical humanitarians and scholars. The list of ministers who hav reformed is a long one. Take the Rochester Convention speakers for example. We had on that platform ex-reverends as follows: George Chainey, J. H. Burnham, Samuel P. Putnam, W. S. Bell, C. B. Reynolds, and there may hav been others for aught we know. The Committee on Speakers did not ask the orators if they had always been free.

Mr. King's Christian talks very wild, and would be unworthy of so much space were he not the echo of better learned but just as unprincipled divines who hav pitched the tune he sings clear through.

A Case for the League to Look Into.

The following card reached us a day or two ago:

"SPRINGERTON, ILL., Oct. 1, E.M. 283.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I send you in this mail a copy of the Saints' Herald, the official organ of the Latter Day Saints, Mormons, and Josephites, printed at Lamoni, Iowa, containing an account or statement in regard to the Freethinkers' Convention at Rochester. I hav to leave here this morning. I am about to be indicted before the Grand Jury for blasphemy. I would not care for that so much, as I would pay my fine, but their intention is to make me out insane and send me to an asylum, and rather than run the risk of separation from my family I leave. 'Why!' they say, 'he surely must be crazy to even deny the existence of a Jesus Christ.' I tell you the 'Revelations of Antichrist,' and the Annie Besant-Hatchard debate you sent me hurt superstitious dogmas. Don't stop my paper; I will remit as soon as I can get work. ARTHUR C. EVERETT."

Among the articles of the Constitution of the National Liberal League is one pledging it to defend all persons prosecuted for opinion's sake. We know nothing further of this case than what appears above, but it seems to be one where action is imperativ. If Mr. Everett is in danger from the bigoted members of the Christian church, he should be helped by every Liberal in the land.

The Saints' Herald alluded to is the "official organ of the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and contains a very fair statement of what the New York Freethinkers' Association is.

The Minister is Wrong.

"BLUFFTON, OHIO, Sept. 25, 1883.

"EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I was talking to a reverend of the Presbyterian stripe a few days ago, and in the course of conversation I told him that Calvin and Jonathan Edwards both taught that some people were predestined to be damned, and that there were infants in hell. The reverend became very wrathy, and said that that was a slander, and he defied any man to prove that they taught any such thing. I told him that I had not the books at hand to prove it, but I thought they could be procured. And now I wish you would tell me where the evidence of the above claims can be found, as I would like very much to show him the facts, if such they are. Fraternally, F. C. STEINGRAUER, M. D."

Calvin was the founder of Presbyterianism, and Jonathan Edwards one of its ablest defenders. His "Defense of the Christian Doctrin of Original Sin," and Treatis on Free-will, are considered the two ablest Calvinistic works extant. The works of these two men furnish the basis of the Presbyterian creed. The "Confession of Faith" epitomizes what they taught on theological matters. Concerning "predestination" the "Confession of Faith" says, chapter iii, section 3 and following:

"III. By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death.

"IV. These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definit that it cannot be either increased or diminished.

"V. Those of mankind that are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ, unto everlasting glory, out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight of faith or good words, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions, or causes moving him thereunto; and all to the praise of his glorious grace.

"VI. As God hath appointed the elect unto glory, so hath he, by the eternal and most free purpose of his will, foreordained all the means thereunto. Wherefore they who are elected, being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ, are effectually called unto faith in Christ by his Spirit working in due season; are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

"VII. The rest of mankind, God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his own will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice.

"VIII. The doctrin of this high mystery of predestination is to be handled with special prudence and care, that men attending the will of God revealed in his word, and yielding obedience thereunto, may, from the certainty of their effectual vocation, be assured of their eternal election. So shall this doctrin afford matter of praise, reverence, and admiration of God; and of humility, diligence, and abundant consolation to all that sincerely obey the gospel."

It will be noted that the doctrin of this high mystery is to be handled with special prudence and care, for the reason, as given in a footnote to the "Confession," that "the secret things belong unto the Lord," whose judgment is unsearchable and his ways past finding out! This is about the only thing in the "Confession" that we can agree with, but there is no doubt this doctrin does need careful manipulating. Servetus, for instance, would hav been grateful had Mr. Calvin himself handled it with more prudence. James Gruet would hav been better pleased also had Calvin handled it and him more carefully.

As to infant damnation the "Confession of Faith" says, chapter x, section 3:

"Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ. . . . So also are all other elect persons. Others not elect cannot be saved: much less can men, not professing the Christian religion, be they never so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature, . . . and to assert and maintain that they may is very pernicious and to be detested."

This, it will please be borne in mind, is from the Presbyterian "Confession of Faith," founded on the teachings and writings of Calvin and Jonathan Edwards, and is subscribed to by every Presbyterian church-member. That a minister of that denomination is ignorant of these cheerful utterances being found therein speaks ill for him. He should not preach a sectarianism of whose most important dogmas he is totally ignorant.

A CATALOG of Truth Seeker Publications will be sent free upon application to this office.

Editorial Notes.

THERE is very little Christianity in France, yet she enjoys a prosperity hitherto unequaled in her national existence.

IN an Allocution last week the pope ordered the Catholics to "desire above all things the restoration of temporal power." The rest of the world will desire above all things just the reverse.

IT seems that a sense of decency still exists in Stratford, Conn., in the congregation presided over by the Rev. Houghton who preached such outrageous sermons accusing Wm. Lewis of the Rose Ambler murder, for that pulpiteer has been requested to resign. He will also be sued for slander.

THE Boston Liberals hav a "Divine Homo" society, of which our Universological friend, John S. Cobb, is "prolocutor." Prolocutor, Brother Seaver explains to an inquiring patron, means chairman, and the Divine Homo "means, probably, that if there is any divinity it is Humanity." Brother Seaver was always strong on Latin.

THERE is a popular demand for a religion that can be carried behind the counter. The Christian system is claimed by some to be that religion. How would our foreign Christian population like to hav their butcher take this precept behind his counter? "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt giv it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it to an alien."

As an illustration of the state of affairs the church would like to introduce in all countries the action of the archbishop of Ecuador stands pre-eminent. Just before the election that individual addressed a pastoral letter to the clergy, which he ordered read in the churches, informing the people that as an election was to take place, and that as many of the voters were ignorant as to who was the best man, they must therefore cast their votes as instructed by the clergy. Ecuador must be in its Middle Ages!

THE statistics presented by "Apostle" Cannon to the Mormon conference held last week in Salt Lake city showed a membership in Utah of 127,294; number of families, 23,000; births in the past six months, 1,200 males, and 1,100 females; number of children under 8 years, 37,000; number of marriages in the past six months, 339; new members, 23,040, and deaths, 781. The church organization embraces 12 apostles, 58 patriarchs, 3,885 seventies, 3,153 high priests, 11,000 elders, 1,500 bishops, and 4,400 deacons. Arizona reports a membership of 2,264. Idaho is not reported, but has double that of Arizona. Eighty-one missionaries hav been appointed to go on missions to Europe and the United States. Eighteen of this number were set apart for missions in the Southern states, where the church is meeting with considerable success in increasing its membership. The Southern converts are being colonized mainly in Colorado. One of the issues of the antislavery times was over the extension of slavery into free states. Would it not be a good idea to prevent the extension of polygamy into the neighboring states and territories? Let the saints keep their brothels in Utah.

THE gospel field in and around St. Louis is pretty bare, especially the Baptist lot. At a meeting of the St. Louis association Mr. Williams, of the Central Baptist, said he was appalled at the showing. There was not a dollar raised for missions, and not a missionary in the field. In the association's district there was not a self-sustaining church outside of St. Louis, and most horrible of all, the devil rode triumphant over the field and took possession of the churches. What the devil is doing with the churches he did not state, but another minister said they were "rotting with the decay of neglect." The Rev. Mr. T. L. Lewis thought the religious destitution of one portion of Missouri was unparalled, for there were persons living in that state as much as sixteen years old who had never heard a sermon. Another minister asserted that for the 175,000 Germans of St. Louis there is only one church and two stations. Services in three churches had been discontinued, and a fourth was soon expected to be shut up. This is a bad showing for Zion. The Baptists of Missouri at least are not contributing very largely to the "two churches a day" which the Rev. Mr. McCoy boasts that the Protestants are building.

A CURIOUS case of dishonesty in a church has just been noted at New Milford, Conn. The Rev. J. B. Bonar closed his connection with the Congregational society of that town Sunday before last. Last summer Mr. Bonar preached nine successiv sermons which were taken bodily from a volume written and published by a minister of this city. Upon being detected, Mr. Bonar tendered his resignation, which was accepted. He was a penitent thief. But his church, after calling him to account, has been as dishonest as he. On Sept. 14th the society passed the following resolution, giving it to the world as the real reason why Mr. Bonar left their pleasant company, and sallied forth churchless into the world:

"The Rev. James B. Bonar has tendered his resignation to the church on account of failing health. We deeply regret the necessity that has led Mr. Bonar to make this request, but in view of his ill health we feel constrained to grant it. We desire to put on record our high appreciation of his labors as an able and faithful preacher of the gospel, and especially of his work as a pastor. We earnestly pray that his health may be restored, and that many years of usefulness may yet be granted him."

In severing their connection we think this congregation and minister hav made a mistake. They were evidently intended to work in harmonious co-operation.

TALMAGE has gone to the aid of the God-in-the-Constitutionists, and advocates with all his peculiar vigor the honoring of the Jewish deity by placing his name in our political bonds of union, and "on all our standards." Mr. Talmage demands this of the present political parties, and, prophet-like, makes it the condition of success. The one that shall do it first is the one God will favor. This is biblical. It sounds like a proclamation from Moses, when he called the God of battles to his aid, and overthrew his enemies. Mr. Talmage also proposes to proceed against the Mormons with an army with banners. This is his best word:

"First of all, I remark that God and civilization demand of the political parties of this day a plank anti-Mormonistic. It is high time that the nation stops playing with this cancer. Nothing but the surgery of the sword will cure it. All the Congressional laws on this subject hav been notorious failures, and the last failure was the worst—the Edmunds bill—because so much was expected of it. American crime, with its long rake stretched across other continents. is heaping up on this land great windrows of abomination. It will be a saving of human blood if armed battalions march on now to destroy that great evil before it is a hundredfold more fortified. What a legacy for us to leave the next generation! A vast acreage of sweltering putrefaction, of lowest beastliness, of suffocating stench, all the time becoming more and more malodorous and rotten and abominable! We want some great political party in strong and unmistakable terms to declare that it will extirpate this great harem of the American nation. We want some president in his opening message to ask for an appropriation for an expedition against Mormonism, and then put Phil Sheridan into the stirrups and go Westward, and in one year Mormonism will be extirpated and national decency vindicated."

This is Christian sentiment, but not American. The time has gone by for armed religious crusades, and if the law cannot reach and punish crime, fanatical hate will not be let loose. Polygamy is a beastly practice, and Mormonism is a most intolerant and superstitious religion, but the surgery of the sword will never be the remedy to apply. A political party that should, to receive support, pledge itself to inaugurate a campaign of religious hate and bloody warfare would be buried out of sight.

THE action of a few men in Milwaukee, led by R. C. Spencer, who is not a Liberal but a church sycophant, in passing resolutions against the League, was a gratuitious insult unworthy of gentlemen, and the comments of a Chicago Spiritualist paper are the flippant sneers of a whipped demagog. It will not hurt the persons named nor advance the character of certain people at Milwaukee that John Bundy says of them:

"The representativs of the Milwaukee Liberals thus tell their fellow-citizens: That while as a matter of courtesy they cannot decline to accord the National Liberal League a chance to hold its pow wow in their hospitable city, yet they giv warning that whatever of nastiness, vulgarity, and crankiness the meeting may generate they are in no way responsible for. The ghost of D. M. Bennett may hover over the head of the Severance and fill her soul with a fresh supply of nitroglycerin and gall, but the Liberals of Milwaukee will not father it; Brother Green may introduce his well-worn act of passing the hat for nickels, but Milwaukee Liberals are not expected to respond; the 'Monument Fund' and other appliances for squeezing the dear 'Liberal' people may be applied, but the Milwaukee committee will not weep if its constituency fails to contribute. From what the Journal knows of the sentiments of a majority of Milwaukee Freethinkers, they would, however, be quite willing to pay for carting the National Liberal League to some rendering establishment, where it could be converted into a useful, though humble, article of merchandise."

It looks bad to see a paper whose strongest editor was shot down like a dog by a wronged husband, prate of vulgarity. And the man who asked the prayers of the churches no longer ago than last summer cannot in any true way be called a representativ of Liberals. Mr. Bundy is not asked to contribute to the Monument Fund; indeed, a contribution from him would not be received. The churches do not scruple to accept the money of their enemies, but the monument committee is more particular. And Brother Green, we fancy, wants none of Mr. Bundy's nickels. His labors are honorable, and his reward should be untainted. From what took place at the League Congress we feel assured that more money could be raised to bury Spencer and his clique than the Journal will get towards getting up Spiritualistic organizations that exclude from their platform such veterans as Amy Post, a woman worth more to liberty than a million John Bundys.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Salamanca, N. Y., convention will be held December 28th, 29th, and 30th of December, instead of on the days announced last week.

OUR friend W. S. Bell wishes us to say that he will make engagements for lectures in New England and New York. He has recently returned from an extended and very successful trip through the West. His address is 18 East Springfield street, Boston, Mass.

MRS. H. S. LAKE and Mr. W. F. Peck will speak for the Northern League of Iowa and adjacent towns the Saturdays and Sundays of October. They will arrange for other week evening lectures elsewhere. Parties who desire their services will please write at once to Waverly, Iowa.

THE friends of Liberalism in Texas are invited to meet at Waco on the 28th, to consider the propriety of organizing a State Liberal Association. The committee signing the call are C. H. Clark, O. Burwitz, and J. L. Morgan. Those who will attend are asked to communicate with J. D. Shaw, box 159, Waco, Texas.

MR. WATTS is meeting with great encouragement in his lecturing. At Chicago, Racine, and other places he has been invited to return. He and Mr. Chainey, with whom he is making a month's trip through the West and Northwest, are powerful advocates of Liberalism and should hav an engagement every night in the whek. They may be addressed in care of the Radical Review, 86 5th Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Communications.

Bible Prophecies Discounted.

BETTER PROPHETS IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY THAN EZEKIEL OR DANIEL.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The wonderful predictions about which inquiry was made recently by "A Truth Seeker" were published as early as during the year 1878, and doubtless earlier in several journals. I take it that a part of them were published long prior, and that a verse or line was added after the events occurred—a customary way with prophets. Those who are curious about such matters may investigate as to when the verses really first appeared. Some of the lines beginning, "Coaches without steeds shall be," I distinctly remember to hav read as early as about 1842. The inclosed sheets I clip from the "Western Farmers' Almanac," of Louisville, Ky., for 1879, being an editorial by the editor thereof. Holt.

From the Western Farmers' Almanac, 1879.

There resides in Canada an eccentric gentleman, now ninety years old, who possesses a unique collection of odd books and papers whose history dates away back through many different generations of his family. Many extracts from these publications had been cut out and pasted into a scrap book, the last entry in which dates back to 1815. Among the most interesting of its contents is a rhyming prophecy believed to hav been written in 1789, but its first known publication was in 1812. It is called "Columbia's Prophecy," by "Master Mage." It was recently brought to light by a correspondent of a prominent journal, and we giv the following in his own words:

"I hav taken the liberty to change any spelling that does not accord with our modern ideas, and to place my comments with the lines suggesting them, not in the more cumbrous form of foot-notes. Thus it begins:

"Columbia, home of Liberty,
Shall not twenty rulers see
Ere there shall be battle smoke,
Ere peace shall seem to be broke,
And in waves of peril tossed
The ancient order be deemed lost.

"Mr. Hayes is the nineteenth president; there has been 'battle-smoke,' and the present political agitation may be taken as fulfilling the rest of the prediction.

"But Columbia shall again
Rise, and fairer be than then;
Wonders great all men shall see.
Coaches without steeds shall be,
Air shall burn, and water fly
Swift as eagles cut the sky.

"These lines would seem to relate to railroads and gas illumination. The next ones clearly predict the electric telegraph and ocean steamers:

"Brother shall with brother speak,
Whom he hath not seen a week;
Letters shall go 'neath the deep,
Likewise o'er the mountain steep:
Boats shall sail against the wind,
Or, sailless, leave fleet ships behind.

"The ensuing six lines seem to shadow forth those wonderful inventions of Prof. Edison, the telephone and phonograph.

"Men shall speak to brazen ears
That shall be mouths in after years;
Word spoken shall be sent by post,
And no syllable be lost;
A drop of water shall hav then
The force of many thousand men.

"The 'prophecy' then continues:

"Ghosts shall guide the plow—and rain
And snow shall fall as men ordain;
The commonest of stone or stick
Other shall be than long, broad, thick.
Here and in a foreign clime
Men shall be at the same time.
Bread folk shall from ashes bake,
Ice they shall to diamonds make,
And the salt seas his thirst shall slake.
Fish shall be where fish are not;
Wells of fire shall be sought;
Women shall be turned to men.

"Much of this passage is senseless, and clearly written in imitation of the old weirds. Whether the rain falling 'as men ordain' might not be taken as predicting the modern weather reports is a question for the individual reader to pass upon. May we satisfy the above conditions with the artificial cultivation of food-fishes, the oil-wells of Pennsylvania, and our own petroleum area, and the agitation for female suffrage and equal rights?

"All these things shall happen—when?
They shall happen—not before
Six years shall be reckoned four;
Thirteen shall be thirty-nine;
This shall be the certain sign:
Nine and nine reversing take—
Eight and one the nine shall make.
When ninety-two are eighty-one
All these marvels shall be done.

"This looks very much like the time when 'two Sundays meet,' or 'to-morrow come never,' but I hav chanced upon a singular explanation: 'When ninety-two are eighty-one.' Washington took his seat as president in 1789; add ninety-two, and you have eighty-one (1881). This 1881 is also made up of ones and eights, forming nines in reversed order. The 'thirteen' may be taken as alluding to the original number of states which the rhymer—remember that he is supposed to write in 1789—would hav in mind. As for the 'thirty-nine,' the coming admission of the territory of Washington, which I infer will become a state before 1881, will complete the tale. Ere taking the predictions about the several presidents let me place them in order.

1. Washington.	8. Van Buren.	14. Pierce.
2. J. Adams.	9. Harrison.	15. Buchanan.
3. Jefferson.	10. Tyler.	16. Lincoln.
4. Madison.	11. Polk.	17. Johnson.
5. Monroe.	12. Taylor.	18. Grant.
6. J. Q. Adams.	13. Fillmore.	19. Hayes.
7. Jackson.

"Thus the chronicle begins:

1. "The first shall, too, the second be,
If the Fates tell truth as he;
2. Where sits the sire shall sit the son,
But not the son's son,
And ere the son shall ruler be
One state shall send three;
Three with one shall make her four,
And there shall be no more.
3. The first sprung from these fecund loins
In death his predecessor joins.
Who beneath his son shall pass,
And in a house that different was.
4. The next one shall hav peace and war;
5. The third shall brook no kingly star;
When the quarter century's run.
6. Where sate the sire shall sit the son.

"Here are my interpretations: 1. Washington was his own successor, and his truth-telling was proverbial; 2. John Adams is clearly indicated. His son also attained to the presidency, 'but not his son's son,' though Mr. Charles Francis Adams has often been spoken of as an available presidential candidate. Between the Adamses did come three sons of Virginia, who, with the accidental John Tyler, 'made her four,' nor has 'the mother of presidents' since borne another thus distinguished son; 3. Jefferson and his predecessor, John Adams, died on the 4th of July, 1826, that predecessor passing 'under his son,' John Quincy Adams, 'in a different house.' I believe it is a historical fact that the venerable ex-president died on the floor of the capitol; 4. The war with England was begun and concluded under Madison; 5. May this 'brook no kingly star' not hav reference to the so-called 'Monroe doctrin?' If it has not I am at a loss for a translation; 6. John Quincy Adams entered the White House at the quarter-century, in 1825.

7. "Then comes who should hav seen before,
A soldier, who shall not hav war.

"This undoubtedly will fit Jackson, who should hav succeeded Mr. Monroe at the election of 1824, and whose vigorous treatment of the Carolinian Nullifiers deferred the civil war for so many years.

8. 9. "After the fox the lion shall
Be lordly ruler over all;
But death shall in the mansion wield
Sword surer than in tented field.

"The lion, finding in his 'mansion' a 'sword surer' than that he had escaped in the 'tented field' would not suit badly with Harrison, who survived the perils of war to die almost immediately after his accession; but can any one suggest any reason why his predecessor, Mr. VanBuren, should be alluded to as 'the Fox?' [VanBuren was always called the Fox of Kinderhook in the days of 1838-40, as everybody knows.—Holt.]

10. "And after him there comes anon
One who had friends, but shall hav none.
11. The hickory shall sprout again.
12. 13. A soldier come from battle-plain,
But he shall not long remain,
Nor shall his heir bear sway again:
14. Then a youth shall follow, who
All shall know though none knew.

10. "Mr. Tyler, whose conduct brought about a rupture in his party; 11. Mr. Polk, I learn from Benton's 'Thirty Years in the Senate,' vol i., p. 374, was spoken of by his popular admirers as 'Young Hickory;' 12. General Taylor died a year after his inauguration; 13. Mr. Fillmore was beaten subsequently; 14. Pierce, the youngest of the presidents (to that time), whose selection was such a popular surprise.

15. "While the next doth bear the rule
To-morrow's sage is this day's fool;
There shall be trouble manifest,
North and South and East and West.
The strong man shall the weak befriend,
But it shall not be the end.

"This seems to indicate Buchanan's stormy administration, sectional troubles increasing, the North taking an interest in the slaves ('of the weak'), and, though this is a little far-fetched, the successful abolition politicians of the near future being derided as madmen."

16. "Under the next shall widows mourn,
Thousands be slain, but millions born;
Death in the strife shall pass him by,
But when peace cometh he shall die.

"This is clearly Lincoln, and Mr. Marsh suggests that the 'millions born' means the slaves manumitted and made recipients of the suffrage.

17. "When the next shall come to power
It shall be a gloomy hour;
He shall lose him many friends,
But enemies make him amends;
The wide land shall be less
And power be powerless.

"Johnson supported by the Democracy, bereft of power by an adverse Congress, and with a third of the Union practically blotted from the map.

18. "A soldier after him shall be
Who shall see his century."

"Grant and the Centennial.

19. "Rule afterward shall be got
By the one whose it was not.
Men shall roar and rage and rave,
But he who should hav shall not hav.
When the tide of storm is o'er,
Four shall make six, and not four,
He who was shall be no more,
And all that's past not make a score.

"This indicates Mr. Hayes and the vehement agitation against his title, agitation destined to be fruitless, according to 'Master Mage.' At the close ('tide' is evidently a misprint for 'time')" [tide means time, poetically.—Holt.] the presidential term will be increased to six years, 'He who was shall be no more,' may it not mean that the only living ex-president is doomed to die speedily? and all the presidents will hav made a score. We shall see what we shall see."

"[This much has come to pass up to this date, Aug. 17, 1878.—Ed. W. F. A.]

Not Much of a Poet.

When Mr. Bennett, on his journey around the world, came to the river Jordan, he paused long enough to evolve the following verse:

"On Jordan's muddy banks I stand,
And cast a squinting eye
To Canaan's rough and steril land,
Whose nativs steal and lie."
—A Truth Seeker Around the World, vol. ii.

This was undoubtedly observed by Joseph Cook, who was on a similar journey, and he made up his mind that no Infidel was going to outdo him. Nothing was left to be said about the Jordan, so Joseph waited until he reached the valley of the Yosemite, and there he broke forth as follows:

YOSEMITE.

Here the glacier ground the stone!
Here spake God and it was done!
Buttress, pinnacle, and wall,
River, forest, waterfall,
And God's right hand over all.
Here the mountain torrents call!
Swung colossal from the steep!
Hear them sound, like harper's hands,
On the quivering granit strands;
Now with thunderous thud and moan,
Now with giant undertone,
Like the surf on ocean sands;
While the pine trees whisper low,
And the sunset shadows slow
Up the vast, gnarled ridges go,
To the roseate, far snow!
—The Independent, Sept. 27, 1883.

The foregoing is a very inferior production. Anybody can write that kind of poetry. For instance, this:

JOSEPH COOK.

Here the monkey and the man,
In the chain Darwinian
Find their long-sought missing link;
Here the lowest man can sink,
Here the ape begins to think.
Hands enormous, mouth immense,
Wierd and windy and intense;
Will of rascal, brain of fool,
Voice like donkey, ears like mule—
Combination wonderful!
See those arms like windmills wave,
Hear that voice discordant rave;
Now with thunderous thud and moan—
Listen to the undertone:
Lord help the world he comes to save.
Hear him whoop and snort and thunder—
This the ninth and greatest wonder—
Watch those feet, and stand from under.

This could be continued indefinitly, but it is only designed to show that, with a proper subject and a fair appreciation of it, ordinary uninspired mortals can write poetry of the Joseph Cook school. G. E. M.

Shakspere and Bacon.

In the article on "The Sonnets of Shakspere," which appeared in The Truth Seeker, Aug. 18th, there are two errors, the correction of which only strengthens the proof that Bacon was the author of the poetry.

We did not intend to say that "Spenser was eight years younger than Bacon," but the reverse. Everybody knows that Spenser was prior to Shakspere; he was eleven years older than Shakspere, and eight years older than Bacon.

"The Fairy Queen" was published early in 1590. It is prefaced by a letter to Sir Walter Raleigh, dated "23d January, 1589," which means 1590 new style. It is further prefaced by seventeen brief "Sonnets" addressed to the author's "friends and patrons," one of whom is the Earl of Essex, so named.

During the same year, as we claim to hav proved, the so-called "Sonnets of Shakspere" were written by Bacon in praise of his dearest friend Essex. Nineteen years afterward they were published with a dedication "To the onlie begetter of these insuing Sonnets, Mr. W. H." In stanza (or sonnet) No. 80, the author refers to another poet:

"Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might."

And in No. 83 he says:

"There livs more life in one of your fair eyes
Than both your poets can in praise devise."

That other poet was undoubtedly Spenser, who was virtually poet laureate in 1590. He died January 15, 1599, and Essex erected a monument to his memory.

The other error in our essay was copied from Chambers's Encyclopedia, which says that to soothe Bacon's disappointment in not obtaining the office of attorney general in 1594, Essex shortly afterward "presented him with an estate at Twickenham worth £2,000 a year." Not so; this would hav been an ample fortune. The last edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Essex, to compensate in some degree for Bacon's disappointment, insisted upon presenting him with a piece of land worth about £1,800." But this was insufficient to relieve his distress, for in 1588 he was arrested for debt. And even after the death of Essex, in 1601, Bacon's fortunes were not in a flourishing condition. He obtained a grant of £1,200 from the fines against Catesby, but his debts were sufficient to swallow up this and much more. In short, Bacon's good fortune did not begin until 1604, when he received a salary of £40 as counsel and £60 as a pension. He was then forty-three years of age.

In regard to Bacon's conduct in the prosecution of his friend Essex for treason the Encyclopedia Britannica says:

"Unfortunately prudential motivs hindered the publication of the whole evidence; the people consequently were still ignorant of the magnitude of the crime, and, until recently, biographers of Bacon hav been in a like ignorance. The earl himself, before execution, confessed his guilt and the thorough justice of his sentence. . . . Everything that Bacon could do was done by him until the real nature of Essex's design was made apparent, and then, as he had repeatedly told the earl, his devotion and respect were for the queen and state, and not for any subject; friendship could never take rank above loyalty. Those who blame Bacon must acquit Essex of all wrong-doing."

With no bias on the question of authorship, we hav never yet seen a particle of proof that Shakspere wrote the plays and poems, while everything goes to sustain the Baconian hypothesis.

The Bard of Avon must go. Antiquary.

Letters from Friends.

ENON VALLEY, PA , Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: What a grand speech that was at Rochester by Remsburg! How glad I am that he is young! Why can't we keep him in the field and pay him well for his invaluable services? It is such logic as his that convinces the people. It has the ring of our old antislavery lectures forty years ago.

Respectfully, A. B. BRADFORD.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Sept. 26, 1883.

MR EDITOR: My subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER appears by tab to hav expired on the 1st inst. I had hoped to see a representativ of the paper in this city at the League Congress, and that is the reason of my delay. Inclosed please find $3 for subscription. I hav read every number of THE TRUTH SEEKER from the first, and am not weary of it yet, and do not expect to be. Yours respectfully,

ALMOND OWEN.

NAPLES, N. Y., Sept. 23, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Quite a number from Naples attended the Rochester convention and came back with glowing accounts of the grand speeches, general success, etc., which considerably stirred up the clerical animals hereabout. One of God's chief advisers said to one just after his return, "How could you attend that awful Infidel nest, and grieve your poor Christian wife?" Wonder if he thought of the thousands of Christian wives who attend church and grieve their poor Infidel husbands. Let the good fight go on. Yours for the last ditch, JOHN PECK.

AXTELL, KAN., Sept. 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I feel that the sound reasoning transmitted through your columns will go a great way toward driving superstition from our midst, and especially such arguments as were used by the Freethinkers in the convention at Rochester, N. Y. I feel that could your last issue alone be read by all those who can read, it would completely revolutionize the whole world and be the means of driving the 71,000 priests and preachers to some honest way of self-support, or at least to teaching something reasonable.

Herewith I send you $5, for which send trial copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER to the persons named. All are Liberals and Freethinkers.

Very respectfully, M. H. CONE.

CEDAR SPRINGS, MICH., Sept., 18, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I send you two more names for three months' trial. I will do all possible to secure what names I can. It is a duty we owe to one another, and every true Liberal will see to it that he has done what he can to spread the light of reason. We must work diligently and kindly. The Liberal that gets angry at his opponent in discussing the question of liberty of thought has failed to get the true gist of what liberty of thought means. As I understand it, it means charity, liberty; no enforcement, no slavery. Reason must take the place of the supreme being. If what I hav said meets your views, let it rest within you.

To say anything in praise of our dear TRUTH SEEKER would be useless. I am one to help make up the whole. Your fraternally, A. S. CROXTON.

THE FIRST TO AFFIRM IN CANADA.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., Sept. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing an item on the first page of THE TRUTH SEEKER, September 22d, from National Reformer, I thought the following would be of interest to you. I am a locomotiv engineer, and was running an engin last year when an accident occurred. I also believe that I was the first in Canada to giv evidence on affirmation under the then recently passed Oaths and Evidence Amendment act. The following copy of a letter to him from the railroad solicitor was sent to me by my superintendent and speaks for itself:

C. K. DOMVILLE, ESQ., Loco. Supt. G. T. R.

Walker vs. Grand Trunk Railway.

This suit arose out of an accident near Middlemas station. Your locomotiv engineer, David Neilson, will, perhaps, be glad to know that his lordship, Chief Justice Haggerty, upon the motion for a non-suit, before the three judges at Toronto to-day, specially referred to the manner in which Neilson had given his evidence at the trial, and expressed himself as highly pleased with his perfect fairness and candor.

Yours truly, SAMUEL BARKER, Solicitor.

To C. K. DOMVILLE, ESQ., Loco. Supt.

I might add that the chief justice commented, not very favorably upon some evidence given under oath, and he is the highest legal authority in Canada. Score one for a Canadian Freethinker. D. NEILSON.

HARWICH, MASS., Oct. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I lately took a little Sunday excursion to see if I could pick up a subscriber for you, or rather for us, for it is, or should be, a common cause; but I did not succeed any further than to get a promis that when one gets through with his all-absorbing fishing business he will probably subscribe. I shall hang to him like a toothache on the strength of such a promis, and try for more.

I laid several under contribution for Father Hacker at the same time, and I giv you their names.

We hav the most remarkable people in Harwich of any town I know of. They don't fear God, the devil, or one another, and yet they are indifferent as to how the world wags. They don't care a fig about such rubbish as the church affords, and are not enthusiastic enough to engage in anything else as a substitute that should displace Christianity and afford the people a chance to grow in the knowledge of truth. They say:

"Let the world wag along as it will,
We'll be gay and happy still."

While the fact is the world wags because somebody wags it. This hanging back, as is the wont of some, because "the world is destined to move whether I help move it or not," is very bad logic. As O'Connell said, "There are three things to be done: the first is to agitate, the second is to agitate, and the third is to agitate." And so let us agitate, each one feeling an individual responsibility.

I see Father Hacker has not forgot in his old age to be sensible. His contributions remind me of the Pleasure Boat, which used to sail around these shores, deeply loaded with truths that pioneered the way for future generations. Let his broad mantle fall upon our shoulders, stimulating us to renewed efforts to "break every yoke and let the oppressed go free."

I dare not risk a two-dollar bill in this envelope, for who knows but that Comstock may find it? So please find a two-dollar post-office order for Father Hacker. B. F. ROBBINS.

HAZELTON, Aug. 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Now you will allow a poor, ignorant Spiritualist to protest against the abuse and ill-feeling manifested by many of the writers in THE TRUTH SEEKER toward us. To be sure many of us hav received it for many years, and ought to be toughened to it by this time. But at this time when there is so much to be done, and so many wrongs that need to be righted, can we not stand shoulder to shoulder and help forward the cause of progress. Spiritualists hav helped to build up and make THE TRUTH SEEKER the best paper in the States—hav helped to make it a success.

I hav, I think, good and sufficient reasons for my belief. I do not blame others for not believing as I do. They may not hav had the evidence I hav. For more than forty years I hav nearly every day had in some way evidence of the truth of this faith. Would you discredit the evidence of one or two good witnesses in a civil or criminal court that saw an act committed, while hundreds might not hav seen the act? No? Then why in our case? You sav science does not teach it. How do you know? Hav you mastered the study? But a few years ago science said this earth was flat—that the sun made a daily journey around it; that electricity was but a dangerous element, etc. We hav been given five senses by which we know a thing to be true, and is it not the only means we hav? I hav heard, seen, felt, smelt, and tasted. Shall I discredit this proof because my neighbor or brother has not? Or is it fair and just in him to call me a fool because he has not the evidence? More than forty years ago, when a little boy, my mother prayed with me and sought the advice of her minister because I could not make her see the form of a dear playmate of my childhood whose body had been laid in the ground. During the political campaign of 1856, I was chosen assistant marshal of a county mass-meeting. While riding across the open country to carry orders from the marshal to a procession coming in, a voice at my side called me by name and said: "You feel pretty big to-day! Now do not make a fool of yourself. Sit down in your saddle." Many times since then, when abused for my belief, or disposed to feel flattered, it has come to me, "Sit down in your saddle!" In the summer of 1872, one night, being very tired and sleepy, some one invisible woke me and tried to hav me get up and go to the barn. I could hear no noise, and concluding not to get up turned my face to the wall, and was nearly asleep again when a hand took me by the whiskers and pulled my head over with such force and suddenness as to make me cry out in pain. I waited for nothing further. On my way to the barn, being very dark, I ran against one of my horses. Was surprised to find the animal loose, and the halter-strap thrown over his neck. Getting a light, I found a bridle and blanket on the floor ready for use. Well, as I rubbed a tender spot on my face for a day or two, I consoled myself with the reflection that my horse was safe at home. But I cannot particularize. I could fill a volume larger than either of Brother Bennett's Round-the-World books. I hav seen flowers materialized in open daylight, that smelt as sweet and looked as if freshly picked from their beds. I hav tasted medicin dropped from an invisible source into a glass of pure water, and it had the taste and effect of medicin. Will some of the scientific Materialists rise and explain? When these and a hundred more like happenings are explained from a Materialistic standpoint, I may become a convert, and one that will know how to pity thousands of believers that hav not had one-half the evidence I hav. If we cannot discuss this question candidly and fairly, and without abuse, why not drop the subject and take up some of the vital issues of the day. In either case we hav the advantage of you. Should you be right, we shall never hear the oft-repeated "I told you so." If we are right, we will welcome you with open arms and happy hearts to a higher, purer, and better life.

WM. S. LOGAN.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Sept. 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Do we not owe something to the good Christians that are continually advising us poor, benighted Infidels as to the way we should spend the Sabbath? and as I feel grateful for the smallest favors, I feel as if I should return the kindness by informing them what they may and may not do.

Well, my Christian friends, if you arise on Sunday morning, say about 7 o'clock, don't forget what day it is. You mustn't laugh, whistle, or sing. Don't you mind the birds; they know no better. Don't you polish the stove; your wife should hav done that the day before. If the barber's shop was too crowded last night, you can borrow a razor and hav a clean shave—and don't forget to shave the feet clean, as that is most important (Isaiah vii, 20).

Next look around for breakfast. Corn is nice for breakfast. Perhaps you do not care for corn-bread and beans; even if you do, nice sweet corn will go well with it. Now put your hat on, and go into the garden and pluck about a dozen of the best ears. Havn't got a garden? Very well; then go into your neighbor's, and if he is a Christian, and kicks, just you turn to the second chapter of Mark, and if you hav time and don't feel too mad you may read the whole chapter; and I guess he will hav to cave.

But if your neighbor is an Infidel all you hav to do is tell him he has no rights that you are bound to respect. No use to show him that passage in Mark; he won't understand it.

By this time the meat is all ready. The next thing is to thank the man that rides upon the storm for the food; no matter if you did work like the devil all the week for the pork and beans, and stole the corn, it's always safe to thank him, for some time you may be out of work, or sick, and then he will provide. He always do—sometimes.

After breakfast dress for church, and before you leave your house overhaul your small change and see if you hav a three-cent piece; if so, you may leave it with the rest of your change. Enter the sacred tabernacle that pays no taxes, and after the prophet has told you all the "thus saith the Lord," and sung the hymn, "Salvation free for you and me," then look out for the contribution box, and get the three-cent piece ready. This you can do by scraping the edge with your finger-nail; the edge of the ten-cent piece is rough. If you are rich and going to put a gold piece in you may manage to let it drop on the floor and roll amongst the congregation, so that everyone may see it, and if you are in business you will find it a good advertisment.

After church go home and eat your cold lunch, drink some cold tea or sour milk—both are good for digesting an average sermon. When it don't digest well, it causes stomach-ache; but, remember, no matter how much pain you hav you must not laugh. Prayer and faith are highly recommended for the belly-ache.

After noon attend church again, and after that fill up the time till evening Bible-reading, gathering your family round you. You will find the thirty-eighth chapter of Genesis, the twenty-third and fourth of Ezekiel, thirteenth and twenty-sixth of Isaiah, and the fortieth of Job—all of them—very interesting. Read these, and if they are palatable you can hav plenty more. Be sure to impress upon the minds of your children that the wicked Infidels don't believe this pure and holy book.

After tea you may take the children into the cemetery for a walk, and let them read the lies on the tombstones. They will find that the dead hav all been kind and loving fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, and sincere friends, and that they are regretted by all who knew them. They will find that some are not dead—only asleep. And if the children ask where the wicked are buried, point to the graves without stones, and tell them the Lord did not prosper the wicked, and that only the meek inherit the earth.

Now night cometh, when no man worketh. Raise your family altar, and tell God what to do for you while you sleep; but don't forget to tell him to do as he has a mind to about it. This you can do by saying, "Not my will, but thine, be done"—but mentally aside, "I want it my way." To bed next, and you can listen to your wife's dissertation on Mrs. Carroll's dress and bonnet. Hav no fear of going to sleep; if you are on the Lord's side you need not fear the sword by day nor the pestilence by night; not even the tax collector or burglar—if you hav got nothing. Don't fear for the future, for once I was young, now I am old; yet I never saw the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread. Next morning hurry down to the store; sand the sugar, file off the yard-stick, put a piece of putty on the bottom of the scales—anything to cheat somebody, for the minister's salary has to be made up this week. Be careful and not talk to Peck's bad boy, for he always gets the best of the Christians.

My dear Christian friend, one most important point in my advice I had nearly overlooked. You positivly must not kiss any of the younger sisters of the church, nor the older ones. This is strictly both a privilege and a duty pertaining to the minister. He will attend to this at the time you are at your business. If you should come in and find him on his knees before your wife, you will at once remember he is praying; so don't you make any fuss, for if you do that infernal Billings will get hold of it and put it in his "Crimes of Preachers," and an innocent Christian minister and the whole of the Christian church will be scandalized.

Yours, ROBERT H. NELSON.

STOCKTON, Mo., Sept. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Time for paper expired some time ago. Inclosed find $2.50 for ensuing year. Like your paper very much. Think now I shall want it as long as I liv. D. G. STRATTON.

MACON, GA., Oct. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2.50 for one year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I got one by chance in my hand, and I find it the very paper for me. I am delighted with it.

Hoping you will send it soon and regular, I remain. Yours respectfully, G. BAUMANN.

PORT JERVIS, Sept. 25, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2, as my mite toward the monument. I am really ashamed for not sending it before, for I hav got no excuse for it. I really hope that the monument placed in Greenwood Cemetery will not disturb the poor pious people who are sleeping there now. We know one thing—that no better nor more noble man ever slept there than D. M. Bennett. J. P. PALMER.

FAIRFIELD, PA., Sept. 17, 1883.

EUGENE MACDONALD, ESQ., Dear Sir: If, as the hymn book says,

"Satan trembles when he see
A little child upon its knees,"

What a terrible shaking he must hav experienced when he saw Jay Gould on his marrow-bones. Jay certainly understands business. There is hope for Jay yet. "Behold he prayeth." Very respectfully,

A. O. SCOTT.

WAYLAND, MICH., Sept. 21, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on my paper that it is time to renew my subscription. Inclosed please find $3—$2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the balance use as you please to enlighten Christians to drop orthodox childhood and pick up Liberal manhood. If any Christian wants to know how to get saved I can giv a true remedy—that is, just as quick as he quits believing in this monstrous creed of eternal hell, just so quick will he be saved. This creed is a cancer on the Christian brain, and no doctor is able to cure it. If the person with this kind of a cancer will subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year, and read it carefully, he will find it a sure cure.

JOSEPH WENZEL.

SPADRA, Sept. 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $17, for which send me the books and papers herein mentioned. I wish to distribute them among my Christian neighbors, for I am located right in the midst of a hotbed of Christianity of all denominations, from the Baptist and Methodist up to the howling band of holiness. I hav a pretty tough row to hoe with them, but with the aid of THE TRUTH SEEKER and some other Infidel books that I hav I manage to stand them off pretty well. We hav a number of half-way Freethinkers here, who are afraid to speak out in church. Most of my Christian friends are very clever people, but like all other Christians, some of them are very straight up the front side, but very crooked down the back.

After deducting my bill for books you may apply the balance to the Monument Fund. O. K.

CRAFTON, TEXAS, Sept. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $5. I presume you hav heard the circumstances of Clark Braden (the man who wrote "Ingersoll Unmasked") getting a shower of rotten eggs thrown at him at Pilot Point, Texas, for some offensiv language in his lectures at that place. I heard that he also left Decatur, Texas, somewhat disturbed for some offense given there; and it was with considerable difficulty that his Campbellite brethren kept the eggs out of his face at Sunset Station. If the above items will be of any interest to you, I will try to get an accurate statement of them.

I reckon you think that I am slow pay, and so I am, but manage each time that I send you a remittance to also send you a new subsbriber. Thanking you for your indulgence, I remain as ever a Freethinker. J. F. ELLIOTT.

WEST EATON, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In compliance with your request to further the interests of THE TRUTH SEEKER and Freethought, I herewith append some names of persons in my town who I think might read it if it came within their reach.

We hav had some fine speaking here in Georgetown by the Spiritualists, Frank Baxter and Mrs. Colby, the latter's addresses being very fine. Mr. Baxter claimed to be a Materialist, and I think he is a humbug. He is gifted with the power of seeing spirits, and of course the people would not be satisfied if he did not use his powers in that direction. After he had complied with their wishes and left town, the people where he stayed went to his room, and what did they discover but the obituaries of those departed spirits whom he had called up, and obituaries for other places—one envelope, marked "Saratoga," with some twenty names. The Spiritualists in these parts are "down in the mouth."

How long, oh! how long will people be humbugged? Mr. Baxter came back after his papers, and said he had left some valuable documents and money; but there was no money.

This will be published this week in the papers, for these are facts. THE TRUTH SEEKER is my kind of paper; I would not be without it for twice the cost of it. Yours truly, HOMER B. DARROW.

EAST CHATHAM, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2—$1.25 for continuation of the paper, and 50 cents for R. G. Ingersoll's "Ghosts," in paper, the balance for late numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think with a little pains I can add to your list of subscribers. I send you a list of names to whom you may mail specimen copies, and they may become regular subscribers.

I accidentally attended a Methodist camp-meeting some three weeks since, at Lebanon Springs, and heard a "sermon" from the celebrated revivalist, Mrs. Van Cott, that to me was somewhat amusing. After an elaborate prayer and the reading of a hymn so excessivly theatrical in style that they were nearly unintelligible to me, she read a chapter from the Song of Solomon, where some unscrupulous Bible commentator or compiler in the ignorant, superstitious past has attempted to render the amorous writings of this monarch of bigamists and concubinage as the words of Christ setting forth the love and graces of the church, 1014 years before he (Christ) was born.

It will be borne in mind that this foolish Solomon, who is designated in the catechism that we read in our childhood as the wisest man, professed to monopolize the sexual favors of seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, and consequently he must hav been taxed to the utmost extent to giv vent to the outpourings of a mind thus devoted.

And this the favorit topic of a celebrated lady of Christian refinement, in the presence of a large audience and several prominent clergymen, whose embarrassment to an eye unregenerated was quite visible, as in commenting on the sixteenth verse of the fifth chapter—"His mouth is most sweet. Yea, he is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem"—she turned her back to the audience, and, riveting her attention upon a fine-looking clergyman, she exclaimed, "Brother, what is more lovely than a sweet mouth?" And this the Christian lady who expected to annihilate R. G. Ingersoll by pronouncing him "a barking dog." Truly yours, J. M. BARNES.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., Aug. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I sincerely hope you will not accuse me of the crime of exaggeration if I tell you that it is actually a sin to breathe and to inquire after one's health on the Sabbath in Huntsville, Alabama. Col. Ingersoll himself would hav trouble to find words in expressing the grade of superstition (or call it religion or imagination as you like best) as forced here upon the public by the preachers of the holy gospel.

Inclosed please find a slip of the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times. Chattanooga is ninety-seven miles from here. Even printers (examin slip) are caught by the preachers. It certainly is easier work to tell the people the old, old story which they like to hear, hav heard since eighteen centuries, than to be employed with anything as useful and necessary as printing, provided one can afford to forego his manhood and tell tales no mortal man knows anything of as to their truth.

I can imagin Hermann when exhibiting his sleight-of-hand tricks trying to make people believe that he in reality has powers no other mortal has. Suppose he did try to make people believe so, it would by far not be so out of the way as the act of preachers who style themselvs the Lord's embassadors trying to explain reported facts which they know either never did happen, or of which they are in doubt.

Rev. Nicholson, of St. Mark's church, Philadelphia, is paid $15,000 for his trade. Here preachers are paid from $500 to $3,000. I know of some who receive $90 in money, and the balance is made up in gifts of dried peaches, old clothes, butter, eggs, etc. I stoutly deny in the face of facts that religion ever can be rooted out in America. It is a living cancer to destroy which would force 71,000 preachers to help build railroads, to learn telegraphy, to learn making shoes, tuning pianos, teaching school, or any other useful trade, none of which I personally feel too proud to pursue, for were it not for the laborer, the carriage-maker, tailor, etc., whence in the name of reason would Rev. Beecher or that fool Talmage hav their broadcloth or enjoy a ride? Ingersoll says with truth that a preacher looks with contempt on the hand which feeds him. It is a fight on the side of the preachers. They never intend giving up, accustomed as they are to a lazy and good living.

Now and then a so-called old book or even "ark" is discovered by some hocus-pocus way to keep the ball in motion, and to reform skeptics who were nearly on our side. For so sure as the Hale Safe-Lock Company makes daily improvements in their locks and safes, even as sure burglars invent tools to counteract the improvements; burglars are not idle, nor are preachers, when it is a butter and bread question. I fail to imagin how Ingersoll can hav the patience to talk with preachers, or rather to discuss with them. Every individual preacher knows full well that every one of the craft is bound to be a hypocrit, not to use a stronger expression. I feel unequal to the ungrateful task, and exchange with them no word from year to year. HENRI PALING.

FLORENCE, ALABAMA, Sept. 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In making my annual remittance for THE TRUTH SEEKER and books, I hope you will pardon me for writing a few lines.

It is with profit and pleasure that I read the able and eloquent speeches made before the Rochester Convention, and I am delighted to learn that other Liberal conventions will be held in several of the Northern states. I see that great and populous section of country, extending from Maine to California, is becoming each year more and more imbued with the spirit of Freethought. The great leading principles of human liberty are finding able advocates in every state; and Liberal Leagues are now numbered by the hundred. It seems that men no longer lose caste by advocating Liberal views, and hav no hesitancy in using their reason and common since, and making an application of the same to the absurdity of old theology and its mythological teachings.

But how stands the matter in the home of my nativity—the fair sunny South—the land where the magnolia blooms and the cotton grows? As a people, we hav a nativ pride in our hospitality and politeness, but the drifting clouds of orthodox superstition still hang over us, and mental darkness broods over the land. I am not aware of a single Liberal League existing from Virginia to Texas, nor can I call to mind even as much as one champion of Freethought principles.

In view of this, our benighted condition, could you not prevail upon Wakeman, Leland, and Palmer to extend their lecture tour down through Tennessee, Alabama, and Galveston?

Perhaps, as a financial investment, they would not be able to look back upon the enterprise as a success, at least, not to the extent that Moody and Sankey do in dealing out their Hebrew mythology and emotional slush; but they would hav the consolation of laboring in a more noble cause. I think they could more than make expenses in the present, and, as their future reward, they would gather, as "bread cast upon the waters," the thanks and gratitude of noble men and women, whose eyes had been opened to the effulgent rays of reason, instead of being guided by a blind faith and belief in the saving grace of Immanuel Jesus Christ—a Jesus dimigod that the Jews rejected and still reject. Truly can I say with the lamented Bennett, "Oh! for a revival of reason and common sense." The harvest is abundant; can you send us a few reapers? I will promis to do my best as a binder. If Wakeman and Leland cannot come, others would be welcome. Ingersoll is preached in an abusiv way from, perhaps, most of pulpits in the South. His name is used in connection with a certain walking and talking snake, which is said to hav held a prominent position in the esteem of Mother Eve in the primitiv days of mankind. His snakeship is now one of the principal factors in the great scheme of Christian salvation. To him is awarded the praise of giving good advice and speaking the truth, for the record says Eve's eyes were opened as promised to her if she would eat the fruit. To the rational-minded person, that uses reason in arriving at conclusions, Col. Ingersoll does not lose prestige by the using of his name with this great benefactor of mankind, through whose teaching we know good from evil. So much for the old Jewish fable. Let it pass.

In speaking of Mr. Ingersoll, it was my intention to say, if he would make a lecture tour of the Southern states, that his fame as an orator would draw the people to hear him, and his forcible way of handling the false tenets of Christianity, with the unimpeachable arguments, would cause the old dry bones of superstition to rattle and shake from center to circumference.

It does seem strange that sensible, kind-hearted men and women continue, in the face of light and knowledge, to believe the false creeds as taught from the Bible. From the first verse through to the word finis, there is a continuous series of contradictions and absurdities, repulsiv to reason and common sense. The book of Revelation is an appropriate sequel to the book of Genesis. If John upon the Isle of Patmos saw the visions he records, it is a reasonable conclusion that he was afflicted with the disease known in therapeutics as mania a potu, sometimes called "jim-jams." But let us deal kindly with the poor deluded victims of a relentless priestcraft. It is my desire to be charitable toward the opinions of others, and to deal with all mankind in a spirit of brotherly love.

In closing this, my second letter to you, I take pleasure in extending my thanks and approval of the able and conservativ manner in which THE TRUTH SEEKER is conducted. I contemn a creed-bound Liberalism no less than a creed-bound orthodoxy. If Spiritualism, or Mormonism, or any other ism, is true, giv it a reasonable hearing in which to make its proof. M. B. SHELTON.

Poetry.

A Reply to a Teuton;* or, A Blow for a Wicked Blow.

The stinging wasp, the prickly sprout,
Of air infected as by pest.
A little dragon flirts about,
Not snakes, but sound men to infest.

The Christian snakes infest the air,
And waspish critics with their stings
Are born; they sting, but touch nowhere
The real snakes of which they sing.

That "Teuton's" aim (whose name is strange),
Who wrote that false, malicious verse,
"The law of blow for blow's revenge"—
His aim was to the truth reverse.

Though he dissembles to be meek,
Yet we can recognize this bird,
Who says, "Be good and kiss my cheek,
While I in thee shall stab my sword."

But not for cowards I will write,
If even they be priest and count,
But to the friends of human right,
I giv the real, true account.

Now to the world 'tis very strange,
That Christians, boasting with their God
Of love, are panting for revenge
As thirsty hounds for human blood.

But that odd story is not new,
It is indeed the old, old one
Of Joseph true, the real Jew,
And that of Christian's godly son.

From those two stories we may judge,
While most of Josephs don't disguise,
The Jesuses, though filled with grudge,
Still preach of love, as good and wise.

What Mistress Potiphar had done
To Joseph, that old honest Jew,
That do believer in God's son,
Till now, as facts tell, old and new.

We know that Joseph of that time
Was true unto his master's house;
We also know the horrid crime
Of Potiphar's dishonest spouse.

But what was Joseph's due reward
And recompense of that false wife?
That Joseph shall be punished hard,
While she a wife remained for life.

Though worse than that false woman's crime
Are Christians' doings (known full well);
Yet they hope still for Eden's clime,
While sending all the best to hell.

While Joseph by his forethought saved
Egyptian's life from famin's whip,
His brethren kindly were received
As shepherds for King Pharaoh's sheep.

For that was but their due reward—
The same as now, the Christians' tricks—
For that they were inflicted hard:
In bondage kept at making bricks.

That "Teuton" judges as a fool:
Why Joseph bought the people's land;
Why, those were Pharaohs and their school,
And Joseph must do their command.

That is the reason, plain and true,
Why land of priest was then not sold;
So make the Christians but one Jew,
An idol or a god of gold.

Egyptian Pharaohs of that age
Must hav their Joseph (as ere while),
To quench their sins and people's rage,
By drowning Hebrews in the Nile.

The Christian Pharaohs and priests,
Must hav a Jew to serve as God,
That in his name they as wild beasts
Remorseless shall shed Jewish blood.

The modern Pharaoh's must the same
A Jew enshrine as golden god;
While they themselvs but rob to claim,
Look, Jews will cheat!—so taught their code.

For centuries, by craft and art,
The Jews hav suffered Egypt's yoke;
Till Egypt's art made Hebrews smart
To take their earnings by a joke.

Who says, "It is revenge and wrong;
The Jews demand their due as slaves;"
Those gypsies, sure, themselvs belong
To ruffians, tyrants, and to knaves.

But tell me, "Teuton," what thou art.
Art thou a Christian? Love thy friends.
Art thou a thinker free from art?
Then love the Jews; they are thy friends.

But thou art neither this nor that;
All Jews are one before thy face,
As cats are to the wary rat—
For one thou hatest all the race.

For myriad Teutons in New York
Who buy and sell beer by the tun.
We could not millions hate who work,
But Teutons worship Jew-God's son.

Could I, as in the Red Sea drown
All wicked Pharaohs in my pen,
Then would we see the whole world round,
No Teuton, Jew, naught but good men.

And while that boor beneath a mask
Has writ to reach Teutonic aim,
I tell you open, if you ask,
My Jewish, true, well-sounding name.

JAMES H. SOBLE.

*See THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 22, p. 606.

Correspondence Solicited.

A successful Western merchant wishes to correspond with an intelligent and affectionate lady. Object, matrimony. Address, D. G. M.,
2t4] TRUTH SEEKER Office.

NOTICE!

Wanted to find a girl to keep my house for me. My granddaughter, Anna Maria Oliver, is now 18 years old. She left Coal Valley, Rock Island Co., Ill., 12 or 14 years ago. When her mother died she was adopted by a family and went to New York state or city. Now her grandfather, W. Ennor, is 77 years old, all alone; wishes her to come to him if this comes to her sight, for there is $2,000 of insurance on his life that he will giv her. And he is a man of means besides.
W. ENNOR,
41tf Galena, Ill.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By Prof. John Tyndall. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Esq. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
III. Foods. By Edward Smith. Cloth, 1 75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. 12mo. Cloth; 1 50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Prof. Josiah C. Cooke, Jr., of Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Balfour Stewart. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 12mo. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1 75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M. D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
X. The Science of Law. By Prof. Sheldon Amos. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XI. Animal Mechanism. A Treatise on Terrestrial and Aerial Locomotion. By E. J Marey. With 117 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By John William Draper. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XV. Fungi: their Nature and Uses. By M. C. Cooke. Edited by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language; an Outline of Linguistic Science. By Wm. Dwight Whitney. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XVII. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XVIII. The Nature of Light, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel. With 188 Illustrations, and a Plate of Spectra in Chromolithography. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Messmates. By P. J. Van Beneden. With 83 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XX. On Fermentation. By P. Schutzenberger. With 28 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth. 1 50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Prof. Bernstein, of the University of Halle. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXII. The Theory of Sound its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. Norman Lockyer. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50
XXIV. A History of the Growth of the Steam-Engine. By Robert H. Thurston. With 193 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50
XXV Education as a Science. By Alexander Bain. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXVI. Modern Chromatics, with Applications to Art and Industry. By Ogden N Rood. With 130 Illustrations 12mo Cloth, 2 00
XXVII. The human Species. By A. de Quatrefages. Professor of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History, Paris. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXVIII. The Crayfish: an Introduction to the Study of Zoology By Prof. T. H. Huxley. With 82 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXIX. The Atomic Theory. By Ad. Wurtz, Membre de l'Institut, etc. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXX. Animal Life as Affected by the Natural Conditions of Existence. By Karl Semper, Professor of the University of Wurzburg. With 2 Maps and 106 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXXI. Sight: An Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, author of "Elements of Geology," etc. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXII. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. I. Rosenthal, Professor of Physiology at the University of Erlangen. With 75 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXIII. Illusions. A Psychological Study. By James Sully. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXIV. The Sun. By C. A. Young, Ph D., LL.D., Professor of Astronomy in the College of New Jersey. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXXV. Volcanoes: What they Are and what they Teach. By J. W. Judd, Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines. With 96 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXXVI. Suicide: An Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics. By Henry Morselli, M.D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXXVII. The Formation of Vegetable Mould, through the Action of Worms. With Observations on their Habits. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXVIII. The Concepts and Theories of Modern Physics. By J. B. Stallo. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXXIX. The Brain and its Functions. By J. Luys, Physician to the Hospice de la Salpetriere. 12mo. Clot, 1 50
XL. Myth and Science: An Essay. By Tito Vignoli. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XLI. Diseases of the Memory: An Essay in the Positive Psychology. By T. H. Ribot, author of "Heredity." From the French, by William Huntington Smith. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XLII. Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., etc 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid. FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY OF SCIENCE.

In paper covers. Two cents each additional for postage.
Price, 15 Cents Each Number.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
No. 2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
No. 4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.
No. 7. The Conservation of Energy. With numerous illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.
No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
No. 11. The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S.
No. 12.
No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.
No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Thirty-two illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
No. 18. Lessons in Electricity. Sixty illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainright, D.D.
No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
NOTE.—The preceding numbers are 4to form—like Harpers' Franklin Square Library. The numbers which follow are 8vo., the size of Harpers' Monthly.
No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford Univ.
No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
No. 30. The Study of Words. By Richard
No. 31. Chenevix Trench.
No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen
No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and others.
No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H Huxley.
No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated By Prof. John Tyndall.

CHANDOS CLASSICS.

A series of standard works in poetry, history, and general literature. Fine binding.

	Price	Post
Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. By John S. Roberts	.65	.08
German Literature. Richter, Richter, Zschokke. Tieck	.65	.0
Complete Angler. Isaac Walton and Charles Colton	.65	.08
Lives of Novelists and Dramatists. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.0
Poetical Works of Eliza Cook	.65	.08
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. In four volumes	2 60	.32
Poetic l Works of Charles Mackay	.65	.08
History of England. By Henry Hallam	.65	.08
Lockhart's Spanish Ballads and Southey's Chronicle of the Cid	.65	.08
The Romance of History. England. By Henry Neele. Illustrated	.65	.08
The Romance of History. India. Hobart Caunter, B D	.65	.08
The Romance of History. Italy. C. Macfarlane. " " Spain. Don T. de Trueba	.65	.08
Doctor Syntax. His Three Tours in Search of the Picturesque, of Consolation, of a Wife. With colored illustrations	.65	.08
Homer's Iliad	.65	.08
" Odyssey	.65	.08
Life and Remains of John Clare. By J. L. Cherry	.65	.08
Selections from the Talmud, By H. Polano	.65	.08
Everyday Book of Modern Literature. By C. H. Townsend	.65	.08
Johnson's Lives of the Poets	.65	.08
Milton	.65	.08
Essays on Chivalry, Romance, and the Drama. By Sir Walter Scott	65	.08

SHAKSPERE'S WORKS.

	Price	Post
Complete. Fireside Edition. Crown octavo. Large type. Morocco, gilt edges. Illustrated. With a full and Comprehensive Life, Notes, Glossary, etc	4 00	.50
Crown Octavo,	3 75	.48
The Avon Edition. Sheep, marbled edges, library style	3 00	.42
In three volumes. Comedies, Histories, Tragedies. Half Russia, gilt top	3 00	.48
The same, in cloth	2 50	.48
Dramatic and Poetic Works, complete in one volume. Illustrated, with life by Alexander Dyce. Sheep, marbled edges	2 50	.38
Scarlet Border Edition. Illustrated. Complete, red and green. Morocco, gilt edges	1 50	.20
Handy Volume, Shakspere complete, in 13 vols. Green cloth, red edges	5 00	.35
Arundel Edition. From the text of Clark and Wright. Illustrated	1 50	.24
In 3 vols., brown cloth, edited by Clark and Wright	1 50	.27
Complete from the text of Johnson, Stevens, and Reed Octavo. Paper Binding,	60	.18
Large quarto edition bound in gold and black. Illustrated	1 00	.24
Arlington Edition	40	.18

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

Why the Car Driver Wouldn't Strike a Boy.

From the Detroit Post.

"I used to think it was my duty to cut 'em with the whip, and I took satisfaction in striking hard, but I wouldn't strike a boy now for the best thousand dollars ever coined."

He was a car driver, and his attention had been called to three or four boys stealing a ride on the rear platform.

"Yes, I was a sort of terror on this route to the boys," he continued, after a time. "Not one of the crowd could put his foot on the step and get away without a cut of the whip. Big or little, rough or gentle, I served all alike, and if the passengers scowled at me for lashing a little kid of seven or eight, I solaced myself with the reflection that it was my duty."

A passenger was dropped at the corner, and as the car started up again the driver went on:

"Well, one day when the boys had bothered me more than usual, I dodged through the car and found a little bit of a chap, not over seven years old, seated on the lower step. He was all humped over and softly crying over something or other. At another time I might hav felt pity, but the boys had got my mad up, and what did I do but giv the little chap a cut with the lash and call out with such a voice that off he tumbled into the dust. I saw him rise up and limp away, and there was something in the look that he gave me that I shall not forget in a hurry. Whoa, now!"

The car stopped to take on two ladies, and presently the driver resumed:

"Do you know that I felt so conscience-stricken that I kept looking for that boy on every trip, calculating to make up with him and secure his forgivness for my brutality. I did not see him again until the afternoon of the second day."

"And what did he say?" was asked as the driver hesitated.

"He was in the coffin!" was the reply. "It was his funeral procession which stopped my car for two or three minutes. That child was ill when he tried to steal his way home with me, and death was not twenty-four hours away when I lashed him and chuckled over the way he rolled into the street. I tell you, sir, when I saw his coffin in the hearse, and caught a look from the mother, which seemed to charge me with being his murderer, I got a stab at my heart that pains me yet, and I wouldn't strike another boy if the reward was to be the whole line and its outfit."

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PEISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.

200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"It is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call."—EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER.

God and the State.

BY

MICHAEL BAKOUNINE.

Founder of Nihilism and Apostle of Anarchy.

WITH A PREFACE BY

CARLO CAFIERO AND ELISEE RECHUS.

Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER, (Editor of Liberty.)

52 pages, octavo. Price 15 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

WETTSTEIN'S JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 15 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Rome. Not Bethlehem, the Birthplace of Jesus.
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

Who Wrote the New Testament?
Extract from Faraday No. 5. Price 10 cents.

BOWLES PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 20 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.
Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER,
48 Clinton Place, New York

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents.
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others	8
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers	3
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	8
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett	5
26	Underwood's Prayer	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett.	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers	2
31	Gods and God-Houses	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett	8
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston	3
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood	3
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett	3
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter	3
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild	5
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett	3
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1	5
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood	3
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	2
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett	5
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman	8
56	Bible Contradictions	1
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood	2
58	Prophecies. Underwood	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	2
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden	5
62	The Jews and their God	10
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers	3
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett	5
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown	2
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2	5
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon	3
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	2
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett	3
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett	5
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman	2
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett	5
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers	2
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett	1
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey	5
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London	2
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett	10
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett	2
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood	1
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker	2
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson	3
90	Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates	2
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood	1
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	3
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle	1
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper	5
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers	10
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota.	2
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown	5
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett	2
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston	1
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett	2
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston	3
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard	3
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers	3
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman	2
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul	5
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman	2
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford	5
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr	3
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson	1
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood	3
134	Talks with the Evangelists	5
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett	3
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett	5
137	Christian Love. C. L. James	3
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper	2
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston	3
140	Astro-Theology	5
141	Infidelity. H. W. Beecher	2
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon	10
143	Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins	2
144	The Comstock Laws	10
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin	10
146	Seymour Times Prayer	2
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws	10
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus	2
149	Age of Shams	3
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman	10
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H	1
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas	2
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway	3
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce.	3
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin	2
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley	3
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett	3
158	The Fool's Creed	1
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston	5
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman	5
161	Protestant Persecutions	3
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	10
163	Ingersoll's Creed	5

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.	5
3	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood	3
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood	3
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin	5
	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase. M. D.	3
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCa...oll	2
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	3
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M. D.
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on ten dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ... dollars' worth, 50 off.

Iron-Clad and Manna Series.

IRON CLAD SERIES.

Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. 5 cts.
Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller. 10 cents.
Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison. 20 cts.
Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 15 cents.
Essay on Miracles. David Hume. 10 cents.
Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Were Adam and Eve Our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Why Do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
Logic of Life, Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. 10 cts.
Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake. 5 cents.
Defense of Secular Principles. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.
Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts. 5 cents.
The Christian Deity. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts. 5 cts.
Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christianity: Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Is There a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts. 5 cts.
Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Poverty; Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H. 10 cents.
Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christian Scheme of Redemption. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

MANNA SERIES.

New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
300 Questions Without Answers. 5 cents.
Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin. 10 cents.
Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. 10 cents.
Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake 5 cents.
New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Few Words About the Devil. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Specimen of the Bible. Esther A. Holyoake 5 cents.
Acts of the Apostles; A Farce. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Who Was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Secular Prayer. A. Holyoake. Per doz.. 10 cts.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT STREET, and

286 FULTON STREET,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

WILLIAM WILSON'S ELECTRO-CHEMICO VAPORIZER.

THE CULMINATION OF OPTICAL PHYSICS DEMONSTRATED IN "ACTINA."

"ACTINA,"

THE GREAT EYE-RESTORER.

"Actina has an instantaneous action on the various and mysteriously complicated organs of vision, the nerves, the blood vessels, the muscular coats and complex membranes which make up that marvelous mechanism of nature, the eye. Whether in the human being, the insect, or brute, all diseases of the eye result from an irregularity of the secretions. This may be brought about in a variety of ways—overwork, anxiety, breathing impure atmosphere, straining the eyes over intricate mechanism, etc., etc.; while hundreds of thousands hav ruined their sight by the use of powerful drugs taken with a view of curing other forms of disease. But all these cases can be met successfully by the regular use of "Actina."

"Actina" will relieve colds in the head, inflammation in the eyes, headache, catarrh, neuralgia, sore eyelids, and humors of all kinds.

☞NOTE.—"Actina" is not a medicin or lotion, but a self-generating vapor, easily applied at all hours, times, and places, can be carried in the pocket, and used by any member of the family with perfect safety, from infancy to old age.

TRIAL FREE OF CHARGE.

By calling at our several stores you may try the remedy, free of charge; but be particular not to use any vaporizer unless it bears the signature of William Wilson, who will state positivly if relief and cure be possible.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN.

W. WILSON, President.

D. J. COTTER, Secretary.

[All checks, post-office order, and drafts payable to the Anglo-American Electric Association.]

CAUTION:

Beware of cheap imitations of our goods. Read your back copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four years, and note our thousands of testimonials.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

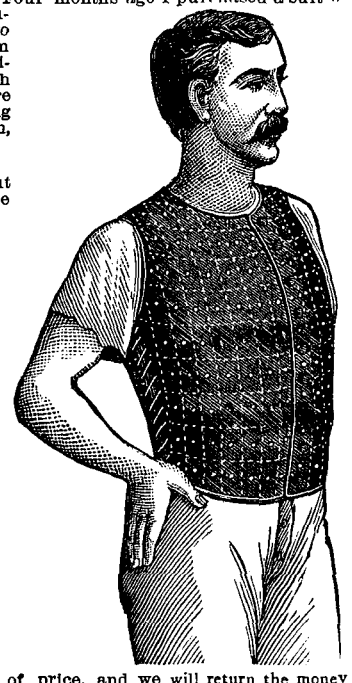
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and although in bed, unable to get out, when applied she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney, 324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN's edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office

6n 15

DR. FELLOWS

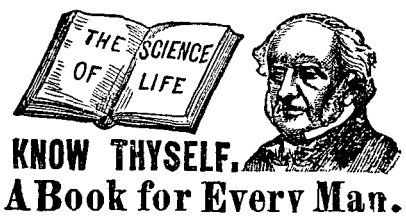
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

IT is the saddest aspect of modern civilization that gross dishonesty is greatly on the increase, and that promotion to office is a most prolific source of theft, and is the channel in which it largely fattens at the public expense. All this is becoming a grave question; how much has our system of theology to do with all this corruption and crime? How much is the faith which teaches the believer that he can secure a seat in heaven—not by his own merits and good deeds, but by the righteousness of another individual—responsible for the code of morals that now rules the land? Is it calculated to inaugurate and encourage honesty, to teach people that they can secure the most valuable riches, the highest degree of happiness of which the human mind is capable of conceiving, without any exertions of their own, but by the labors and sufferings of another?—D. M. Bennett.

THE morality of Christianity has never opposed the freedom of thought. It has never put, nor tended to put, a chain on the human mind, nor a manacle on a human limb; but the doctrins distinctivly Christian—the necessity of believing a certain thing; the idea that eternal punishment awaited him who failed to believe; the idea that the innocent can suffer for the guilty—these things hav opposed, and for a thousand years substantially destroyed, the freedom of the human mind. All religions hav, with ceremony, magic, and mystery, deformed, darkened, and corrupted the human soul. Around the sturdy oaks of morality hav grown and clung the parasitic, poisonous vines of the miraculous and monstrous.—Ingersoll.

THERE can be little doubt of the truth of the proposition of certain reformers, that if the care which is given to the improvement in the breed of horses and cattle, sheep, fowls, and dogs, were given to the improvement of the human race, or even the American people, the millennium would not be so distant as, up to the latest advices, it appears to be. That children are the product of their ancestors, and mainly of their parents and grandfathers, is now pretty generally held as an unquestionable scientific truth; and if marriage were to be arranged as scientifically as is the pairing of live stock by breeders, the same development of fine strains [specimens?] of human beings as of thoroughbreds would undoubtedly be the reward of the trouble.—Detroit Free Press (Dec. 24, 1881).

ONLY utility can afford us a sure basis, the reasonableness of which will be accepted alike by thoughtful student and hard-headed artisan. Utility appeals to all alike, and sets in action motivs which are found equally in every human heart. Well shall it be for humanity that creeds and dogmas pass away, that superstition vanishes, and the clear light of freedom and science dawns on a regenerated earth—but well only if men draw tighter and closer the links of trustworthiness, of honor, and of truth. Equality before the law is necessary and just; liberty is the birthright of every man and woman; free individual development will elevate and glorify the race. But little worth these priceless jewels, little worth liberty and equality, with all their promis for mankind, little worth even wider happiness, if that happiness be selfish, if true fraternity, true brotherhood, do not knit man to man and heart to heart in loyal service to the common need, and generous self-sacrifice to the common good.—Mrs. A. Besant's True Basis of Morality.

THEN let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that;
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
May bear the gree* and a' that;
For a' that and a' that,
It's coming yet for a' that;
That man to man, the world o'er,
Shall brithers be and a' that.

[*victorious.] —Burns.

I WANT no religion that depends upon what one man said, upon what one book holds. I want the religion of all men, as far as I can know it. Jesus was a good man; so was Epictetus, so was Socrates, so are thousands good men to-day. The things that men and women do in the name of religion shame our human nature; the things that ministers say in the name of Christ shock our moral sense. We cannot enter a Christian church without a feeling of degradation. We hav a sensation of stooping in such a place. What is called worship of God is only silly adulation of a man. One would think there was no God, to hear Christians in their acts of praise. . . . To speak of Jesus as a man is considered blasphemous.—L. K. Washburn.

BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.—1 John iv, 1.

THE old-fashioned fishermen will tell you that it is bad luck to meet one magpie, and good luck to meet two. The solitary magpie is a bad omen, the pair of magpies a good omen. But a very little knowledge of natural history teaches us, first, that the lower animals can tell the approach of wet weather with greater accuracy than lies within the power of nonscientific man; second, that when rain is threatening only one magpie wanders forth in search of food, whilst the other, naturally the female, stops at home to keep the young ones warm and dry. When, however, a fine day is to be expected, father and mother alike go out for a merry jaunt together in the sunshine.—Dr. Aveling on Superstition.

"SPEAK to her kindly," said Miss Maylie to her companion, Mr. Brownlow. "Poor creature!" "Your haughty religious people," said Nancy, "would hav held their heads up to see me as I am to-night, and preached of flames and vengeance! O dear lady, why ar'n't those who claim to be God's own folks as gentle and as kind to us poor wretches as you, who, having youth and beauty and all that they hav lost, might be a little proud instead of so much humbler?" "Ah!" said the gentleman, a Turk turns his face, after washing it well, to the east when he says his prayers; these good people, after giving their faces such a rub against the world as to take the smiles off, turn with no less regularity to the darkest side of heaven. Between the Mussulman and the Pharisee, commend me to the first."—Dickens's Oliver Twist.

Odds and Ends.

HARD to beat—a china egg.

WHEN does a tree feel contented? When it's sappy.

THE period of the fly for the present season has about come to a full stop.

"DRINKIN' whisky is like makin' money," says Uncle Mose. "Der more yer's got de more yer tinks yer ken stan'."

THE following is extracted from a smart boy's composition on "Babies:" "The mother's heart givs 4th joy at the baby's 1st 2th."

OF course clothes don't make the man, but turn him loose on the street without any and see if anybody will speak to him but a policeman.

THE economical side of a woman's character shines forth with radiance when she succeeds in fastening an eighteen-inch belt around a twenty-two inch waist.

THE only drawback which many a deserted husband finds to the felicity of having his wife elope with another man is that she did not take her mother with her.

AN exchange tells of a young lady who, after a happy marriage of six months, on being asked if she was much troubled with cold feet, simpered, hesitatingly, and with simplicity replied, "Ye-yes, but they're not my own."

THERE was once a school-teacher in Lynn,
Who sat down on a bent rusty pynn;
He quickly arothes
With the pin in his clothes,
While the scholars indulged in a grynn.

"I WRITE this," said a man addressing a gentleman who owed him money, "to inform you that you are a liar." "Your postage stamp was wasted," the reply came, "as I knew that I was a liar before I had any business relations with you."

THERE is an old record in a South Carolina Baptist church which contains a note of the expulsion of a woman for "doing too much talking in the neighborhood." They evidently did not hav any sewing societies in those days, or the church would hav had no members.

"FATHER," asked the young son of Deacon Squibbs, "what is the difference between a man that dyes wool on lambs and a religious editor?" "Well, now, really, my son," beaming benignly on his offspring. "I'm not prepared to state. What is the difference?" "Why, pa, one is a lamb dyer, and the other is a—" "What? what? my son?" "Religious editor," continued the youth, rolling his tongue around in his cheek.

A NAUGHTY Western paper is supposed to hav written the following: Jim: John, who was the first person that ever swore? John: I don't know, Jim, who was. Jim: Our old Mother Eve. John: No! not Mother Eve; impossible! Jim: Yes, Father Adam's wife. John: Wherebouts, and what for? Jim: You see her and Adam went into a saloon in Chicago to get a drink, and old Adam got to feeling pretty good and he asked, "Eve, may I kiss you?" and Eve said, "I don't care Adam, if you do!" and then the patrol took them both off.

A MINISTER while riding along a lonely road in Arkansas that glided under tall bushes and wound around rugged hills, approached a man standing at the gate of a rude house. The minister addressed a question to the man, but without replying, the latter turned toward the house, bowed to a woman who appeared in the doorway, and said:

"Good mornin', madam; how's your health and the health of your family?" The woman did not reply, and the man continued: "Fine day, madam, only the sun's strikin' down mighty peart."

Still the woman did not reply.

"My friend," said the minister, "I am to preach at Harvey's Point, and I would like to know how to get there."

"Don't you know?" asked the man.

"No, sir; I do not."

"Then how do you expect me to know more about your business than you do? Say, there, madam," turning to the woman, "I'd like to come in and make myself at home. How's the prospects?"

The woman made no reply, but, kicking a cat out of the way, and "shooing" a chicken that came up on the steps, she leaned against the door-facing and regarded the man with a lack of interest that characterizes the sweep of an eye over a barren waste.

"The church is situated near here, is it not?" asked the minister.

"Yes, but it is nearer to some places than it is to here. Say, madam, I am very glad to see you, an' I hope that our relations may be pleasant."

The woman made no reply.

"Which way must I go, as the roads hav been changed?"

"Go down the creek. Compliments of the day, madam."

"Will following the road down the creek take me there?"

"I've dun told you. If you know better, go up the creek," and he smiled and bowed to the woman.

"You seem to take great pleasure in being polite to the lady at the door. Who is she?"

"The boss."

"The boss of what?"

"The situation. She's my wife."

"Why do you stand out there bowing to her?"

"Mister, whar was you raised, anyhow? You don't know this country like I do. This mornin' I went outen this gate with a skillet follerin' me, an' I've got to do my courtin' over agin, or it ain't safe to hang around the house. I've got to win that woman afore the sun goes down or I'll sleep in the woods. I ain't got no time to talk about churches and things of the next world, for this world needs coolin' off at present. Arter I win this woman come around and I'll talk to you. How do you do, madam? Fine lot of chickens you've got. No, sir, my friend, I've got a big job before me, an' I ain't got through. She's got a flat-iron back thar, an' she's apt to let drive at any minute. Go on away now, an' let me make the fight. I'm mighty persuadin' in my natur'. Fine day, madam."

To My Friends:

No God, no heaven, no hell,
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents. "John's Way," 15 cents. "Clergyman's Victims," 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances. "Studying the Bible," 75 cents. "Godly Women," showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. "Private Physiology for Girls," worth $5 to any woman if she heeds health, $1. Photos, card, 15 cents; imperial, 20 cents. "Crimes of Preachers," 25 cents. "Leaves of Grass," a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2. "Infidel School Teacher," 25 cents. "Little Lessons for Children," 50 cents.

DIANA.

A Startling Book. Original in theory, unobjectionable in language, scientific in treatment. None should marry without consulting "DIANA." Price, 25 cents. "Sexual Physiology for the Young," cloth, 50 cents. "Science in Story," a comic, amusing, scientific, and sensible story, cloth, illustrated, $2. "Plain Home Talk," the cheapest book in the world, and full of hygienic information, 1,000 illustrations, $1.50. "Health Hints," 25 cents. These four are by Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York. "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism," $1.50. "Vindication of Gibbon," a valuable work crowded with thought and truth, $2. Specimens of Herald of Health, Health Monthly, Herald of Industry, Alpha, THE TRUTH SEEKER, Iconoclast, Thinker, Queen Bee, Liberal, Investigator, Blade, and Matrimonial Review, 6 cents each. "Six Tracts," 6 cents each. And any other Liberal book you may want, at publisher's price. Address,

ELMINA D. SLENKER,
4t40 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Wanted.

In a Liberal family or school a position as teacher of English branches and art or a good situation as housekeeper or governess, by a lady thirty-five years old, with experience as teacher and housekeeper, but who has now lost all her property through the knavery of some very pious people. Best of reference. Address, M. M., care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BIBLE SCIENCE.—To organize and restore the Holy Communism practiced by Christ and his apostles. Also to maintain the "Perfect Law of Liberty" by showing the difference between God's Righteousness and all other notions of right and wrong. This is Masonic Christianity, and intended only for zealous persons tired of talk and ready for business. Return papers, 10 cents.

Address, "REWARD,"
5t37 710 Broadway, New York.

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by
O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER
two of America's clearest thinkers.
Price, in cloth, $1

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
80tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S

SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

WITH AN APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 42. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, October 20, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

"No intelligent person," says the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, "believes in a literal burning hell."

THE word "obey" has been stricken from the marriage service by a Methodist congregation in Canada.

THE Minnesota Methodist Ministers' Conference, by a close vote, resolved that "the time has come for all friends of prohibition to cast their ballots for only such parties and candidates as are unequivocally committed to the utter extermination of the liquor traffic by the power of the law."

AN Ottawa, Ont., congregation, which is half English and half French, recently had a quarrel as to which language should be preached in the church, but the English finally conquered. During the fight one indignant member attempted to choke the sexton, but the interference of a friend prevented.

WHEN Lord Coleridge returns to his nativ 'eath and writes a book about America, we trust he will not say that Chicago is a larger state than Hoboken; that Louisville is an isthmus that connects California and Hartford; that the Hudson river is a beautiful city; that the Alleghenies are a lovely archipelago, and that Idaho is the capital of Brooklyn.—Puck.

THE Rev. M. H. Houghton denies that he has been asked to resign on account of his Rose Ambler sermon. To the New Haven Register's reporter he says that instead of being asked to resign he has been engaged for another year. He adds that what he said about the Rose Ambler case was that Lewis might hav murdered the girl—not that he did murder her.

MR. IRVING, the English actor, has converted a Presbyterian clergyman—that is, without any overtures, but merely by his acting, he brought a Rev. Mr. Kay, of Edinburgh, to declare to his congregation that Mr. Irving was "superb" and Miss Terry "divine," and gave a graphic account of an evening at the theater, "one of the most delightful, instructiv, and interesting of his life." His congregation was shocked. Many wept for his digression.

THE papers never cease to tell funny stories on the churches that secure musicians to entertain the congregations. The latest story comes from the East. A Baptist church secured a cornet player, and the minister told the man to play something appropriate while the baptismal service was being performed. Just as the good man led a convert down into the water the cornet struck up the old tune, "Pull for the Shore." The minister was so mad he was fairly wet.

THE women's department in the Boston fair has created surprise among those who think that women cannot invent. Some of the contrivances are ingenious. A California woman has devised a table bedstead. There are a double piano stool, a bridle rein, an improved chimney, a birch-bark life preserver, a ventilating screen, life-size doll babies, carpet stretchers, floor-cleaning dustpans, kidney cures, and stove dampers, a photograph album, a pan greaser, a lock against burglars, and an autumn leaf catcher for cisterns.

A STORY is told by a Toledo West End preacher on a brother minister that will bear repeating. On Monday last a circus was in the city, and the ministerial curiosity was so awakened that an outside view of the stretch of canvas would not suffice. The minister had compunctions of conscience against the gratification of what he fancied might be a questionable desire. However, his liberality of belief would permit of the children going, and of their seeing all there was to be seen, provided they had some good-sized masculin protector with them. But unfortunately for him he had no children, and was therefore—to use an orthodox expression—"in a hole," Finally he hit upon a plan. He went to the other preacher and tried to borrow his five-year-old boy, as a companion to the circus, but it wouldn't work, the preacher remarking: "I've waited a long time for my boy to get big enough to go to a circus, and now I want to use him myself."

A CLERGYMAN had a favorit and very intelligent dog who committed a grievous fault one Sunday morning. His master, on returning from church, "did not beat him, but took hold of him and talked to him most bitterly, most severely. He talked on and on for a long time in the same serious and reproachful strain," and the dog was so deeply impressed with his own total depravity that he refused all food, pined away, and died in the course of a day or two. This story is told in the London Spectator by the reverend gentleman himself. It would look like a case for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

A NEW ENGLAND minister was detected in preaching the sermons of a New York divine, and as soon as he became aware that his plagiarism had been discovered he resigned. The church of course accepted his resignation and adopted resolutions saying that they regretted that "on account of failing health" he was obliged to giv up his charge. If such a step had been taken by other than a church society it might hav been considered rather a bright piece of sarcasm, or by some as a falsehood, but as the church resolved that he was troubled with "failing health" he goes forth an honest man. There is considerable difference between tweedle de and tweedle dum, after all.—Peck's Sun.

A GHASTLY burial ceremony that is practiced by the Mormons rivets the hold polygamy has on the superstition of their women. Every wife that is buried has a black cloth laid on her face, and the Mormon women are taught to believe that on the resurrection day, when the righteous are called into the joys of their Lord, no hand but that of a husband can remove the cloth, and that unless the cloth is lifted by his hand she must remain in outer darkness forever! A woman who believes that—and the Mormon women believe it—can't help behaving herself, no matter how many wives her husband takes. She has to keep on the right side of the only man who can take off that cloth.

THE Central Point church, in Pike county, Ga., developed a maniac by the name of McAllister not long ago, whose opposition to the services was so pronounced that the minister fled. He announced himself the defender of God against such doctrin as the dominie was preaching, by rising in his pew and shouting, "If you undertake to preach Christ and him crucified, I am here to make you prove your doctrin." He next interrupted the announcement and reading of the first hymn, and when two verses had been rendered became so excited by the music that he jumped upon the seat and stood beating time for the congregation with his arms and leading the anthem in a voice which resounded above all the others. After the usual prayer, the Rev. Mr. Jessup commenced his sermon, but he had scarcely uttered two sentences when McAllister sprung into the pulpit, and, hurling the book on the floor, shouted, "If that is your doctrin, sir, prove it before you go any further." On being asked to keep quiet, he said: "Oh, I can't be quiet. God has sent me to do this, and I came prepared to sacrifice my life on his altar, to defend his teachings." As he said this he drew a keen-bladed knife and held it aloft over his head as he advanced on the minister, with his other hand outstretched toward the pastor's throat. The minister, realizing that his life was at stake, beat a rapid retreat toward the door, followed in a wild rush by most of the women in the church, and a majority of the men. The scene was exciting in the extreme. Many of the women added to the terror by frantic screaming, while two of them fell to the floor, near the door, in fainting fits. Some men in the crowd retained sufficient presence of mind to drag their limp forms out of the doorway onto the green sward beside the building. In the church, meanwhile, six men essayed to capture the maniac, but he, divining their intentions, kept them at bay with his knife until he gained an open window, through which he sprang and made his escape. Before leaving, he said that he would be present at the afternoon service, but he failed to put in an appearance, and as he has not returned to the hamlet, fears are entertained that he lost his life in one of the bogs which are common to the woods surrounding the little hamlet.

IT is a glad picnic party. The Sunday-school had gone out into the leafy forest. The dark object in the heavens, eight hundred miles wide and two thousand long, is a cloud. It got to the woods as soon as the picnic, and is there yet. Under the great oak you can see the dinner. The large winter-proof mound in the middle of the table sullenly laughing at the storm is a fruit cake. The teacher of the infant class made it herself for the little ones. But the storm saved them. See, the lightning struck the cake. It will never strike anything else. There stands the cake, with a dent, and under the table, shattered and blighted, lies the thunderbolt. Under the cedar-tree is a dying dog. He got in the way and the superintendent felled him to the earth with one blow of a biscuit. The tall figure wrapped in the ghostly drapery of a water-soaked linen duster, leading the way to the cars, is the teacher of the young ladies' Bible class. His influence with that class is gone forever. The young ladies will never be able to look at him again without thinking how he looked on this occasion. Up in the hickory-tree you see a grief-stricken face peering down. It is the superintendent. He climbed up there to fix the swing, and before they could throw him the rope the storm came up and the picnic adjourned sine die and sine mora. And he is waiting for the last straggler to disappear before he comes down. He has officiated at Sunday-school picnics often enough to know better than slide down a shellbark hickory tree before an audience. The man with an umbrella under his arm is the treasurer. He is getting drenched, but he does not raise his umbrella. He knows there is a name painted in the inside of it, but for the life of him he cannot remember whose name it is. He is watching his chance to giv his umbrella to a stranger.—Hawkeye.

THE omission of an opening prayer by the New York Democratic Convention recently assembled at Buffalo is thus sensibly commented upon by the Detroit Evening News: "While people who care more for the outward form than for the inward spirit of religion may condemn the action of the New York Democrats in omitting the usual prayer with which political conventions are opened, the truly religious will commend it, and will be glad to see the Buffalo example followed by all political bodies. Prayer at political conventions and in legislativ bodies is pure and unadulterated phariseeism in those who demand it, and sacrilegious mockery in those who participate in it without desiring it. There are many broad views among average American politicians as to the purpose and efficacy of prayer at any time; and it may be safely said that for the ostensible purposes for which it is offered in conventions and legislatures, 90 per cent of those in attendance do not believe in it at all. The clergyman who utters it, therefore, is a mere praying machine to the mass of his hearers, having as little meaning as the Chinese praying-wheel, and the ceremony is less dignified than the mechanical exhortations of the latter, for there is lacking the sincerity which sets the wheel going. We were never more impressed with the farcical character of this perfunctory religious travesty than in listening to the venerable bishop of Illinois open with prayer a Republican national convention which had just elected the Atheist Carl Schurz as its chairman. It is not a genuin spirit of piety that insists on such mockeries as this, but a hypocritical desire to simulate a piety which is not felt. If any member believes that he will the better perform his duties in the convention by the assistance of prayer, there is nothing to prevent him from performing his orisons in private. Honest people, whether they be religious or not, should unite to stop these public mockeries of religion."

News of the Week.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM DENTON is dead.

MRS. LANGTRY has returned to America.

FIVE inches of snow fell at Denver, Col., one day last week.

EARTHQUAKES were felt last Sunday in the city of Panama, C. A.

A PAPER has just been started in India to "boom" the Mohammedan religion.

ROWELL, the pedestrian, is to try his fortune again upon the American sawdust track.

THE President and all the members of his cabinet are in Washington for the first time in several months.

THE Rev. Ernest Fitzroy, the rector of St. Jude's, Liverpool, was suspended the other day for three years for drunkenness.

AN attempt was made to assassinate the president of San Domingo, Hayti, on the 13th inst. The president shot his assailant dead.

TWENTY persons were arrested at Foxon, Conn., last Sunday, for Sabbath-breaking. Their crime consisted in carriage-riding on Sunday.

JUDGE HOADLY (Democrat) was elected governor of Ohio by a majority of about 15,000. Sherman (Republican) carried Iowa by a majority of 12,000.

THE State Saloonkeepers' Convention of Wisconsin last week resolved that drunkenness is not due to the saloons, but to the lack of education in youth.

MRS. ELLEN BEEKMAN, wife of a wealthy farmer of Altamont, W. Va., committed suicide on the 10th by taking blue vitriol. She was insane about religion.

THE Bible and lamps were stolen from the Presbyterian church at Greenville, Texas, the other day, and pawned upon an inexperienced bartender for half a pint of liquor.

THE Episcopal Convention at Philadelphia fixed upon the 6th of August for the Feast of the Transfiguration. The Fourth of July might not hav been inappropriate.

A NUN recently attempted to escape from a convent at Medellin, near Panama, in Central America, at the termination of a convent mass. She was captured and forced to return, complaining bitterly of her treatment.

JOHN SWINTON, for many years an editorial writer on the New York Sun, has commenced a weekly publication under the name of John Swinton's Paper. It will advocate the Socialistic methods of reform in government.

HENRY BEHAN, of Syracuse, N. Y., better known as "Dutch Hank," a professional gambler, died recently, leaving behind him a fortune estimated at from $100,000 to $200,000, the accumulation of his thirty years of rascality.

THE American Woman Suffrage Association, which has held a two days' session at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, resolved to petition state legislatures for woman suffrage by statute, and to ask Congress for a constitutional amendment.

A CATHOLIC congress opened at Naples, Italy, on the 12th. A letter from Duke Salviati was read, declaring that 60,000 members of the Catholic church were organized and ready to strike a determined blow for the restoration of the temporal power of the pope.

THE Rev. Dr. John R. Fisher, of Jersey City, N. J., is on strike. His church notified him that owing to its straitened circumstances his wages would be reduced from $2,500 to a smaller sum. He announces that he will resign if the reduction is not reconsidered.

THE workmen employed on building a new Protestant church at Neuwied, on the Rhine, struck work in consequence of their being forbidden to drink either wine or beer during their hours of labor. They find liquor as necessary to construction as it is for communion.

Communications.

Who Is It?

"I hav found out who is at the other end of the wires."—TRUTH SEEKER, Aug. 11th, p. 449.

Hav you indeed, my friend? If so, then you hav "found out" a factor, in modern mediumism, in advance of any discovery ever yet made by the entire scientific world. Science, you know, is absolutely supreme, in its authority over humanity, in matters of fact and belief. It admits of no theory not proved by experiment. A method I long ago adopted, and the results of my experiments, I will now submit to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Sixty years I hav waited at those "wires" leading into the unknown, and my own "tests," amounting perhaps to thousands, prove, beyond all doubt, that an invisible witness cannot be cross-examined. A criminal that is out of sight cannot be apprehended.

How can a culprit be punished, when you cannot find him in this world? There are invisibles talked of by Christians and Spiritualists.

At the other end of the Christian "wires," there are three persons, seen by faith, in one godhead; and that old brass devil makes four. And who is that person they call God that fills unbounded space? Who was that nondescript person that overshadowed Mary? (Luke i, 35.) As to our friends, the Spiritualists, all the dead are at the other end of their wires. These wires reveal to the light of day the secrets always and forever hid beneath the eternal seal of death. Whatever may be at the other end of these wires, we hav no faculty for knowing. We do not know whether any invisibility is male, female, or neither; whether it is he, she, or it; all we know is that no nondescript invisibility from heaven or hell belongs to this world or has any business here. And if they are from above, they better go back to their bliss, and stay there. Or if they report themselvs from the Christians' hell, I do not comprehend how they could get out of that hot prison so far down below. We hav been told of a small number of these invisibles of olden time that haunted houses and frightened the families. But the conclusion is reasonable that they had no knowledge of humanity, and in their ignorance they blundered against our planet. Hence they always caused a deal of fear and trouble. And now it seems manifest, both from the beginning and history of the modern houses haunted, that no invisibles, outside of our earth, hav any external senses, like ours, for a knowledge of our world. Hence these mediumistic wires, for communicating knowledge back and forth to both worlds, each of which is unknown to the other. Such is the use of telegraphic wires, to giv and to receive information.

Nature's Order.—This order, we find, has put an adamantine wall between the external and the spiritual. This is so absolute, so deep, so broad, and so high, that it cannot be scaled by gods or ghosts; and it has always vetoed, first, last, and forever, all and any attempts at placing wires between these two spheres, the external and the Spiritual. The two are so very wide apart that each is by the other utterly unknown. So it is in nature's order. So it was, and so it will always be.

Hence the futil attempts to penetrate or to mount this wall in witchcraft or Christianity, which hav so signally failed. The "wires" laid in the Christian scriptures extend no farther than the brains of the prophets and apostles who wrote them. Nothing is known, nothing whatever is or has been known, of any invisible personality, since that old barbarian book was called revelation. There is no royal road for evading nature's order and laws. The silence imposed by death upon human life is eternal. Moreover, the direct catastrophe befell the Christian God and the race when he laid the first wire for evading this law. His boiler burst, his mystic craft was wrecked, and nearly the whole world was downed in Noah's flood that never was known only in Christian lore. And everybody, and his wife, know how like devils the Christians hav disputed and quarreled with one another, and put one another to death, until the number they hav hung and burnt at the stake has exceeded ten millions of men, women, and children. Indeed, nothing has so much cursed the human race, and so kept it from its instinctiv and progressiv growth, as Bible visions and revelations in a state of trance (2 Cor. xii, 1).

Modern Mysticism.—Human credulity is the "hole of the pit whence it was digged." Its dozen factors are unknown; but I will speak only of what I hav myself seen and heard. J. J. Hutchinson (the vocalist) had buried his brother Benjamin, and when told that he might be magnetized and entranced by the spirit of that brother, he became perfectly bewitched with that idea; and, from that hour, he remained insane for a number of years, until he finally hung himself upon High Rock, in Lynn, Mass. He was the first one magnetized by spirits. Many more, since 1850, hav followed in the same track, and ended their own lives by suicide, in order to gain admittance to the "summer-land."

A medium in Boston has advertised "communications from the twelve apostles," and "from the heavenly parent;" and besides these, has adopted the names of the living, and made messages from them, when the medium supposed they were dead; thus showing that they adopt any names to suit the parties. And it has been characteristic of this mystic rap that from the first until now it indorses and adopts the religion of the families where the conditions are favorable. I hav a pamphlet, the gift of the medium, Mrs. Benedict, of Auburn, N. Y., through whom twelve Millerites had the raps, fully confirming the Second Advent notions as to hell and the resurrection of the dead. It was printed in 1850, and those deluded Christians believed themselvs highly favored. When it is in a popish family, it favors the Roman sect. When in a Protestant Episcopal family, that view of things is favored, and so of the Methodists and all phases of human belief. I refer to the Wesley family in Hepworth, England, in which these mystical phenomena were continued for thirty years, during which there was no idea of spirits. And it is easy to see how it has been that this modern movement, like a Methodist revival, has been carried on, as it begun, by human suggestion and human wires. What are miscalled tests are confined to a very small number of the mediums. The reason for this is that the tests, so-called, depend wholly upon the favorable conditions as always necessary for the manifestations of clairvoyance. Whether this is in the medium or in the spirit is unknown, or in the wires; it is all the same. But all that comes through these wires comes by human suggestion. You must go to a medium, no matter how deeply you suffer, or how earnestly you call for a loved one who has died. No answer comes to you without the wires. And if you get an answer, you are deceived by it, as all the so-called tests, as to names, dates, and locality, prove nothing as to personal identity, as they depend upon clairvoyance. The spirits hav admitted this fact to me, and I hav proved it by experiment over and over again. The fraud is manifest from the fact that a medium has to be employed at all. Were the testifying invisible the person it pretends to be, no medium would be necessary.

Unsolved Problems.—If Mr. Bruce does really know who is at the other end of his wires, surely he ought to inform the human race why the angels waited a hundred thousand years before making known to us the summer-land.

And I put this question to him squarely, or to anyone else that thinks he can solve this problem. And the same objection lies against Christianity. What was its God doing during the past eternity of years—which is just as long as the eternity is to come? Nor is it of any use to ask any theologian to solve this problem. Nor need I here and now ask my good friend, Mr. D. Bruce, to inform me as to how much he thinks we may hope to be benefited by revelations and messages from gods and ghosts, who know nothing of us except what they may chance to learn at the other end of these wires.

Alas for our humanity, that we hav become so accustomed to consider an absolute success! a magnificent triumph, without a god or a ghost; persistently progressiv in spite of Christianity—in spite of all priests and all forms of mysticism.

My Own Observations.—My experience in the trances and the revival phenomena in Methodism, and my larger experience in my scientific lectures, extend throughout the country. And then I heard the first raps in the Fox family, and from that day to this I hav never ceased my investigations. I never ignored the phenomena. There were four mediums among my relativs, one of them being the pioneer medium in Boston and the New England states I issued the first Spiritualistic paper, and gave the first lectures upon this subject, not only in Boston, but in New York, Providence, R. I., Bangor, Me., Utica, N. Y., and other cities. And I am sure that I hav been at all the pains, and the expense, that should entitle me to hav found out who is at the other end of the wires, if that discovery had been indeed possible for anyone to make. Nor do I at all regret that I hav been deceived by either Methodism or modern mysticism. The discovery of the truth is my reward. Now I could not be a working Spiritualist or a theoretical Christian. I cannot build theories as to any invisibilities or mystical phenomena. With me science is supreme in its authority. Christianity is another word for witchcraft. It is all fraud. And all the tests in Spiritualism are fraudulent, while they are so mystified and out of sight that the temptation to deceive is afforded. And then again, when the mind is oppressed with grief for dead friends, it is not in a condition to weigh the plainest evidences of deception. The wires—yes, these very wires—are proof of deception.

Mental Deterioration.—And here I refer to the injury of the human mind by mediumship. Certainly the mind is injured when it becomes incapacitated for self-control. Mediumship, per se, is objectionable because it annihilates selfhood. How can the mind maintain its integrity that is constantly under a deceptiv influence? A young lady, considered one of the best test mediums, said to her father, "I never did make the raps, papa, but often when they hav failed to come freely, I hav felt as if I wanted to make them. In Philadelphia, at a sitting, I saw a test medium make all the raps herself, and she gave the correct answers to all the questions. One of the Fox girls was detected in making the raps. And how many times has Zoellner's medium, Mr. Slade, been detected? The late Mrs. M. M. Hardy, for a time the most popular test medium ever known in the Athens of America, was detected in fraud. She made the phenomena that she attributed to the "wires." How can it be possible for any mind to maintain its honesty when it is under the control of a deceptiv influence? Mediumship itself is an abnormal condition. When carried on as a business, it must result in mental loss. From the first of this movement I hav had mediums call on me to be relieved (to hav "the devil cast out") of the bamboozlement in which the "wires" had involved them. Nor is there any consideration, outside of mysticism, that could justify any one thus to yield up their selfhood, self-control, and character to the dominion of an idea, true or false, of any one dead. The idea is perfectly absurd.

As to the real character of any ghost we know nothing.

Controled by Faith.—No theologian can prove that his entire Bible was not inspired by the devil. And Christians try to make out that their devil inspires modern mediums. And both Christians and Spiritualists shrink from the discussion of these problems as to personal identity. The raps cease if you look at the table leg on which they are made. Go to any revival meeting, and it will stop if you criticise it. Were the tests what they are estimated for, Spiritualism would hav shaken this planet from pole to pole in a year. It has had terrible pull-backs, and still it has done all in its power to provoke a battle with the church. It evidently stands in its own light in indorsing Christianity as it has done, and in ignoring miracles. Albeit, those at the other end of "the wires" cannot explain how the rap is made.

If I were only sure that these invisibles ever inhabited a human body, as I do now, then I should feel equally sure that they entered that world without any memory of the past, similarly as we were born into this world. The answer is the same to both these questions:

Birth, and what then? Death, and what then? We do not know "what then." Were it essential for us to know, that knowledge would come to us, as the air, and the water, and our food come. After being born here, we find out by learning what we most need. We hav to learn all we know. And, sooner or later, we discover what to us is of far greater importance than any discovery that Mr. Bruce can hav made, and it is this, namely, that it is from within that we grow. From within we find all physical and mental wounds are healed. Even those wounds inflicted upon human ignorance by Christianity—even these our humanity heals. And it is a ground for hope, that the mind grows after the body has ceased its growth, at about twenty-one years. In nature's order human life consists, not only of growth and decay, but also of learning anew, and forgetting even till it may be said that we hav forgotten more than we now know. And who shall fix a limit to our forgetting, and learning more of the new? If we liv after death, that life must be all new. New instincts, new relations, new loves, new aspirations, new hopes, and new sources of joy. No disappointments, no surprises, no more than when we found ourselvs having been born into this world. We brought no memory of the past with us. And, if we enter upon a new existence after leaving this life, it is all new. We shall hav done with this life forever.

Knownothings.—I here giv one case, as illustrativ of the whole. It occurred in this town, and I know the parties. They were both of them mediums, and the particulars at the time were well known here, and they excited a good deal of comment. Mr. J. J. G. was unmarried, a farmer, and was worth nearly half a million of dollars. He had many good qualities as a man and a brother. He was taken sick, and Mrs. R. (wife of Dr. R., both of whom were Spiritualists) went to Mr. G.'s house to nurse him. But she never returned to her own home, with her husband, Dr. R. She remained with Mr. G. till he recovered, when they were said to hav been married. And she remained there till Mr. G. died. I was at his funeral, and state only what I know. Mrs. R. had long been known as a test medium. And immediately on Mr. G.'s death she called the spirit of the dead man to know if he had made his will. The answer from "the other end of the wires" was that he had made his will. Then she begged again and again to know where he had left it, and the names of the witnesses. But on this part of the subject the spirit of J. J. G. was an utter knownothing. Whereupon two other mediums were summoned to the house, before the funeral, to see if the conditions wouldn't be favorable for obtaining from the dead man some knowledge of that will, as without it Mrs. R. was likely to be turned out of doors by the heirs—as, indeed, she was ousted shortly afterwards. And this is only one case, in a dozen just like it, that I could giv if necessary.

"The Other End of the Wires."—The most strange in all the marvelous phenomena ever reported occurred at the house of a Presbyterian clergyman, the Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., in 1850. With Dr. Phelps I had had a previous acquaintance, when he was settled in Philadelphia. He was in 1841 a correspondent of the Magnet, a scientific monthly I was then publishing in New York, devoted to Psychology. And it was on this account that he extended to me a cordial invitation to visit his family, and witness the strange phenomena occurring there; all from the other end of these wires, and done by Sambo, Sam Slick, and that old brass devil. I hav papers now before me that fell from the air, written upon and signed by these names. Would Mr. Bruce say that he knows who these personages are?

As I entered the door of Dr. Phelps' house, a homeopathic medicin box was thrown apparently at my head. It hit the door, and broke into pieces. And as the doctor conducted me to my room, a chair was dashed against my door, and one of the windows near was smashed out from the inside. Dr. Phelps told me that four times his house had been set on fire. And at one time Mr Beach, of the New York Sun, was in a position where he saw the match removed from the shelf by invisible fingers. He saw it ignited, and pass to the bed clothes, on which the little boy was asleep, and the sheets were instantly in a blaze. Once, while his daughter was indisposed in bed, and he noticed that she had turned black in the face, and seemed choking to death on rushing to her relief, he found her neck, embedded by a cord so deep that it could not be seen, and as he got at it, it proved to be the india-rubber band, taken from a glove, and tied so tightly around her neck that the knot in it could not be seen. The doctor informed me that his company, and the damages done to his house, had cost him five hundred dollars. When he had bought a box of glass to reset his windows, he put it in his shed, and when he and his wife went to take the glass out of the box, every pane of it was broken instantly as they removed it from the box and laid it down.

As we sat down to breakfast, the table was jostled so as to upset our coffee-cups. Dr. Phelps asked the other end of the wires, "Who did that?" when the answer came back, "Dr. Sunderland did that." Whereupon I asked the angels what kind of a locality they were in. They answered, "We are in hell, where you and Phelps ought to be." Then I asked if I could do them any favor. And the answer came back, "Yes; giv us a glass of fresh gin." When Dr. Phelps was about to say grace at the table, twelve silver forks were instantly bent up double; and before the family were seated the forks were all bent back again, but an indentation was afterwards noticed in each of them. The doctor had long been accustomed to having all his family of a dozen or so read each of them in a Bible. But, one morning, not one of his Bibles could be found, and as they got upon their knees for prayers, all those Bibles came tumbling down the chimney into the room where they had gathered.

The doctor had a middle chamber without windows or furniture. It was locked, with the key in his pocket. One day there were strange noises in that room, and on going up to see what was going on, they found twelve effigies made of the family's garments, each kneeling before a chair, with a Bible in hand

Dr. Phelps made a number of attempts to write an account of these disturbances, for publication, but in vain. His manuscripts were always missing, and at times they were removed while he was writing them and torn up before his eyes. At other times, he was told to take up the carpets, when he found his papers beneath them.

The Best of Us Deceived.—The Fox family were deceived when they told me that if any raps should be made for me, the message would be from some of my dead relativs. And so all test mediums affirm of themselvs. But they are deceived; they take many things for granted of which there is no proof; thus: that when our friends die, they carry with them their past social relations. As if death was not an absolute separater in all respects from this world. And does not every widow and widower that marries the second time confirm my idea as to an eternal separation by death. That other state (supposing there may be one) is so unlike this life that we have no capacity for any idea as to its locality, its nature, or its duration. An infant has as much memory of the sphere out of which it has just been born as anyone dead can hav of this world. No matter, therefore, to what world these modern ghosts may belong, it is sufficient for us to know that they do not belong to this world. They are as ignorant of us as we are of them.

And now, thanks to THE TRUTH SEEKER, free and independent, that allows me to discuss in its columns problems that are forbidden by the pulpit I once occupied. These questions reach even into humanity's lap, in which all of us, saints and sinners, shall find our rest at last. LAROY SUNDERLAND.

Quincy, Mass., Sept. 3, N.E. 108.

Spiritualism as a Science.

Spiritualism is a science. As such it has been demonstrated by as able scientists as ever lived. As such it is an established fact. It is here and has come to stay. It is based on phenomena, the existence of which even those who are most bitter in denouncing dare not deny. All scientific facts are involved in more or less of mystery. The laws that underlie the assimilation of our food, the circulation of the blood, the growth of a blade of grass, or the tinting of the rose, are mysteries as much as those by which the spiritual manifestations are produced, and by which our spirit friends prove to us their identity. All facts hav a place somewhere in the realms of science. In times past phenomena not at all understood were charged up to God; to-day it is fraud or the devil. No phenomena but should receive fair and thorough investigation. Every man but one in England derided Franklin when he proved the identity of electricity and lightning. They had learned to regard thunder and lightning as a direct manifestation of the Almighty, and they indignantly repudiated Franklin's discovery as a sacrilegious insult to their God. Thus has it always been. Both Christians and Materialists admit the facts of the spiritual phenomena, but deny the cause, and together, by like methods, they make war on the same. Christians declare it the devil, evil spirits, fraud, or imagination. Materialists, more unreasonable still, declare it not worthy of investigation, all fraud, or, the imagination. They say, "Death ends all; therefore, it can't be spirits." Admit that a single rap was ever produced, or a single communication given by spirits, and their entire scheme is forever exploded, their craft hopelessly engulfed. Oracles hav had their day. The people will no longer receive in stupid silence their ipse dixit, "It is so because we say it is so." The people are determined to find out for themselvs the cause of every effect. They are getting out of the old ruts, hav thrown aside their prejudices, are investigating all phenomena, and proclaiming their discoveries truthfully, even though sneers and persecutions meet them at every step. Let error be persecuted by the same vindictiv methods that truth is and always has been, and how quickly would the world change to a pandemonium of blood and carnage. The representativs of science never sneer or persecute, only in proportion to the amount of prejudice they still retain. They are content, knowing that truth will be victorious in the end. The world is carrying a fearful load of prejudice and bigotry. It is the work of science to eliminate all this. Every true scientist begins by eliminating the prejudices that exist in his own mind. He must do this before he is competent to aid others. Prejudice is far worse than ignorance. The ignorant are willing to learn, the prejudiced not only refuse, but declare war. The world is rapidly learning to profit by the lessons of the past. The time has gone by when people can be made to kneel and deny the truth. It is far nobler to be a martyr to the truth than a slave to prejudice. Arguing against the unreasonable assumptions, denunciations, and ridicule of religious fanatics, or Materialistic oracles, is but "casting pearls before swine."

> "A man convinced against his will
> Is of the same opinion still."

While I would treat friend Winter with perfect respect, and regard him as a kind-hearted, good old man, perfectly honest and sincere, whose life is above all reproach, yet I feel certain no amount of argument or evidence would induce him to abandon the child he has nursed so faithfully and tenderly through all these years. For one, I am in favor of allowing friends Winter and Sunderland to dwell in peace in the magnificent Materialistic structures they imagin they hav reared, until they can receive our friendly calls in somewhat, at least, the same friendly spirit we make them. The only argument or reply we can consistently make to those who call us "fools and frauds" is, Prove it, my friend. Saying so don't make it so. So long as progressiv, reasoning people think otherwise, we can afford to suffer and labor in silence. A heavy wind makes shallow water more turbid. A tranquil atmosphere, with plenty of sunshine, builds, while whirlwinds destroy. I hav long since ceased to talk about Spiritualism as a possible contingency. Millions, many the ablest and best of the race, accept it precisely as they do astronomy, geology, or evolution. Argument to the contrary, or in any sense, is good only when it is received and weighed for what it is worth. Our Spiritualistic friends who hav labored so industriously to convince friends Winter and Sunderland do not seem to be making much headway, and I would call a friendly halt to all further efforts to that end. Let us giv our combativ friends a rest, and direct our efforts to giving demonstrated facts, and showing what Spiritualism is good for, remembering that future generations will regard us, who are in error, exactly as we do those who hav been in error in the past. Knowing that we are right, that our knowledge is based on incontrovertible facts, such as all may hav who will investigate without prejudice, we can afford to wait for justice to be done. If Spiritualism is a truth, then in some way it will help to elevate mankind, and not be a stumbling-block except as it is misunderstood and misapplied. As I understand it, it will do more to dissipate the black clouds of superstition, and to liberate and ennoble the race, than any other truth that has ever been discovered. By the phenomena of Spiritualism we prove that the universe is dual—the visible and invisible—the ponderable and imponderable, the external and internal, the passiv and activ, the negativ and positiv, the physical and spiritual, and thus all together is material substance, that matter, either physical or spiritual, is progressiv and indestructible, that all individualized existences are alike indestructible and continuous, that there never was and never will be anything but what is made of something, that outside of the universe of matter there are no gods, devils, heavens, or hells; that matter is omnipresent, omnipotent, and omniscient, and therefore infinit, and the only god. We prove that our friends still liv whom we once called dead. They prove their identity by what they know, precisely as our friends here do after long years of separation. The physical rapidly changes. The old man does not in the slightest degree resemble the little boy we once knew, and it is only by testing his knowledge that it is possible for him to prove his identity. Just so with our spirit friends. This shell or house of flesh is not the individual. They are spirits here the same as after death, only the conditions hav changed. Death has liberated them. They hav moved "out of the old house into the new." The acting positiv has severed all connection with and discarded the passiv worn-out old body, which quickly disintegrates and "returns to its nativ dust." Living, as we do, in physical life, it would be absurd to expect a spirit to manifest itself to us except by physical agencies. Having only sensation through which we receive proofs, how can spirits, either in the flesh or out, manifest themselvs to us except by and through that which appeals to sensation. Speaking, walking, and talking, with me, are really spiritual manifestations. Our own spirits communicate with each other by means of our physical organs. Our spirit friends, having no physical bodies of flesh and blood like ours, are compelled to borrow means adapted to the end; therefore mediumship. They do not of themselvs possess the wherewith to appeal to physical sensation. Many times spiritually they are able to impress their thoughts upon our spirits, or minds, and this is spirit communication and inspiration. Happy indeed are they who are thus gifted. Many are so positiv and repellant that, spiritually, their own minds, and the universe, too, are absolute blanks. Their spirit friends are actually repellant. They can not approach them, much less commune with their spirits.

Such are our radical Materialistic friends and allies. They may be happy, but certainly their happiness is not such as I covet. In this I certainly say, "I am thankful I am not as others are." Spirits liv in, and are adapted to, the real, living, activ world of causes; we, in and to the world of effects. When people die they simply move from the world of effects into the world of causes.

The two are most intimately associated. Between the two people hav always supposed there was an impenetrable veil, an eternal barrier, except by miraculous intervention, but Spiritualism has torn them aside, dispelled the illusion, and millions in both worlds rejoice. Physically we can never cross the line, but spiritually, in trance, dreams, or clairvoyance, we often go where the physical cannot follow. Spirits, as such, cannot recross the line into physical life, except by physical agencies. Therefore, when physical bodies are moved by some power manifesting intelligence outside of and independent of all known physical conditions, we can be assured, especially when that intelligence can be identified, that some friend in spirit life would communicate with us. The effect cannot control the cause, any more than the engin does the engineer, but the reverse is always true.

The spirit being the cause, acting in the world of causes, being the controling power, can operate in the world of effects at will, under proper conditions, and with proper means, while the physical, in effect, is powerless to reciprocate. Magnetism, or electricity, is the connecting link between cause and effect throughout all nature. It is the lever by which the universe is moved. Every living thing owes its existence as such to this subtle, universal, and all powerful agent. Sever the magnetic cord, and life at once goes out. Storms, earthquakes, and nearly all operations in nature are caused by it. By it our spirit friends transmit to us their messages of love and admonition. As well dispute the messages that come to us over the electric wires, as those we receive from our spirit friends.

Of course there are frauds and shameless pretenders. I hav witnessed, again and again, what I knew was fraud, but this did not prove the genuin false. A man would be worse than idiotic who would refuse all money because he had found one, two, or even half a dozen bad bills. E. A. CHAPMAN.

Lowell, Mich.

Editorial Notes.

An English Congregational minister proposes the abolition of sermons in the interest of religion. Wise man!

Miss E. A. Haighton has succeeded Mr. Allert de Lange as editor of De Dageraad, a Dutch Freethought journal of Amsterdam, Holland.

The Australian Secular Society held its first annual Freethought conference last August, which was largely attended. Intense enthusiasm was manifested, and nearly $10,000 was raised to build a Freethought hall.

The Rev. Mr. Hoffman, of Reading, Pa., is charged by some of his flock with failing to pay his butcher's, grocer's, and other tradesmen's bills, although he is very zealous in the cause of Christ. These members ought to know by this time that there is no necessary connection between Christianity and honesty.

Mr. Heywood writes us that District-Attorney E. H. Blackmer is roughly and arrogantly insisting on his immediate trial before Judge Aldrich, who is far from Liberal in his views. The bigots, he adds, are bound to crush him out this time. We hope not. Mr. Heywood is too good a man to spend any time behind prison bars.

In Monroe's Iron-Clad Age of Oct. 6th appears a poem, "Love of Money," signed "F. M. McCormack," which was printed in The Truth Seeker of Aug. 25th, unsigned. It was sent us by Wm. Holgate, of Mauston, Wis., and was handed to him by a gentleman from England. Mr. McCormack did wrong in signing his name to it if he did not write it and has no claim to its authorship.

The Rev. John R. Fisher, Presbyterian, of Jersey City, has tendered his resignation to the Presbytery, because his church is so deeply in debt that its hopes of liquidation are infinitesimal. Besides, there are, he says, too many churches in Jersey City for the amount of church-going population. Therefore he proposes to go out of the business. The members of his church proposed, as one way to meet the decline in the merchandise of souls, that he suffer a reduction of salary, but this he refused to do.

Lamenting rash early marriages, the Christian Advocate assigns as one reason of their frequency the fact that young girls are allowed to visit "church fairs without supervision," and adds that "Sunday-school acquaintances are not always safe." This is just what The Truth Seeker has been saying all along, and we feel renewed encouragement in being supported by such eminent church authority. Dr. Buckley has no doubt attended a great many fairs and Sunday-schools, and knows whereof he speaks.

We publish this week a long article by LaRoy Sunderland, setting forth his views in contradistinction to those of his Spiritualistic friend, David Bruce. Mr. Sunderland's writings hav excited much comment in German philosophical circles, and hav all been translated and republished at Leipsig. We also print an article by the well known Spritualistic writer and Liberal worker, E. A. Chapman, of Lowell, Mich., on "Spiritualism as a Science," in which he endeavors to show its practical application to every-day life. He will continue the articles as our space will permit.

The body of Mrs. Isador French, of this city, was taken last week to Washington, Pa., to be cremated. Mr. French is a German of Jewish persuasion, and he and his family are Freethinkers. "This was my mother's last wish," said Miss French to a reporter, "and it was ours. The idea of the body of anybody we love being consigned to worms is utterly repulsiv to us. Cremation is a grand, a holy thing. What is purer than fire? We shall every one of us be cremated, and I trust that the time is not far off when it will be the only recognized method of disposing of the dead. Then, again, the horror with which a public funeral is attended is another thing in favor of cremation."

A cablegram which will cause intense sorrow to the Freethinkers and Spiritualists of this country has been received at Boston announcing the death of Prof. Wm. Denton, the eminent geologist and Liberal lecturer, who for the past two years had been engaged in scientific explorations in Australia, New Zealand, and China. He is supposed to hav been in Java at the time of the earthquake, and to hav been one of its victims. Mrs. Denton writes that she has received no word beyond this bare and cold announcement, and she must wait the long and tedious journey by mail for word to relieve the painful suspense. She has the sympathy of thousands who will, until the terrible tidings are confirmed, indulge the hope that he may yet be safe.

While the Romanists are forever boasting that they are increasing in this country faster than the population, an Irish Roman Catholic bishop, recently speaking against "state aided emigration," said that emigration to this country had caused the loss of "millions of Catholics to the church." No doubt he told the truth, as anyone can see by comparing the statistics of Catholic immigration, allowing for its increase by propagation, with the the number claimed by the Romanists. It is always instructiv to compare what they say for the public with their admissions in their own papers and conventions. This also is necessary in estimating the conditions of Protestant denominations.—Advocate.

Does the Advocate mean to insinuate that Christian speakers hav one set of facts for the public and another for private instruction? It looks like it. And so the two churches a day that the Protestants are building, being an estimate intended for the public, are the substantial fabrics of a dream! We thought so all the time.

The following figures from "Hayter's Victorian Year Book" for 1880–81 show that in Australia as well as this country secular education has proved superior to religion as a crime suppressor. The figures were adduced by the Narracoorte Herald in reply to a Rev. Mr. Steel, who stated that a purely secular education was productiv of crime. The Herald points out that "the Education Act of Victoria, which is so much abused, and against which the Rev. Mr. Steel brings such serious charges, was passed in 1872 and came into operation on January 1, 1873. It provides for strictly secular education. We will consider some statistics relating to crime before and after that date. In 1870 the estimated population of Victoria was 713,195. In that year the total number of arrests for all offenses was 23,790, which is at the rate of 33.356 per 1,000 of the population. In 1880 the population was 850,343, and the total number of arrests 23,983, which is at the rate of 28.205 per 1,000 of the population. In 1870 the religious education system was in full swing, the Bible was read in all the schools. In 1880 the dreadful secular system had been in operation for eight years. Taking the whole amount of crime and offenses in Victoria for these years, the case is as under:

Year.	No. of arrests per 1,000 of population.
1870,	33.356
1880,	28.206
Decrease in ten years,	5.151"

If the reverend is at all modest he will speak low hereafter when conversing upon educational matters.

The Stockton, Cal., Weekly Mail publishes a letter from Joseph Bowers, one of the lawyers of the town, in which he freely ventilates his opinion of the churches and their members. He and a friend attended one of the fashionable houses of worship, and on their walk homeward the friend gave him the following valuable information regarding some of the individuals comprising the congregation. Said he:

"That portly man who sat up in front and was so prompt in his response is a man who a short time ago failed, paid twenty cents on the dollar and came out rich. That bald-headed man who appeared overwhelmed with piety was one of several heirs to a large fortune. He swindled the other heirs and became wealthy, respectable, and religious. That man who appeared ready to melt into tears at the mention of our savior's sufferings married a wealthy lady, robbed her of her money and deserted her. She is now in an insane asylum in the East. He is one of the high functionaries of the church. That other bald-headed gentleman who prayed so loud is a defendant in a suit for damages brought by a man whose home he had broken up, and whose wife he had stolen away. He is married and has a grown up family. Yonder man who was so deeply moved at the sermon enticed his father, who was rich, into a speculation, robbed the old man of every dollar, and left him in the poor-house, where he still remains. He is a class-leader, and teaches Sunday-school. That gray-haired old fellow is one of five church dignitaries, all men of family, who were convicted of immoral practices by the death-bed confession of a mechanic's wife a little over year ago. That portly man made a fortune selling whisky. He is now an honored and respected deacon. I could multiply historical reminiscences, but I hav given you enough.

"Other truths he told me about ministers and congregations that it is not necessary to repeat here. I hav become convinced that the majority of ministers follow their profession for the same reason that men become lawyers, doctors, or engineers—for the sake of the almighty dollar. And the recent action of a leading divine in forsaking the pulpit for the accountant's stool because of better pay, serves to strengthen my conviction, to say nothing of the many ministers who hav folded their tents and emigrated on the promis of an increased salary. It is barely possible that the temptations of the flesh sometimes influence the minister in his choice of a profession. But there is sufficient evidence to convict the majority of the profession of worldly desires, without the rapidly accumulating stores of testimony upon that rather delicate point.

"I am also as fully convinced that the majority of the men and women who profess religion are hypocrits, whose practices are as widely at variance with the teachings of Christ as are the antipodes, and who wear the garb of sanctity for much the same reason that the devil appeared to the anchorite in the guise of one of God's angels."

If Mr. Bowers would examin the dogmas and tenets of Christianity he will find them as fraudulent as the professors; then he could leave the lot to rot together while he spent his time in studying more profitable subjects.

Lectures and Meetings.

The Cleveland Association of Spiritualists and Freethinkers meet every Sunday at 10:45 A.M. and 7:45 P.M., at Weisgerber's Hall, Prospect and Brownell sts., commencing Sunday, Oct. 7th. Seats free. All are welcome.

Mr. Remsburg starts South for a lecturing trip in November, but will come East the following month, December. Those desiring his services—and every League and Liberal society in the country ought to engage him—can address him at his home, Atchison, Kan.

From the Banner of Light we learn that Mrs. Colby will lecture at Gill's Hall, Springfield, Mass., during October and November. Last Sunday she treated the question of "What will be the Result of the Present Decline of the Influence of Christianity?" Her conclusion was that churches would become schools for adults, and the clergy be changed to philosophers who should instruct the people in the practical truths of science; and the worship of an unknown God pass away. The audience was large and attentiv. Mrs. Colby is one of the best Freethought as well as Spiritual orators upon the platform. We hope the New England Convention will engage her for their meetings.

Lord Bacon's Religion.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: "The Characters of a Believing Christian, in Paradoxes and Seeming Contradictions," by Lord Bacon, which you republished in The Truth Seeker, October 6th, are in perfect keeping with the authorship of the Plays and Poems of Shakspere. Eleven years ago we found what you hav reprinted, and made notes of some of the more striking contradictions. Bacon, though a nominal Christian, was too learned to be a devotee, and there is very little Christianity in his Plays or Poems.

Shakspere must go! Antiquary.

The Liberal Club.

Nearly as many people as the capacity of the hall was sufficient to accommodate assembled last Friday evening to hear Mr. Wakeman, it being his first appearance as speaker at the Liberal Club since his return from the West. "The Freethinkers' Convention and the Liberal League Congress" was the subject chosen to be discussed. Mr. Wakeman gave, as far as the time would permit, a history of his trip. The Rochester convention came first under notice. That was the grandest assemblage of Liberals ever held. No one who was not present could form any idea of its weight and dignity. The speakers were as talented and eloquent a body of men and women as ever appeared on any platform. Mr. Wakeman named the speakers at the convention, and declared himself unable to speak too highly of them, or even to do them justice. The ex-Rev. Charles Reynolds's magnificent defense of our deceased fellow-townsman and brother Liberal, D. M. Bennett, was one of the most impressiv speeches of the occasion. Applause followed the mention of Mr. Bennett's name. Mr. Wakeman also referred to another great speech, that of Mr. John E. Remsburg on the "False Claims" of the church, recently printed in The Truth Seeker. Those who had not read that speech were advised to purchase The Truth Seeker and do so, as it was worth more than the paper cost for a year. [Mr. Wakeman was unaware that the number containing the speech alluded to is exhausted, and that the demand for "False Claims" has made necessary its publication in pamphlet form.] The papers did their best, Mr. Wakeman said, to giv the convention a fair report, but at best they could only misrepresent. The average reporter was not competent to report a Liberal or scientific lecture.

One of the remarkable features of the Rochester Convention was the speaker's debate with the Rev. Mr. Mitchell. Mr. Mitchell occupied some two and a half hours in the reading of his defense of Christianity, and on the next evening Mr. Wakeman had put in about the same amount of time. The audience bore with them both, he said, like heroes. The people at Buffalo got a notion that they wanted the discussion repeated at their city, and thither the two disputants went. Unfortunately Mr. Mitchell did not draw. The ministers of Buffalo held off from him, and his hearers were all Liberals. On the second night, however, when Mr. Wakeman spoke in reply, there was a good audience, who showed the same remarkable and heroic fortitude, in listening to his two hours and a half of talk, that had been exhibited by the Spartans of Rochester. From Buffalo Mr. Mitchell returned to Brooklyn, and, the speaker understood, had spent his time since in boasting of his conquest over the Infidels. Mr. Wakeman then recounted his experiences traveling through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, and other states. Everywhere except in Michigan the Liberals had attended to the necessities of the travelers in the way of hotel accommodations, etc., but in that state such creature comforts seemed to hav been overlooked. He thought he should never quite forgiv the Liberals of Michigan. Mr. Wakeman did not like the monotonous level of the West. This had been somewhat alleviated by the facetiousness of his traveling companion, Mr. Leland, who was in the habit of telling fairy stories, propounding conundrums, and making puns of the most extraordinary and startling nature.

From Chicago to Tama City, Iowa, the speaker thought was the most unexciting journey he had ever made. The same scene always presented itself, in which the wooden shanty and towheaded young one predominated. Mr. Leland did not go to Tama City, but Mr. Wakeman was accompanied by Mr. Remsburg, who was naturally more reticent in his speech than the irrepressible secretary, and the only amusement he could offer Mr. Wakeman was a pocket Bible. This the speaker took and expounded from an evolutionary point of view, to the great edification of his companion, who declared he had never heard anything like it. Thus the double object was attained, to divert the mind and improve the understanding. Arriving at Tama City they found the Liberals in convention. They were cordially received, and taken to the hotel and treated like gentlemen, the word treat being used in a figurativ sense. At the invitation of an Indian agent, Mr. Wakeman went to visit a tribe of Indians near by, whom he found a most interesting study. Socially they were in the Silurian age.

Mr. Wakeman gave next an account of the Milwaukee Liberal League Congress, which he characterized as the most important one ever held. One of his objects in going to Milwaukee was to interest the German Freethinkers in the work of the League. This had been effected. The Radicals of Teutonic extraction had fallen into line, and their organ, the Freidenker, indorsed the movement. The speaker had been re-elected as president of the League, but it was with pain that he had accepted the position.

Only that it would look like a desertion, he would hav declined. The presidency was a burden which had nearly crushed him. The audience were referred to the treasurer's report. That report showed that the League was something more than two thousand dollars in debt to Mr. Wakeman. He adverted to this condition of things with some bitterness, and closed his address with an appeal to the Liberals to contribute to the support of the League organ, Man. The lecture throughout was liberally interspersed with applause.

Mr. Andrews asked Mr. Leland if Mr. Wakeman had omitted anything. Mr. Leland, after modestly explaining that he was the silent partner, admitted that the speaker had scarcely done justice to the women of the League. Being urged by Mr. Andrews to expose the previous speaker's errors, the secretary very gallantly complimented several of the leading lady speakers connected with the League, particularly Mrs. Severance, Mrs. Lake, and Mrs. Krekel. One thing he had noticed, the Spiritualists and Materialists of the West were equally enthusiastic in Liberal work—the Spiritualists being, if anything, the more earnest and activ.

Mr. Courtlandt Palmer followed. He made some uncomplimentary reference to the way the press had reported his speech at Rochester. The New York World had reported him as outrageously saying that "Jesus Christ must go," when the fact was he had used no such language, and had spoken most reverentially of the founder of Christianity. Mr. Palmer asked the Liberals to help support Man. The paper was in debt to Mr. Wakeman, who should be relieved. Now was the time to subscribe.

Mr. Andrews explained how it was that Liberals do not more generally cohere. They had escaped to some extent from government by the emotions, and were under the dominion of the intellect. This is a transition stage, and people will grow out of it into a new and better kind of enthusiasm than that from which they hav emerged.

Mr. Pink gave some illustrations of the unfairness of the press in reporting the words or meetings of reformers.

Lawyer Chamberlain made some moderate and sensible remarks concerning the Rochester Convention and the press reports of the same, which he is justly accredited with having had considerable influence in making as good as they were.

Mr. King was invited to speak by the audience, but declined. He said that one of the Liberal papers had advised him not to speak every time he was asked to. He would act upon that advice. Mr. King is a shrewd gentleman, with an immense stock of wit. He is probably the most brilliant at repartee of all the speakers on the club platform. His remarks are often the source of genuin and uncontrollable merriment. It is only in contrast with his best that his poorest speeches appear dull. By making these speeches less frequently he will add thereto the charm of novelty, and greatly enhance the effectivness of his remarks. It was looking to this consummation that the suggestion alluded to was made. The Liberal Club and its speakers hav no friend more appreciativ or solicitous for their welfare than THE TRUTH SEEKER. Indeed it is the only paper that has ever accorded them dignified reports in its columns.

Mr. Wakeman closed the exercises. An issue of Man, delayed for some weeks by the absence of its editors, was on the table. It contained the report of the League Congress printed a few weeks ago in these columns.

Some complaint was made by members of the club that allusion to Mr. Shook was omitted in last week's report. That oversight was the result of a temporary change of reporter. Hereafter his name will appear regularly in these reports. He was not visibly present last Friday night.

The Boston Liberal Club.

On Sunday last, October 14th, after nearly three days' debate, the report of the Committee on Permanent Organization was adopted. Although in detail considerably amended, the substance and general features were retained as presented. The original intention of the founders has thus been formulated and agreed to. The regular order of procedure, as has existed up to the present time, will be continued without interference, but the general scope of the club's action has been greatly increased. Its stated objects hav been extended so that, if sufficiently supported, it will hav its own rooms, in which members can at all times assemble, when so disposed, and enjoy social converse and amusement, or by means of a library and reading-room, adequately furnished, they may hav facilities for carrying forward their intellectual pursuits. Visitors to the city will further find a welcome within the precincts of the club. It will be to them a headquarters from which their correspondence can proceed, and at which it can be received.

After the transaction of that business, Mr. B. F. Underwood, one of the Index editors, addressed the club on "The Union of Liberals." In his essay Mr. Underwood took the ground that no organization could rightly be called Liberal unless it was prepared to use all kinds of machinery—the concentric, the eccentric, and the crank—to carry out its objects. It was, however, an interference with liberty if the crank were allowed to turn the wheels in a different direction from that in which they had been started and were intended to move.

In the discussion which followed, the question of organization generally was pretty thoroughly considered. The conclusion which was arrived at by the majority of the speakers was that action of any kind beyond that which was necessary to bring them together to hear themselvs and each other talk, was useless and indeed objectionable. "Talk" was the ne plus ultra, the highest, the ultimate purpose of all organization. The only question open to discussion was the nature of the subjects upon which the talk should be expended.

At the conclusion of the debate a business meeting was convened for perfecting the permanent organization by electing officers for the ensuing year. The result of this election was as follows: John Storer Cobb, president; John S. Verity, vice-president; H. D. Allen, secretary; George N. Hill, Treasurer; Horace Seaver, J. Flora Tilton, and C. Edith Aiken, trustees. Mr. Ernest Mendum was elected chairman of the literary exercises for the month of October.

Practical Work in Michigan.

A bill of injunction has just been filed in Grand Rapids, Kent county, Mich., asking that the trustees and teachers of the schools at Lowell, Mich., be restrained from holding religious exercises or Bible reading in the same. The papers were served on all the teachers and trustees October 5th. My brother, Albert J. Chapman, of Detroit, is solicitor counsel for the complainants, as will be seen from the digest of the bill from the Detroit Free Press, as printed below. For five years I hav been contending with the bigots of this town for my rights as a citizen of this government; and I hav at last succeeded in getting the question where, if bigotry is not already king, the entire country may get the benefit. The last victory of the opposition, when one hundred and fifty women, at the beck of the priests, turned out to the school-meeting and elected their trustee, broke the Liberal cause's back. The president of the Lowell National Bank, and Representativ J. C. Train, head the list of complainants. We hav raised a fund already sufficient to carry it through the Circuit Court. If it goes to the Supreme Court I shall be compelled to ask for help from Liberals throughout the country at large, and especially those living in Michigan. We already know the case will be contested. If we are beaten we shall certainly appeal it and rely on help from outside. We already hav raised all we can in Lowell. The matter will be tried before the Circuit Court (Judge Montgomery) at Grand Rapids, within twenty days. If it is appealed, I will at once announce it to the friends through THE TRUTH SEEKER and confidently believe we shall receive the aid we shall need. It will cost us about four hundred dollars to appeal it. I make this statement that the friends may be ready. Of course no one but will see the importance of this step. If this government has been swallowed by the church it is proper that we know it. Please let me suggest to our Materialistic friends that there is one Spiritualist who takes no stock in the sickly, sentimental, religious drivel that characterizes nine-tenths of Spiritualism so-called; who is as aggressiv in his work as any Materialist on earth, and whose work is confined to the here and now of this world. "Let us pray" that this government has the "backbone" to be true and loyal to itself in this important crisis. E. A. CHAPMAN.

Lowell, Mich.

The following givs the details of what has been done and what is proposed to do:

Two years ago the school board of district No. 1, township of Lowell, Kent county, Mich., resolved that it was unjust and illegal to hold sectarian exercises in the public schools, and that if held at all they must be outside of regular school hours. Recently the board rescinded the resolutions and gave the teachers permission to hold religious worship at their option. A petition, signed by seventy citizens, was presented the board asking them to discontinue the sectarian services, and the board laid the petition on the table. Many other protests were made, but without success, and in searching for a course the objectors found the following in the report of the W. C. T. U. State Convention, held at Adrian: "In Lowell, Bible reading in the public schools has been prohibited, and the union took the matter in hand and the result was that the Bible was reinstated in the schools."

In view of these facts, the citizens of Lowell who are opposed to Bible readings and sectarian exercises in the public schools filed a bill of complaint Saturday in the Circuit Court for the county of Kent, at Grand Rapids. The title of the case is: "Charles T. Wooding et al. vs. the Board of Trustees of School District No. 1, township of Lowell, Lent county, et al." The document covers seventeen pages of legal cap and is the result of several weeks of close study, diligent research, and careful examination on the part of the solicitor, who is a well-known Detroit lawyer. The complainants are Charles T. Wooding, Jarvis C. Train, Willard J. Danforth, Wm. Pullen, Charles McCarty, Chandler Johnson, Wm. R. Blaisdell, J. B. Malcom, Edwin A. Chapman, Alphonso A. Andrews, Wm. G. Sayles, Frederick B. Fairchild, Jerome C. Wordell, Samuel F. Edmond, Edward R. Huxley, Earl W. Avery, Will F. Sally, H. E. Clark, Henry W. Booth, John M. Randall, George Behler, Chas. E. Clarke, and Henry F. Clark.

The defendants are Robert Hunter, Jr., Robert W. Graham, Jacob C. Hare, Frederick B. Hine—the school board—and Daniel E. Fletcher, Worthy L. Stuart, Miss Mary McVean, Miss Agnes Easterby, Mrs. P. B. Bell, Miss Lucy McVean, Miss Emma Lamb, Will M. Chapman, Miss Eva L. Richert, and Miss Emma Chapman.

The bill alleges that the complainants follow occupations, respectivly, as follows: banker, real estate owner, member of the state legislature, manufacturer, merchant, wholesale and retail grocer, capitalist, real estate dealer, farmer, physician, photographer, laborer, cooper, artist, civil engineer, furniture dealer, merchant, detectiv, laborer, civil engineer, manufacturer, etc.

Next the complainant proceeds in the usual form showing the formation of the school board, the functions of the teachers, and the manner in which the schools are supported by taxation, after which the bill continues:

"Said school district No. 1, and the schools so mentioned therein, are of said township of Lowell and are an integral part of the said school system of the state of Michigan existing under and by virtue of the statutes and Constitution of said state and supported and maintained and continued in existence and conducted by taxes levied upon the property and against the residents, citizens, and property-holders of said school district, and collected from said residents, citizens, property-holders and property, real and personal, of said school district.

"That your orators were among the number so assessed, and hav paid the taxes thus assessed against them and their property, and the money so paid by your orators in the form of taxes, as aforesaid, has been used and appropriated by and through the action of said board of trustees in support of the schools aforesaid of said school district."

After declaring that the complainants are all citizens of the district and that they hav been assessed and taxed for the support of the schools, the bill says that there are Israelites and Roman Cathólics and others who hav conscientious scruples against the use and teachings of the King James version of the Bible, and who "believe, furthermore, that the scriptures ought not to be read indiscriminately, and that the reading of the same without note or comment and without being properly expounded is not only not beneficial to the children in said schools, but is likely to lead to the adoption of dangerous errors, irreligious faith, practice and worship." Also, "that there are other religious sects and denominations and bodies of citizens who either do not regard the Bible as the authoritativ source of religious truth or who regard themselvs as possessed of the only true source thereof."

The bill then shows how the laws and Constitution of the state "were framed with special reference to and for the protection of the said differences in religious beliefs as aforesaid," and that "the Constitution expressly forbids the legislature to pass any law to prevent any person from worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience, or to compel any person to attend, erect, or support any place of religious worship, or to pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for the support of any minister of the gospel or teacher of religion;" and that it also further provides, that "no money shall be appropriated or drawn from the treasury for the purpose of any religious sect or society, theological or religious seminary, nor shall property belonging to the state be appropriated for any such purpose." The provisions which make against the diminishing of civil or political rights because of religious belief, and which prohibit the use of the money of any school district for sectarian schools, are rehearsed, and the complainants allege that no teacher has any right to introduce or use in the schools any book of a sectarian or religious character, and therefore neither the board of trustees nor the teachers hav the authority "to take upon themselvs any instruction in religion by the reading of any version of the Bible as a religious exercise, or any other religious exercises whatever, without a violation of the sacred rights of your orators and of the construction and laws of Michigan, and that it is neither right nor expedient to do so."

Then follows a copy of the petition to the school board with its sixty signers, which the board laid on the table. The complainants ask that the school board and teachers "be restrained and enjoined by an injunction from holding and conducting said religious exercises, or any religious exercises, reading the King James version or any other version of the Bible, praying and singing religious hymns or permitting the same to be done in schools of said school district No. 1, of the village and township of Lowell, county of Kent and state of Michigan."

"That Anti-Prohibition Plank."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "I feel almost ashamed" that W. F. Jamieson's illiberal letter should appear in your Liberal paper, and the letter from Francis M. Buck contains too much of the so-called temperance twaddle to need any reply. The absurdity of such ideas has been exploded long ago, and they hav no effect on the apostles of freedom in thought and action. The only cure for superstition and drunkenness is education, and the absurd idea that because some drink to excess the sale of intoxicants should be prohibited, is the same as if printing should be suppressed because indecent works were printed. Ever for THE TRUTH SEEKER and liberty,

THOMAS ROGERS.

Liberalism Disgraced.

That "Seventh Demand of Liberalism" is a pure and unadulterated falsehood. The Liberals of this country do not now, nor never did, demand that "No so-called temperance (prohibition) laws shall be passed." Nor do the Liberals claim that such laws "are resultless measures of coercion against those at whom they are directed, and insulting restrictions of the personal liberty of those who do not need them." What in the world are they to those who do "need them?"

The world is full of Liberals who emphatically deny that Liberalism came drinking lager, wine, whisky, or rum. Do not say unto us, "Thou wine-bibber and glutton;" it is false, and we will not bear it. Temperance is only a mode of cleanliness and decency, and prohibition the way to reach it; and Infidelity, ten to one, is in favor of these things.

LIBERTA.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent to Prohibitionists and anti-Prohibitionists, as trial subscribers, three months for fifty cents.

Communications.

Tit for Tat.—Buddhist Lama vs. Christian Priest.

A famous oriental scholar, speaking of the gods of India, Greece, and Rome, says: "We feel, on close examination, that the characters of all pagan deities, male and female, melt into each other, and at last we hav only one or two; for it seems a well-founded opinion that the whole crowd of gods and goddesses in ancient Rome and modern Varanes (India) mean only the powers of nature, and principally those of the sun, expressed in a variety of ways and by a multitude of fanciful names" (See Asiatic Researches).

This idea will become perfectly clear to us if we will reflect how difficult it is for us to understand the real meaning of expressions in foreign languages. The following will probably explain this point. A Christian missionary said to a Buddhist priest:

"I do not understand how persons of your intelligence can worship so many gods. You hav Brahma, Vishnu, Siva, with Buddha, Christna, and a host of others, some greater and some less, male and female, as Ganesha, Gautama, Iswara, Indra, Cuvara, Varuna, Cama, Ganga, Rama, Surga, etc."

The Buddhist responded: "It is a puzzle to us how you Christians who come here pretending to teach to us the only revealed religion of the one only true God, can talk to us of God the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost. Besides, you hav an infinit number of smaller deities whom you worship. I hav heard you pray to one Jehovah, to one O Lord, to another O Lord God, to one Savior, to a Holy Mother, to one Mother of God, to Lamb of God, Agnus Dei, Pater Omnipotens, God of Abraham, Fount of Justice, Eternal Love, All Goodness. You hav inferior deities without number, as St. Paul, St. John, St. Matthew, and—"

"But," interrupted the Christian, "you do not understand us. Most of these are names of one and the same being."

"So with us—these names are nearly all of the superior deity."

"But you hav images and worship them," said the Christian.

"Of that you ought to say nothing. Certain sects among us do so more than any others. But I observe that the great majority of Christians do the same. Your Greek and Catholic missionaries hav numbers of pictures and images. Some reformed sects among us hav none," replied the Buddhist.

"But how can you believe such absurdities as that the world rests on a tortoise, and the tortoise on an elephant, and the like?" still continued the Christian.

"These fables in our sacred books are to us no more absurd than the story that a man once stopped the sun and moon, or moved the sun backward, or that other men caused lice or frogs to cover the earth, or made the dead to rise, and a thousand others in your own scriptures. You may ridicule our tortoise if you will permit us to smile at your whale that swallowed a holy man one time. Our learned men no more believe those fables than your savants credit the monstrosities of your Old and New Testaments. Ages ago our wise men repudiated those, and our priests began to reconcile the statements of our Puranas with science. You hav just begun to do what we did thousands of years ago."

And there the talk ended for the time. HOLT.

Rev. W. H. H. Murray.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: No doubt you and your readers hav seen the newspaper reports of Mr. Murray's recent lecture in your city. I am not surprised at his present standpoint in regard to science and progression. During Mr. Murray's sermons at Park Street church in Boston I noticed now and then scintillations of thought that seemed to me progressiv. And his recent lecture shows how far he has advanced in the right direction to emerge entirely from all the fogs of mysticism. His recent lecture shows the relief Mr. Murray feels in casting all blame upon theology, and giving up the Old Testament scriptures. In doing this, he thinks that "progressiv thought" and Christianity will "come together in peace." Science and the "visions" of Paul, when obfuscated in a dreamy state of trance, "will join hands." The Christianity that Mr. Murray now relies upon is founded upon falsehood. Does W. H. H. Murray believe in the New Testament account of the way Jesus was begotten? Was Mary a virgin after the child Jesus was born? Does Mr. Murray believe that Peter when entranced really saw an "opening in heaven," and "beasts and creeping things" coming out of heaven? Does he believe the writers of the New Testament were inspired by the Holy Ghost? that John actually saw the monsters he describes, with their eyes behind where their tails should be? and that God mediumized them, inspired them, without the organs of speech, to shout his praise "both day and night"—and if God has not changed those monsters, are shouting still? And it does seem strange, indeed, that a man of Mr. Murray's intelligence could entertain a hope that science will ever join hands with these vagaries. And it is harder still to account for the fact that Mr. Murray should hav made the statement that, "No scientific man has ever made an attack upon the character and teachings of Jesus, and skeptic and teacher alike hav admired him and them." Whereas scarce one "scientific man" out of the many that hav written against the Christianity of Jesus, but who has impeached the teachings of Jesus—such as teaching his disciples to hate their nearest and dearest relativs, or be sent to hell! He taught the idea of a personal devil. He showed his ignorance of psychology in assuming the power was in his "will" by which he cured disease, and he contradicted that idea when he declared, "according to your faith be it unto you." And he shows how ignorant he was of Ideology and the human mind when he told Peter that an idea he had expressed was not evolved by his own brain. No idea was ever pronounced by human lips that was not evolved by the brains that controled those lips in uttering it—a fact, this, which will never be ignored by progressiv thought, or the scientific world. Hence the Christianity of the New Testament is founded upon a fraud. Jesus was not begotten by the Holy Ghost, nor did he actually expire upon the cross. Admitting the general truthfulness of the New Testament account, it is manifest that he swooned upon the cross—or, if you say he died on the cross, then he died in utter despair, believing himself forsaken of God, as indeed he was forsaken. Hence Christianity was strangled in its birth. And the hope is vain that the time will come when progressiv thought and science will join hands with any form of mysticism, ancient or modern. L. S.

Quincy, Mass., Oct. 5, N.E. 108.

The Bible in the Schools.

THE WAR AT LOWELL, MICHIGAN—THE LIBERALS BRING THE QUESTION INTO COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Your readers are not unfamiliar with the agitation that has been going on for some time in the village of Lowell, this state, in relation to the use of the Bible in the public schools. I do not propose to review this agitation, but only to state the present fact, which is; that a number of the citizens of the place hav filed a bill in chancery citing both school officers and teachers to show cause why they should not be perpetually enjoined from reading the so-called scriptures or conducting religious exercises in the schools. The bill, I understand, represents as parties complainant some thirty or more citizens of Lowell, including the president of the national bank there, the present member of the state legislature, and our well-known friend, E. A. Chapman. You will doubtless be written to by Mr. Chapman himself, who will present the matter much more fully on its merits than I could do.

But, as secretary of the State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists, which is the only organization in the state in a position to take official notice of the case, I desire to ask from the Liberals of Michigan, and the country at large, their sympathy and moral support for our friends at Lowell in their struggle with superstition—for their cause is our cause.

The Lowell friends hav raised means sufficient to carry the case through the lower court; but it will of necessity go to the supreme court for final decision, and when the time comes they will need, and must hav, substantial aid. No appeal is now made in that behalf, but when it is made it will be in a form to giv to our friends everywhere full confidence that whatever means they may contribute will be honestly and faithfully applied.

I trust that this emergency will impress upon the Liberals of Michigan the importance of unity and harmony in their councils. The contest in the courts, to which our friends in Lowell hav been compelled to resort, is but a prelude to a contest before the people, for whichever way the case may be decided, the the question which hinges upon it will immediately become a political one. United, the Liberals of Michigan will hold the balance of power, but divided they will be powerless as they hav heretofore been.

S. B. MCCRACKEN,
Sec'y State Association S. and L.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 3, 1883.

The Salvationists.

The English Salvationists hav met with two sad misfortunes. Two female soldiers, one of whom is the daughter of Gen. Booth, were recently arrested in Switzerland, and to them was thus opened the delightful prospect of martyrdom. It is true that the Swiss could not burn the soldiers at the stake—that mode of theological argument not having survived Calvin's rule—but they could be thrust into prison, as were Paul and Silas, where they might induce a jailer to be baptized, provided they could draw upon the treasury of the army for the necessary money. But the Swiss court has cruelly acquitted the presumably fair soldiers, and has thus snatched the crown of martyrdom from them. The most that they hereafter expect in Switzerland in the line of martyrdom is an aged egg or the kitten that has become useless except for argumentativ purposes.

Meanwhile, in London Gen. Booth has become a licensed victualer. He has bought the Eagle Tavern to convert it into the headquarters of his army, and after the purchase was made found that he had bought it subject to the condition that beer and ardent spirits should be sold on the premises. In these circumstances Gen. Booth found that he must surrender his property or else sell rum, and he has accepted the latter alternativ. Any one can now visit Gen. Booth's tavern and get drunk on rum sold by the general. Not being an American politician, accustomed to straddle the tariff without loss of reputation, Gen. Booth finds that he cannot distribute total abstinence tracts with one hand and sell rum with the other without exciting doubts in the minds of his followers as to his consistency. His combination of rum and evangelical religion is something quite new, but there is no reason to believe that it will be successful. The Salvation Army, commanded by a rumselling general and deprived of the prospect of martyrdom, may become discontented, and it is quite possible that before long mutinous officers may demand that Gen. Booth shall giv some account of the hundreds of thousands of dollars which he has collected for the use of the army, and applied, among other things, to the purchase of a London tavern with a profitable connection among local drunkards.

Some Theological Conundrums for the Lord Bishop of Rochester.

From Every Saturday.

DEAR BISHOP: May I ask you a few questions about the statements made by you in St. Paul's church, on September 30th, as I wish to be still further enlightened upon your position, whether I may be able to assimilate your explanations or not?

First. You say salvation was common, because Christ died for the whole word. If so, then how shall any be lost? Did he accomplish this mission, or not? If he has made us free by paying our debt in full, why hav we to trouble ourselvs in the matter?

Second. You say that we are redeemed from the guilt and power of sin, not by a grace that shall prevent the commission of sin, but by the propitiation made for sin by Christ's death. How are we saved from the power of sin unless we are saved from committing it? If you mean saved from punishment, why did you say else than that?

Third. You say that man is a being of infinit dignity, but he cannot hav the common salvation without belief in the Holy Ghost, which enlightens the heart that has gone astray. How do you reconcile these statements? What call can dignity hav to accept the doctrin of its own depravity as an essential to salvation? Honestly, J. P. GUILD.

Are We Living in the Middle Ages.

From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

In an editoral in regard to the Freethinkers the New York Tribune lately said: "When such thinking interferes with public policy or the good of society, the state justly claims the right to limit or repress the expression of it." We would like to know by what authority the Tribune undertakes to say that the state "justly" claims such a right. It is entirely contrary to the genius of our institutions. It is contrary to what was taught us by the fathers of our country. Such sentiments practically carried out might find us some day under the heel of medical fossils who say that a woman has no business to know where her liver is located; or in the iron grasp of monopolists who believe that laborers hav no rights which capitalists are bound to respect; or chained to the burning pile by the followers of John Calvin. We stoutly assert that the state has no right to limit or to repress the expression of opinion. If it were true that the spirits of the departed hover over the living and take an interest in what is going on in this mundane sphere, we might reasonably expect that the spirit of Horace Greeley would with one stroke demolish the tower beneath which the paper he founded givs expression to such anti-democratic and anti-republican sentiments as the one quoted. In another place in the same article the Tribune says: "There is no reason why the world should be compelled to listen to all the foolish or vicious thinking that is done." Who proposes to compel the world to listen to anything? No one is compelled to listen to a speech, or to read a book or a newspaper unless he chooses to do so. It is one thing for the editor of the New York Tribune to turn aside and say he will not listen or to close the covers of a book and say that he will not read, but it is quite another thing for him, or any body of men like him, to band together and say that some American citizen just as good as himself shall not express his opinion with tongue or ink. It is needless to say that the Tribune would not hav published such nonsense as this some twenty or thirty years ago when the slave holding South was seriously talking of excluding the Tribune from the mails because of its "incendiary language," for Horace Greeley was the editor then, and he was too far-seeing to giv expression to a sentiment which logically carried out might suppress any newspaper, any book, or overthrow our boasted freedom of speech. The Tribune is out of place here; the tower and its underpinnings should be floated across the Atlantic and set up in the French republic where an imperial and monarchical education has prepared the people to read such twaddle. We hav drifted quite away from the teachings of Washington and Jefferson, but the old-time readers of the Tribune are not prepared to take in this European doctrine without a grimace.

The Church-Bell Nuisance.

From the Independent.

The Albany Law Journal takes occasion to comment on the remarks of the New York Tribune in regard to the recent agitation in this city against church-bells. The question involved was whether the ringing of church-bells may be a nuisance to the adjacent neighborhood, and may for this reason be stopped altogether by a court of justice, or put under such restrictions as the court shall think reasonable, so as to correct the nuisance element in the case. The Journal thinks that such is the fact, and that on this ground the courts may and should, in a proper case in which the fact is shown to exist, interpose their power to abate the nuisance. This is common sense, as well as good law.

The fact that churches, and not factories, create the nuisance by the ringing of their bells, makes no difference with the nuisance itself, and givs no exemption or immunity which would not equally exist if the nuisance were caused by a factory. The incidental relation of the church-bell to religious worship has nothing to do with the question. If a religious congregation were so to conduct its worship as by the tumult and noise greatly to disturb a whole neighborhood or a part of the same, there would be no doubt that courts of justice might stop such a method of worship, and require the worship to be performed in a way that does not involve this inconvenience to others. This would be no invasion of the religious rights of the worshiper, since he has no right to exercise these rights in a way that makes the exercise a nuisance to others. The ringing of bells for church purposes, or for any other purposes, stands on precisely the same ground.

The courts hav so regarded the matter, and when the question has come before them, hav so ruled. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in 1882, passed upon the question whether the ringing of a large factory bell before half-past six o'clock in the morning was a nuisance to the parties complaining thereof, and, upon evidence showing the fact, ordered the ringing at so early an hour to be discontinued, since it was to them an unseasonable and unreasonable disturbance of the hours of sleep. The court said in this case: "Noise which constitutes an annoyance to a person of ordinary sensibility to sound, such as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of life and impair the reasonable enjoyment of his habitation, is a nuisance as to him."

The Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas, in 1877, put St. Mark's church in that city under the restraint of an injunction, upon the petition of certain parties, who complained of the ringing and chiming of its bells as a nuisance. Judge Hare, in giving his opinion in this case, said: "The conclusion to which we are brought by a review of the testimony is that, from the level at which the bells of St. Mark's church are hung, and from their proximity to surrounding buildings, and it may be from other circumstances which are not accurately known or determined, they cannot be chimed or rung without causing an annoyance to the dwellers in the neighborhood, which, in the case of some of them, who stand most in need of care, amounts to a serious injury, and should consequently be abated by an injunction." An injunction was granted to this effect, reducing the chiming to two minutes on Sunday at half an hour before service, allowing the smallest bell to be rung five minutes just before service, and enjoining the ringing at seven o'clock in the morning.

The Pilgrim Congregational church in St. Louis was, in July last, enjoined from the ringing of the church chimes between the hours of nine o'clock in the evening and seven o'clock in the morning.

These cases illustrate the principle which courts adopt and apply in disposing of the church-bell nuisance. Practically church-bells are of but little if any use in modern times, especially in cities, and might as well, for a rule, be dispensed with altogether. The time of church services is fixed by established usages in each congregation; and this time is known to all the people, without the ringing of a bell to giv them notice of it. Be this, however, as it may, churches hav no right to use their bells on Sundays, or on any other day, in a way that, by reason of the sound, so disturbs the neighborhood as to make them a nuisance to the dwellers therein, or to any portion of them. This is settled law in this country and founded in good reason. The sacred associations connected with the "church-going bell" referred to by the Tribune, and the tolling of church bells at funerals furnish no reason why they should permitted to be so used as to be a nuisance to the neighborhood. That they may become such is a matter of fact; and when they are such the nuisance should be abated, just as would be done in case of any other nuisance.

A Quickened Conscience.

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The case of the conscience-stricken brother, of whose peculiar troubles mention has heretofore been made, has been brought to the attention of the Illinois annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, now in session here (Danville, Ill.). Three years ago last May the Rev. R. S. Robinson, who was the preacher in charge of the Methodist Episcopal church at Grove City, a small village in Christian County, Ill., confessed to the Rev. Ira Emerson, a superannuated preacher of this conference, who is living on a farm near Grove City, that he was guilty of criminal intimacy with a Miss Smith, a young lady of eighteen years, who was residing temporarily with the parson's family. Brother Emerson advised Brother Robinson to call a meeting of the official board and state the facts. It was done, but these pious men were shocked, and they were sad. The next thing Robinson did was to go to Cincinnnati and relate the sad story to Bishop Andrews, who appointed him to Grove City, and W. H. Webster, the presiding elder. Both of these divines were attending the general conference in that city. They advised Robinson to surrender his parchments and withdraw from the church and ministry, which he did. This broken-hearted brother returned to Grove City and immediately removed his family to Iowa. The matter was kept quiet at Grove City for the good of the church and the cause generally. The affair was about forgotten by those who had a a knowledge of it until Mr. Robinson appeared at this conference seeking the restoration of his ordination papers. This case was presented to the conference by Wm. R. Goldwin, presiding elder of the Quincy district, on the ground that this brother had joined the Methodist church in Iowa on probation, and at the end of six months was received into full connection and was licensed as a local preacher. A letter was sent from the church in Iowa commending the deportment of Brother Robinson during his residence in the Iowa town, and if his parchments were restored he would be acceptable as a preacher. But, rather than hav this matter reopened and discussed, the motion to investigate the case and act upon it at this session of conference was tabled by a vote of 70 to 45.

Your correspondent had an interview with Mr. Robinson, who said that he was suffering with a disease of the brain, which rendered him temporarily insane for several weeks, and it was during this state of mind that his crime was committed.

"Why did you tell it to the people of your church?" asked the reporter.

"Because I was crazy. Why, sir, I was perfectly wild," was the reply. "If I had followed the advice of my wife and said nothing about it I would hav been better off, but it seemed I would die if I did not tell it. Don't you see that I must hav been insane?"

Hindoo Women's Dress.

From Dio Lewis's Monthly.

The chief characteristic of the Hindo female dress is its looseness. In fact, were life more activ, such a dress might prove inconveniently loose; while in a severer climate, so much access of external air to the surface of the body would be injurious.

A single piece of linen or silk cloth from five to six yards in length, and a yard and a half wide, forms the whole dress of the woman in India. It takes her about a minute to dress herself for an ordinary occasion.

She takes hold of the cloth with both hands at the upper edges, her left hand at the corner, and holding it thus, draws it across her back, the upper edge at the waist. It will be seen that the cloth hangs down to the ankles. Now she applies the corner held in her left hand to the front of the body, a little to the right of the pit of the stomach, and holding the corner there, she draws the cloth which she holds in her right hand across in front, till it reaches her waist over her left hip, and there tucks it under the cloth which lies against the skin; then immediately turning it back with her right hand, brings the cloth across again in front, and tucks it under, over her right hip. Now, turning back again with the cloth, she carries it diagonally upward across her chest in front, and over the left shoulder. Having reached this point (if she is to see company) she carries the cloth over her head, and lets the final end hang down over her right shoulder and arm. If she is not to see company, instead of carrying the cloth over her head, she brings it around the back of her neck, and lets it hang down over her right shoulder and arm, with her keys (the symbol of her functions) attached to the corner of the cloth in front. The weight of the keys holds this portion of her dress in position.

There being no special head-dress, when she wishes to cover her head (as in the presence of men, strangers, or elders) the last end of the cloth is drawn over the head, and then allowed to fall down over the right shoulder in front.

The feet are naked, and, with the hands, form an important part of female charms. Among the poets in India, it is common to compare the clean, reflecting toes of a beauty's feet to the convex of the waxing, early moon. Delicate feet, with beautiful toes peeping from underneath the garments, hav inspired many a Hindoo songster, like diamonds dropped by some careless possessor. The bride possessed of such a treasure is the goddess Lakshmi (Prosperity) supposed to bring with her advent, happiness and joy; while no amount of gold can easily pass the unfortunate girl with feet of high arches (saddle-footed girls) which are regarded to be as inauspicious as the flat foot that overlaps the ground.

Obsolete Sunday Laws Again.

On the statute book of nearly every state in the Union—certainly of all the original thirteen states—are inscribed old laws which were passed in colonial days, under pressure of a tide of Puritan reform, which if put into execution universally to-day would create a revolution. The laws are obsolete, but remain there because legislators are afraid to remove them—afraid that an attempt to wipe them out would be met by a storm of abuse from a portion of the religious and from the entire army of fanatical bigots. It would be bad enough if such laws merely remained a dead letter to disgrace modern ideas of progress, but unfortunately every once in a while some small soul is moved to attempt to put some one section of it into execution in order to disturb a neighbor or to prove his own zeal.

New York and Ohio hav recently had occasion to look into this matter of the necessity of clearing up the statute book, and now Pennsylvania is having the same subject forced upon her consideration. Her obnoxious Sunday laws date back to 1794, and hav long ceased to be operativ even in the remote rural regions, but their peril remains. For instance, it is not very long since a Jewish resident of one of the interior towns of Pennsylvania was brought up before a magistrate upon the charge of violating the Sunday law of 1794. The Jewish gentleman pleaded that he had observed his religious duties on the previous day, his own Sabbath, and that Sunday was only a business day with him. The plea was not accepted and he was fined, but when an exception was taken with the idea of carrying the matter up to a higher court, the rural Dogberry changed his mind and remitted the penalty. The informer, however, had succeeded in his plan of making use of an obsolete statute for the purpose of personal annoyance. The same trouble and annoyance can as easily occur at any time, so long as the law remains on the statute book of the commonwealth.

In view of some recent annoyances in connection with public convenience, the Philadelphia Record is moved to speak as follows:

"There is once more a very loud demand for the repeal of the obsolescent Sunday law of 1794, even in quarters hitherto hardly suspected of entertaining Liberal opinions on the subject. It has been truly said that if the law were enforced in its utmost rigor for two weeks the demand for its repeal would be universal. While the law worked small hardship when it was passed, and was in conformity with the customs and sentiments of the people in the early history of the commonwealth, it could not be fully enforced now, in the changed condition of society, without seriously affecting the comfort and health as well as the personal security of the people. In the general contempt into which it has fallen, the people and the legislature hav become indifferent in regard to its repeal. Yet every now and then the act of 1794 is invoked by bigotry, malice, or stupidity, and citizens who did not dream of being guilty of an offense are arrested for some work of pressing necessity on Sunday, and dragged before a magistrate.

"A railroad company a few Sundays ago made some repairs in the track within the limits of this city. This was a work of necessity in order to make the track safe and protect the lives and limbs of passengers on Monday. If the track could not be repaired on Sunday the trains would be run at much risk or stopped altogether on Sunday and Monday, to the great inconvenience of the public. But while the trackmenders were at work a squad of policemen pounced upon them for violating the law of 1794, which prohibits any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity and charity only excepted. In the opinion of the police authorities this was not a work of necessity, or at least it afforded an occasion for making a show of zeal in behalf of the old Sunday law. The inconvenience to the railroad company in arresting their operativs and the possible injury to the public were matters of minor concern in comparison with the opportunity presented for an officious display of pious regard for this statute. It might be presumed that the railroad officials were the better judges of the necessity of this Sunday work, and that they would not hav performed it till Monday could it hav been avoided. But, as official guardians of the sanctity of the Sabbath, the police determined for them that this was not a work of necessity, and arrested their servants for violating the law of 1794. The question recurs whether the people will submit to occasional prosecutions of this sort, or whether the law of 1794 shall be repealed."

The law of public convenience and the rule of common sense should be inexorably applied to all Sunday legislation. It is only within the year that the statute book of New York has been cleared of Puritan legislation that has been suffered to remain there since colonial days, and even this common sense progressiv movement was opposed by certain bigots who do not believe in allowing any person to possess an opinion different from their own prejudices. This is a liberal age—made liberal by the experience of the past, and taught that narrowness of mind is as bad for the state as for the individual. This age has also made the discovery that where there is the most real religion there is also the most liberality—the most willingness to allow the consciences of others to be consulted.—Hebrew Leader.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - OCTOBER 20, 1883.

☞ We send THE TRUTH SEEKER this week to a large number of people who are not subscribers, and whose names hav been sent us during the past few weeks by mutual friends. If those who thus receive a sample copy are friends of mental freedom—are in favor of doing their own thinking on theological subjects, instead of hiring a minister or priest to do it—if they want a paper wherein can be discussed all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race—we ask them to subscribe. Liberalism needs the activ aid and encouragement of all its friends in the United States, and in no way can encouragement better be given than by sustaining the Liberal papers, foremost among which stands THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the largest Freethought journal in the world, and at the new rates subscribers can by a slight exertion make it the cheapest. We do not publish a glowing prospectus, because a record is better, and to its past THE TRUTH SEEKER points with pride. So far it has always been on the side of liberty and right, and we believe it always will be. Some who are already patrons may possibly receive an extra copy, in which case they may conclude that their name has been sent in by some one who is unaware of their being already readers. In such an event, as they will hav no use for the copy, we will take it as a favor if the extra is handed to some one who may be induced to subscribe. The attention of all is respectfully called to the generous terms of subscription given below.

"The Truth Seeker" for 1884.

When Mr. Bennett reduced the price of THE TRUTH SEEKER last year from $3 to $2.50 he did it in hopes that his friends would, in consideration thereof, make a little extra effort to obtain new subscribers, and thus make up the loss he must inevitably sustain. The rate he promised has been maintained since his death, because he promised it, although we felt fearful of the result. The gathering of new friends and supporters has not equaled Mr. Bennett's expectations. A few worked hard and sent us several new subscribers. These we wish now to gratefully thank. But the many just kept the 50 cents in their pockets and made no effort for the spread of Liberalism. The loss sustained has been very large—50 cents on nearly every subscriber—and THE TRUTH SEEKER is behind in financial affairs just about the amount relinquished. It seems that the era for cheap Liberal papers has not yet arrived. Mr. Chainey, who printed This World at $2 a year, was obliged to suspend; Man, the League paper, has, by the showing of the League officers, sunk nearly two thousand dollars the past year, having, luckily, a rich editor to go into his pockets when Man's were empty. Now THE TRUTH SEEKER has no rich supporters, and we are obliged to make it support itself. To do this the price will hav to be put back to $3 per year. It is not pleasant to hav to take a back track. We had hoped the next change in price would be to make it still lower. But we cannot do it without endangering the paper's success; we even cannot maintain the price of $2.50, and must therefore announce that the price of THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1884 will be the same as for 1882, namely, $3.

But to make it easy for our subscribers, and to enable those who are willing to do a little work to get THE TRUTH SEEKER at a reduced rate, we hav arranged the following plan:

To all who will settle all arrearages and pay for the year 1884 in advance, we will allow the price for 1884 to be the same as for 1883—$2.50.

To all who renew for one year from next January, or thereafter, before January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To all new single subscribers who send in their subscriptions previous to January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To encourage an extension of our list, and at the same time enable our subscribers to get their own papers at even less than $2.50, we make the following terms:

Single subscription, - - - - -	$3 00
One subscription two years, - - - - -	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance, - - - - -	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance, - - - - -	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance, - - - - -	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, - - - - -	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3) will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other paper to those who will take a little interest in spreading Liberalism. It is a mutual benefit arrangement. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

We hope friends will take an interest in this work and procure their own paper free by getting three new yearly subscribers. We can afford a reduction when the list increases, and this schedule is in accordance with that idea. The more subscribers the lower the subscription rate. In this way THE TRUTH SEEKER is the lowest priced Liberal paper printed, for it can be had for nothing by a little exertion.

Catholicism Against the Country.

Following the dissolution of the Catholic council two weeks ago in this city comes a pastoral letter, which is taken by the press to be a synopsis of the subjects discussed and conclusions arrived at by the prelates of that meeting. Just where the great division of the church known as Catholic stands upon the issues of the day is very important, considering its immense political power derived from an ignorant and blind following. The reading of this voluminous document has been going on for two Sundays in all of the Catholic churches. The doctrins taught therein, and rules laid down for the guidance of the faithful, thus come to them with all the solemnity which religious rituals can giv, and to the ignorant Catholic this is little short of divinity.

Were the pope's followers less ignorant, were they in any sense amenable to reason, or to be reached by argument, or were they decreasing in numbers as fast as the genuin orthodox Protestants, it would make little difference what atrocious sentiments the occupant of the Vatican put forth. But the Romish church is rapidly augumenting its power in this country, and through the abject submission of every follower can by and by control our legislature. A glance at the figures of Catholic growth is instructiv reading, and will open the eyes of not a few. In 1776 there were in this country about 25,000 Catholics all told, or one one-hundred-and-twentieth part of all the inhabitants, and now there are over 7,000,000 of them, or one-seventh of the whole population. At the end of the last century the Catholics of the city of New York held their services in an old carpenter shop, and now they hav in this city the grandest and costliest cathedral on the American continent. They hav in the Union nearly 6,000 churches and over 2,500 chapels and mission houses. In 1776 there were 23 Catholic priests, and now there are 6,402 priests, 69 bishops, and one cardinal. Toward the end of the last century the property of the Catholic institutions was a mere nothing, and now it is believed to be worth $100,000,000. In the last century the Catholic priests could not appear among the Protestants without endangering their lives, so much did these children of "one God" love each other; but since 1829, when the first council of the Catholic clergy was held, they hav had such numerous and resplendent councils as hav rarely been seen in Europe. For instance, at the Plenary Council in Baltimore, 1866, there were present 7 archbishops, 37 bishops, 1 apostolic administrator, 2 abbots, 22 general vicars, 19 priors of different monkish orders, 31 functionaries, 7 rectors of theological seminaries, and 93 other theologians. To collect $26,000 as Peter's pence, as was done in 1849, has become a trifling matter for the Catholics of the Union. The Catholic financiers nowadays deal with millions of dollars, as the notorious example of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, who swindled hundreds of his confiding dupes out of all they had, proves. The servant girls, hod-carriers, street sweepers, and other adherents of the church support in this country over 3,000 Catholic monks and over 15,000 nuns, who are zealous, able, and highly-educated emissaries. They constitute a powerful religious corps, moved by the autocratic hand of the pope. No other church in the United States can conduct missionary work on such a grand scale as the Catholic church. Furthermore, the Catholics hav 107 male colleges, with over 20,000 pupils belonging to different religious denominations, and their profits from this source amount to millions of dollars. They hav 511 female academies, where girls of all beliefs are admitted, bringing them in annually about $10,000,000. Besides money, these schools bring them converts. It is believed that of every ten non-Catholic pupils who attend the Catholic schools, seven are converted to Catholicism. Besides these schools, they hav protectories and reformatories, to whose care are consigned all the vagrant children they can get, for whose support the state pays. These children are run through the religious mill and come out strong Catholics. Thus the state is made to pay for converting secular scapegraces into religious rascals. There are in the United States 267 Catholic asylums and 119 Catholic hospitals supported by the people. The Union is dotted with Catholic convents belonging to 71 orders. The Catholic monks and nuns everywhere giv benediction with one hand and with the other draw dollars "for the great glory of God." There are over 10,000 Catholic churches, schools, and other institutions where the agents of the pope daily teach that the church's authority is from God and the government is from men, and true Catholics must obey God rather than man. In Rome, even now, the priests call America the "continent of Mary."

Considering these figures, the attitude of the Romish church toward our free institutions is a matter of supreme importance. By its compact organization, the diplomatic skill of its leaders, its facilities for obtaining information of the movements of its religious enemies—for nearly every Catholic employee is a spy upon the actions of his or her employers, reporting in the confessional to the priest—and by the sly, crafty, and jesuitical manner of quietly and effectually obtaining its ends, the Catholic church wields a power in excess even of other bodies of the same numerical strength. She is much more dangerous than the Mormon church, for, like that beastly institution, she places allegiance to God and the church above allegiance to country, and she is so many times stronger that the danger is multiplied by just that much.

The prelates recognize that Rationalism is their strongest opponent, and deplore the fact in these words:

"We are not calumniators of our age when we declare that many antichristian maxims, customs, and laws are now openly admitted and accepted; that not only special articles of the Christian faith, or particular truths of religion, are denied, but the entire body of Revelation, the sacred books of scripture, the whole supernatural system—nay, the very notion of God as a personal, self-subsistent being. All that even the untutored conscience of the natural man hitherto fully believed is contemptuously ignored or blasphemously impugned by many, who, going beyond even the wildest excesses of the pagans, endeavor, both by word and by writing, to destroy the foundation of all our hopes of heaven and of our rights and duties upon earth.

"In full accord with the deceitful promis made by the tempter in the Garden of Eden, 'You shall be as gods' if you eat of the fruit of the forbidden tree, many actually seek this complete subversion of all order. They forget their dependence upon their creator. They reject authority. They claim unlimited freedom of thought and word and deed. Making personal gratification the sole end and aim of life, they in fact constitute themselvs gods to whom alone is honor due. We do not now desire, dearly beloved brethren, to enter upon the general subject of this fearful apostasy from the truth of God by modern Infidelity; but we shall call your attention especially to some practical truths of the utmost importance to individuals and to society."

The greatest possible sin in the eyes of the church is the rejection of her authority. Men hav no right, in her opinion, to doubt her words or question her acts. The voice of the church is the voice of God, and human beings hav no liberty to refuse to hear it. Acceptance of such teachings would make an end to all progress, the essential condition of which is liberty to reject all authority in the world of thought.

Secular education is forbidden by the church, for the "supreme pontiffs" hav again and again proclaimed "that no Catholic, of whatever rank or condition he may be, can approve of any system of public instruction from which religion is totally excluded," and this has been echoed and re-echoed by pastors, councils, and bishops. The fruit of secular instruction is "impiety and Infidelity." But the Catholic school sows the good seed in the hearts of the children, and therefore the council says the church will be obliged to build its own schools and withdraw Catholic children from the public institutions.

Such building would be in spirit, though not in letter, treason to our government. As it would not constitute an overt act, and legally actionable, such attempts should be carefully watched and the effects thwarted by renewed efforts on the part of the friends of unsectarian education. Education controlled by the church is a weapon of ignorance, not of progress.

On marriage the church offers the American people a monstrous insult. Civil marriage it regards as void, and goes so far as to forbid, "under penalty of excommunication reserved to the ordinary, the faithful committed to our charge to contract marriage before ministers of any other religious denomination." Marriage, it proclaims, "is not a human institution. God himself was its author at the beginning of the world. It does not derive its efficacy from human laws or from society, for it preceded both. It is a contract, indeed; but its binding force does not depend on the mere wishes of the contracting parties. Men may make other contracts according to mutual agreement. They can sell or buy, lend or borrow, on conditions satisfactory to both parties. But the contract of marriage, having God for its author, must be made according to the conditions established by him or not made at all. If men and women wish to marry they can put no conditions, they can make no bargains with each other, contrary to the will of God. They can be united only by their free will, but, once united, they cannot by an exercise of their free will be separated." Mixed marriages are unqualifiedly condemned, because the issue of such may possibly grow up outside the Catholic fold. And if a Catholic be united by other than a priest, under a special dispensation, such person is living in adultery.

The freedom of association is also denied to Catholics, who are ordered "to regard secret societies as societies with which you cannot be connected, or which you cannot in any way abet or encourage." The logical end of the secret associations of the societies, said the bishops, is well expressed by the term Nihilism. "Chaos is the necessary result of their labors. Assassination and the foulest murder are recommended and practiced."

This is atrocious, coming from a church which has for centuries been itself a secret society of the most dangerous kind, whose midnight assassins hav prowled through every city in Europe, and frequented the courts of every capital.

The right of the church to disciplin its adherents is maintained, and the burnings and murderings of ancient times defended on the ground that the ecclesiastical laws under which the heretics suffered were in keeping with the times. That the times hav changed is acknowledged. The problem before the bishops now is "how to adapt the unchanging spirit of the law to our peculiar circumstances and to the special difficulties of our age and country."

We venture to express our opinion to the bishops that they had better not try to adapt medieval laws to modern sins. The spirit of the age is against ecclesiastical laws.

Further than this cautious and guarded expression of the church's position on government, the New York council did not venture, but at the Cincinnati council held last year the relations of the church to the state were plainly stated, and as this council reaffirmed all regular Catholic teachings, it may be concluded that the position was not in any way changed. This is:

"All power comes from God, and the church is the witness and guardian of revelations as well as the interpreter thereof. From her the world must learn the law of God, and the law of man must ever be subordinated to the law of God. It is untrue to assert that all power comes from the people. All power comes from God, by whom 'princes rule and the mighty decree justice!'"

These are the doctrins the Catholic church teaches to the citizens of a republic.

The hope of a rehabilitation of the pope's temporal power is thus strongly expressed.

"In concluding this Provincial Council we earnestly request you to offer before the throne of God your most fervent prayers for the happiness of our Holy Father, Pope Leo XIII. Despoiled by injustice of the ancient patrimony which had decended to his predecessors during a period of more than one thousand years, and which had been productiv of so many benefits to religion and civilization, the Sovereign Pontiff is now virtually a prisoner in the Vatican. Let us pray for him without ceasing, as the early Christians prayed while Peter was kept in prison. Pray that the Almighty may bless and strengthen him to accomplish the great duties of his high position and liv to witness the victory of the Holy Church over all her adversaries."

It appears the church has expectations of feeling the sword of authority once again in the hands that know so well how to keep its edge from rusting. While Protestantism has never ceased its evolution, Catholism has remained the same. The blood in her veins is stagnant. Her theology is petrified; her dogmas adamantine rocks. Giv her the power and she would persecute to-day as cruelly as she did in the days of the Reformation. Her anger at Luther and the Protestants of the sixteenth century has been transferred to the impious scientists and Infidels of the nineteenth. She would treat Spiritualists as she treated those she accused of witchcraft; the scientists would share Galileo's dungeon or be bound to Bruno's stake; the rationalists would receive the same usage as the Moors and Jews. It is her boast that she never changes; she is to-day as when she ferociously suppressed by the sword and stake every attempt at progress. She hates liberty of thought and expression, and boldly proclaims her intentions of repressing them. She is but waiting the time when her hosts shall overrun this country to put in execution her ill-concealed designs against our civil institutions. She must be watched.

The Monument Fund.

The following amounts hav been received since our last acknowledgment:

Previously acknowl'd,	$1197 96	John Sharman,	$5 00
R. H. Nelson,	1 00	W. Whittick,	1 50
John H. Wendel,	1 00	D. McIntyre,	1 00
Austin Smith,	50	R. H. Kimbrough,	1 00
W. H. Wyman,	1 00	Chas. C. Schmitt,	1 00
J. G. Dodge,	1 00	Silas Ralls,	1 00
Wm. Wilkie,	1 00	M. G. Shoemaker,	1 00
Rees John,	1 00	H. J. Munson,	25
S. R. Sepherd,	1 00	G. Hoberg,	50
J. F. Green,	1 00
J. Dean,	1 00	Total,	$1219 71

A Christian Outrage in Connecticut.

Earnest work for the repeal of Sunday laws in Connecticut is needed. Last Sunday about twenty persons, some of them ladies, were arrested for violating an old blue law, dating back to 1702, which reads as follows:

"Every person who shall travel or do any secular business or labor, except works of necessity or mercy, or keep open any shop, warehouse, or manufacturing or mechanical establishment, or expose any property for sale, or engage in any sport or recreation on Sunday, between sunrise and sunset, shall be fined not more than $4 nor less than $1; but, haywards may perform all their official duties on said day."

On the borders of Foxon, a village about four miles from New Haven, stand a number of walnut-trees. On Sunday the ground under them was covered with fallen nuts, and many of the people out riding stopped to gather them. All these persons were arrested by a couple of pious old farmers acting under authority from a constable and a grand juror. They were taken to one of the officious farmers' barnyard, and there impounded all day long. Six of the twenty were women, one of whom had her baby, less than a year old, with her. A drizzling rain was falling most of the day, and there was no shelter from it provided. In the evening they were taken before a local justice and held in $25 bonds. Such as could not offer bonds were locked up all night. Monday morning the same justice opened court to try the cases. The pious deputy-constables who made the arrests testified to detecting the parties riding along the public highway on the Sabbath, and this was all the evidence required. None of the prisoners could declare that they had ridden out as "an act of necessity or mercy." Consequently all were held to be guilty. Lawyer Charles Fowler, the town prosecuting agent, made a speech regarding the heinous crime against the public peace which the accused persons had committed, and Justice Tuttle won the applause of the rural audience by imposing a fine of $3 with $2.94 costs on each offender.

Some of the victims of Christian zeal contracted severe colds by their long exposure to the rain in an open barnyard, and will long remember this outrage upon their personal liberty. If the church imagins it can secure converts by this kind of work it will find out its mistake. Such acts show plainer than anything else could the absolute necessity for the removal of all Sabbatarian legislation from the statute books of the several states. This should be the aim of all Freethinkers, and their efforts should be directed strongly to its accomplishment. The church and state must be separated or our liberties are not safe.

To the People of Michigan.

The earnest attention of the Liberals in Michigan is called to the communications of E. A. Chapman and S. B. McCracken, in this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, giving the particulars of the fight the Liberals of Lowell are having with the church power. It is a righteous and just cause they are engaged in, and one that will enlist the sympathies of thousands of people all over the country. No sect or general religionists hav the moral or legal right in this country to force their Bible into the schools to be worshiped or read from, and the attempt of the Christians of Lowell should be thwarted.

Mr. Chapman asks, at present, only moral aid. He and his friends hav raised enough sinews of war for the preliminary skirmish and the first battle; but if the fight lengthens out into a regular campaign, with long sieges necessary, they must hav help of a practical character. Let the people of Michigan, who hav a great many strong Liberal and Spiritual societies, band together for this fight, and not cease their efforts till they come victorious out of the contest. If alone they cannot win, we feel sure they will hav abundant aid from all over the country.

Retrograding New Hampshire.

Three or four years ago the decent and fair-minded people of New Hampshire introduced a bill into their legislature taxing all church property in excess of the value of ten thousand dollars. The advocates of the bill thought that as Christ did not hav even a ten thousand dollar church, his present followers ought to be willing to bear their share of the public burden of protecting their property exceeding that sum in value. The bill was passed, but was never practically operativ; for although the tax assessors did their duty, the select men of the towns, and aldermen and councillors of the cities, almost invariably rebated the taxes, and thus God's property was exempt.

The dishonesty of this proceeding had no perceptible effect upon the consciences of the various preachers and flocks. They ate, drank, slept, and prayed as heartily and well as though they were not cheating the government out of thousands of dollars per year.

But the legislature just adjourned has relieved them of the disgrace of being hypocrits by passing the following act:

"Section 1. Houses of public worship shall be exempt from taxation."

It appears that the enemies of the people must be watched with more care than the New Hampshire people exercised. They hav studied the arts of the Jesuits with advantage to themselvs and disadvantage to their neighbor.

The legistature also passed an act offering a bounty for wookchucks killed, but "provided that no bounty shall be paid for woodchucks killed on Sunday." It has been suggested that this clause is a direct premium on facile lying, but in the eyes of a New Hampshire pietist lying and cheating the tax assessor are less to be deplored than "breaking the Sabbath" or paying taxes on religious property.

WE clip the ensuing from last Sunday's Sun:

"'When your term expires it is to be hoped you will lead a different life,' Judge Elcock of Philadelphia said, after he had sentenced James Robinson to three years in the Eastern penitentiary. Robinson, who had been convicted of conspiring to make off with three cases of linen goods from a dray, retorted after the sentence: 'I worked three years in your state prison, making shoes, and I know as much about shoemaking as I do about watches. They taught me in your prison to be dishonest. My principal work was to paste leather and pasteboard together to make a thick sole to impose on the public. The man who had the contract was a Christian, a member of a church, and at the time I called his attention to the pasteboard business he was foreman of the Grand Jury.'"

It is a question whether the church and the jury room do not sometimes contain as dishonest men as those they pass judgment upon.

The Truth About It.

Our attention was called in August, by the following letter, to the subjoined tract:

MULBERRY, PA., August 15, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose a Christian tract, "What Becomes of Infidel Leaders?" by Pastor C. J. Whitmore. Will you please read it, and tell me if he writes the truth, and who those prominent Infidel leaders were? Respectfully,

L. W. LIGHTY.

Following is the tract, printed by the "Believers' Book and Tract Repository" of Washington, D. C., and being circulated, it seems, quite viciously:

During the thirty years of my life as a Christian worker and minister in London, I hav come into contact with twenty of the leading lecturers and writers on the side of unbelief. Nearly all of them hav been lecturers in London; some of them writers in the National Reformer, and other Infidel papers; some of them secretaries of branch societies. Of these twenty, only four now remain. Three of these hav lately been engaged in speaking and writing accusations against each other, and the fourth holds a very doubtful position between Christianity and unbelief.

Leaving these four, there are sixteen to account for. What has become of these sixteen Infidel leaders in London during the past thirty years? They hav all left their Infidelity, hav turned to Christianity, and openly professed their belief in its facts and teachings! I subjoin initials, and an outline sketch of each of these once Infidel leaders in London:

1. T. C.—This most talented leader of Infidelity was well known as a lecturer at the Hall of Science. But he became converted, and is now far more widely known as a lecturer on Christian evidences.

2. J. B., once a Wesleyan preacher, then a Deist, and for years one of the secular lecturers at the Hall of Science. He was Mr. Bradlaugh's co-editor of the National Reformer. He was convinced of the error of his way, returned to the faith he had left, and died believing in Jesus.

3. C. S.—This man was one of the chief lecturers at the Hall of Science, and the most shocking blasphemer I hav ever known. He went to Australia, professed Christianity, became editor of a Wesleyan Methodist magazine, and was editor when he died.

4. J. H. G. came to London to lecture at the Hall of Science, and returned to the Midlands when he was brought to see Jesus as his savior under Mr. Conder's ministry. He afterward became a Baptist minister near Manchester.

5. J. B. B. was a lecturer at the Hall of Science and editor of a free-thinking paper. He became disgusted with the arcana of Secularism, left the body, and publicly made known his recantation at Taylor's Repository Hall. He became also a minister of the gospel.

6. G. S., one of the talented of the Infidel lecturers at the Hall of Science, etc. He was led to examin and so to abandon Secularism, and now lectures on Christian evidences, and is editor of a magazine published in defense of the faith of Jesus Christ.

7. H. F. was a schoolmaster, writer in the National Reformer, and lecturer. He also was disgusted with unveiled Secularism, left it, and became a Christian. He went down into the depths of misery and want, rather than accept help that would hav been gladly given, in order that Secularists should not be able to charge him with impure motivs in professing Christianity.

8. D. K. F. was the most talented and industrious writer employed on the National Reformer, writing under the signature of "Free Lance." He was private secretary to the founder of Secularism. But gospel truth reached him, and he read his recantation of Secular principles in Whitefield Presbyterian church, Drury lane. He lived a quiet, Christian life, and was a member of St. Luke's, Chelsea, when he died.

9. E. E. was superintendent of the Hall of Science Sunday-school for teaching Atheism to children, and lecturer in North London. He engaged in debate with some Christian advocates, saw his errors, and left Secularism. He became one of Mr. Spurgeon's colporters, and was working at the Sunday-school Union when he died.

10. G. B. was lecturer at the Hall of Science, and sent thence to Northampton, where he constantly opposed Christian advocates. He was led into the light of Christian truth in the place where he had lectured against and opposed it, and now preaches the gospel he once despised and rejected.

11. E. C. was secretary of the South London Secular Society, and lecturer in South London. He was brought to know truth from error, and became an earnest propagator of Christianity.

12. F. M. E. was one of the leaders and lecturers among the Infidels of North London. He was converted at one of the theater special services, and became an advocate of Christianity under the auspices of the vicar of St. James's, Pentonville.

13. J. S. was one of the earlier lecturers and leaders also in North London. Like the foregoing he also was converted at the theater special services. He became a member of the Open-Air Mission, and, while working for daily bread, he freely preached the gospel he once despised, at every opportunity.

14. W. O. B. was a lecturer at the Hall of Science. He afterward recanted his Infidelity and became one of the advocates of the Christian Evidence Society.

15. J. H. was one of the most determined opponents of Christianity in North London, lecturing against it constantly under the arches of the Midland railway. At one time he was in great distress, and a Christian friend sought him out, comforted and helped him. This practical Christianity commenced his conversion. He left London, became a hearty, joyful Christian, and wrote to his former friends bearing earnest testimony to gospel truth.

16. J. K. was not known as a lecturer, but thoroughly well known as an opponent of the gospel and leader among Secularists. He also has recanted his Infidelity, and I hav seldom seen a happier face than his when recently he met me in the house of God, glorying in Christ. I had known him as an Infidel leader for thirty years.

What, then, has become of these lecturers at the Hall of Science, these writers of the National Reformer, these Infidel leaders of past years? Thank God! they hav turned to Christianity and salvation. Will not those who followed them into evil and danger, follow them into cleansing, safety, and eternal life by Jesus Christ?

As the scene of all this apostasy is laid in England, and as we are personally unacquainted with the circumstances, we waited for the arrival of Mr. Watts to learn further particulars. But a few weeks ago Dr. Edward Aveling, interim editor of the London Freethinker (the rightful editor, G. W. Foote, being in prison for blasphemy), began corresponding with the Rev. Mr. Whitmore upon the statements made in this same tract, and we can now use his reply, which is thorough.

Some of the correspondence between Dr. Aveling and Mr. Whitmore is very spicy. The reverend lost his temper, and consequently made himself appear ridiculous, while the editor maintained an enviable equanimity all through. Dr. Aveling describes the leaflet as "an attempt to obtain credit for Christianity under false pretenses." Although the National Reformer had exposed the deceptions of the dissenting minister, he paid no attention to it, and went about circulating his stories as before, and his cisatlantic Christian workers appear to hav no more honesty.

Mr. Whitmore resides in Kentish Town, and July last Dr. Aveling lectured there. He advertised his intention to notice the tract, and courteously sent a ticket to its clerical author, who declined to attend, in this sneering manner:

88 CAVERSHAM ROAD, N. W., June 25, 1883.

Sir: I received your note by last post on Saturday night, proposing that I should leave my congregation on the following evening to listen to an attack you intended to make on some statements of mine in Milton Hall But of course you never expected me to comply with such a very modest and sensible proposal. The only statements I hav made in Milton Hall concerned my tract on "What Becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" I inclose a copy, and am ready to defend it in public discussion against any attack you may make when I can reply. If you allude to some other statements, made during years of writing, lecturing, and discussion, I must ask you for particulars. Yours truly, C. J. WHITMORE.

To which Dr. Aveling retorted:

13 NEWMAN STREET, OXFORD STREET, W.

Sir: Your discourteous letter, in reply to one from me that was, at least, not wanting in courtesy, has reached me. I told you that I was about to attack your utterances, as I make a point of doing this whenever I hav to attack. I regret that Christian assailants do not adopt a plan that is, as you say, "modest and sensible."

No one knows better than yourself that the people whose names you mention are, in scarcely any cases, representativ men; that because men hav written in the National Reformer they are not necessarily Atheists; that Mr. Bradlaugh in the National Reformer has pointed out how misleading are your statements, and that for one Atheist turned Christian that you can produce or invent, we can show a hundred Christians turned Atheists. Yours faithfully, EDWARD B. AVELING.

Mr. Whitmore replied in a long letter, winding up, "Are you prepared to attack any statements of mine in open public discussion?" Close on the heels of this Mr. Whitmore wrote to a clergyman of the Established church concerning his lying leaflet and Dr. Aveling:

I hav delivered the lecture twice in London, once at Woolwich; but the only attempt that was made was to blacken the character of the converts. Dr. Aveling attacked the paper in my absence, at one of his lectures here. I hav challenged him to make his attacks in open public discussion where I can reply to him, but he is afraid. I hav twice written to him personally, but he has crept out of it in each of his three letters in reply. It is an utter falsehood for anyone to say or write that I hav ever at any time or place declined to state the names of the Infidel leaders. I hav supplied them to everyone, without exception, who has ever applied to me for them. That I hav refused to reply to the scandalous blackguardism of the National Reformer is true, simply because I will not play Mr. Bradlaugh's game by writing in his filthy print. No man that had one grain of respect for himself would ever write a line for it. It seems to me that contempt is the only weapon left for a decent man to use. For many years I hav been the subject of persistent attack, simply because I opposed their wickedness; and I hav repaid the attacks by feeding and helping all the broken-down Secularists who hav come to me when their own body left them to starve.

This scurrilous epistle brought the following indignant reply from Dr. Aveling, which is so good that we copy the whole:

13 NEWMAN STREET, W., Aug. 24, 1883.

Sir: At greater leisure than I had when I acknowledged the receipt of your last letter, I now write. I regret to find your second letter as wanting in good manners as your first. I sent to you notice of my lecture, as I was going to attack your words; and I thought that even if you were unable to be present, some representativ of yours might come. I introduced the name of Mr. Bradlaugh, to whom you refer with the coarseness of manner that seems, unhappily, habitual with you, because that gentleman, in an article published in the National Reformer of July 2, 1882, exposed in part your fraud. You read my letters very carelessly. The whole of the sixteen persons to whom you refer by initials may hav existed, and yet you and kindred Christians may "invent" others. The last part of my last sentence in my last letter but one is of general application; the first part is of special application.

I intend to show that your statements are misleading in a written debate with you, if I can induce you to debate. You speak of "self-styled" Christians only as turning Atheists, and deny that they were real Christians. Even you must see that this sort of argument cuts both ways. May I not with equal justice say that "no Atheist ever yet turned Christian? But if you allude to some self-styled Atheist leaders who hav done so, and you are proud of them," then part of your pamphlet may hav meaning.

I am prepared to discuss with you the question, "What becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" in the columns of the Freethinker. I shall endeavor to show (1) that your pamphlet is misleading; (2) that you hav really begged the question, as you hav not mentioned the true Infidel leaders of this age or of past times. You must clearly understand that I shall not only deal with the initials given in your tract, but I shall carry you much further afield. The question you ask is a large one. What becomes of the Infidel leaders? I shall take you and our readers, if we hav any, over the lives of all the Infidel leaders of our time, and shall show them, whether I succeed with you or not, that you hav carefully avoided referring to the real leaders in secular thought, and that your pamphlet cannot be taken as in any sense a truthful and complete reply to the momentous inquiry that heads it.

In a letter, that with your permission has been sent on to me, you speak of the National Reformer's "scandalous blackguardism," and call that paper a "filthy print." I will admit that you are, probably, better versed in scandalous blackguardism than I, and that your professional acquaintance with the Bible givs you the right to recognize filth. None the less I challenge you to quote from the National Reformer a single passage that is filthy, and I refer you to the following chapters in the Bible as examples of the disgusting nature of the book that you place in the hands of little children. Genesis xix, 30–36 (the story of Lot and his daughters); Genesis xix, 4–11 (the story of the men of Sodom); Genesis xxxviii, 9 (the story of Onan); Leviticus v, 3; xv, 16–18, and indeed the whole of that fifteenth chapter; 2 Samuel xiii, 10–14, and the Song of Solomon, passim. As long, sir, as you and wicked men like you are idolizing a book containing such passages as these that I hav picked at random out of the large number of filthy passages in the Bible, so long had you not better cease, for very shame, to speak of indecency in men's writings? No man has written anything to approach the horrible filthiness your God, as you say, has vomited forth in his book, the Bible.

In this same letter you write, "For many years I hav been the subject of persistent attack, simply because I exposed their wickedness; and I hav repaid the attacks by feeding and helping all the broken-down Secularists who hav come to me whom their own body left to starve." Again I challenge you to substantiate this statement.

Candidly, I had no desire to meet one of such conspicuous ill-breeding and so unscrupulous a nature as you appear to be. There is an old proverb as to the impossibility of touching pitch—you know the rest. But when I find you posing as an authority upon the fates of Secular leaders, attacking myself and slandering a newspaper and a party with which I am connected, I put on one side personal feelings and challenge you (1) to a written discussion upon "What Becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" (2) to quote from the National Reformer passages as filthy as those to which I hav referred in the Bible; (3) to substantiate your statement as to succoring Secularists left to starve by their own body.

Yours faithfully, EDWARD B. AVELING.

The reverend gentleman replied as follows:

88 CAVERSHAM ROAD, N. W., Aug. 27, 1883.

Sir: As you are clearly afraid to make good your bragging threat of "attacking my statements" on a public platform, I beg to decline any further correspondence. And as to writing in the Freethinker, my opinion is that no decent man would touch the "obscene" thing with a pair of tongs.

Yours truly, C. J. WHITMORE.

It will be noticed that Mr. Whitmore challenged Dr. Aveling to a public debate on the subject of his leaflet, but that when the challenge was accepted and cold type was named as the umpire, where each man must stand by what he wrote, the reverend backed down and with characteristic Christian courtesy and truthfulness alleged as a reason that the journal named, the Freethinker, was obscene. Had Mr. Whitmore been actuated by the zeal supposed to be in every true Christian's breast he would hav jumped at the chance to put his Christian teachings before so many Secularists as the Freethinker reaches; for its circulation has increased enormously since its editor was put in a Christian dungeon.

As Dr. Aveling could not induce Mr. Whitmore to meet him, he proceeded in his issue of Sept. 30th, to expose the so-called recantations. He says:

The fraudulent character of the Rev. C. J. Whitmore's leaflet, "What Becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" will now be shown. The fraud is twofold The initials that he givs are those of men who, in the majority of cases, never were leaders in the Atheistic movement at all. Of the real leaders he says nothing.

I take his instances seriatim. 1. T. C. (Thomas Cooper).—A fair case—I mean for Mr. Whitmore, not for Mr. Cooper. The latter was once an unbeliever in Christianity. He now poses as a believer. Here, perhaps more fitly than anywhere else, I may remind my readers that the calling of a converted Infidel is a very lucrativ one. If the editor of this paper, or if the present writer, were to become a Christian, a fortune could be made by either of them. It is a matter for wonder that a larger number of unprincipled men hav not acted the parts first of Atheistic lecturer and then of Christian penitent. There's money in it. The capacity of Mr. Cooper and, perhaps, his honesty, may be estimated by the fact that he, a man with no scientific qualifications whatever, sees fit to attack the great teachings of Charles Darwin with buffoonery.

2. J. B. (Joseph Barker).—Was co-editor of the National Reformer with Charles Bradlaugh. He left the paper because he was dismissed by the shareholders.

3. C. S. (Charles Southwell).—This man whilst in Australia edited a Wesleyan paper for the livelihood that Christian persecution tried to take from him. He called this "spoiling the Egyptians." The act was not an honest one. Southwell, however, died a Freethinker. I hav recently met with one who was with him to the end and who declares in the most positiv fashion that his death was that of an Atheist.

4. J. H. G. (J. H. Gordon).—A lecturer at Leeds, who recanted.

5. J. B. B. (J. B. Babbington).—A Secularist, but quite obscure. Neither a lecturer nor a writer. In no sense a leader.

6. G. S. (G. Sexton).—Was for a time a Secular lecturer, and is now a Christian. Vide notes on 1. His past career has been, however, so doubtful that, though he earns a competence that is the only thing modest about him, he has not amassed the wealth that he had calculated as the price of his treachery. He is an impostor, who tries to obtain credit under false pretenses. He signs himself "M. A.," and calls himself "Dr." Sexton. He has no claim to either title. No university is disgraced by the presence of his name on its books.

7. H. F. (Henry Fulton).—As 4 and 5.

8. D. K. F. (D. K. Fraser).—A political writer in the National Reformer and possibly Mr. Holyoake's secretary; but not an Infidel. One of the many writers on politics and other subjects in the National Reformer who are not Atheists. Kindred cases are those of Dr. Carter-Blake and the Rev. Stewart Headlam.

9. E. E. (E. Earwaker).—Never wrote for the National Reformer. Never lectured at the Hall of Science. There never has been a Sunday-school at the Hall of Science for teaching Atheism to children. There was one for teaching reading, writing, arithmetic.

10. G. B. (George Bishop).—Professed to be a Freethinker, but was never a leader. We should be equally justified in calling him a Christian leader to-day because he, followiug the example of Sexton, dubs himself reverend.

11. R. C. (R. Couch).—Secretary of a branch of the National Secularist Society, but not a leader. Every secretary of the eighty branches of the Atheistic society would smile at the idea of being styled an Infidel leader. Couch was dismissed for dishonesty and naturally turned to Christianity as a more congenial sphere.

12. F. M. E. (F. M. Ennis). 13. J. S. (J. Start.—As 4 and 5.

14. W. B. (W. Bendall).—Leaseholder of the Hall of Science, but no more an Infidel leader than the Jews from whom the lease is now held. The actual owners of the lands are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. We shall hav Mr. Whitmore calling them Infidel leaders anon.

15. J. H. (J.Horn).—Never a lecturer; never a writer in the National Reformer.

16. J. K. (J. King).—As 4 and 5.

Four cases of the sixteen (1, 2, 4, 6) may by a very generous reading of facts be granted to Mr. Whitmore. One (3) is that of a known man who never was a Christian. Two (8, 14) never were Atheists. Five (5, 9, 10, 11, 15) were not leaders, but only obscure members of the rank and file, and may now be amongst the Christians, rank and vile. Four (7, 12, 13, 16) are persons unknown to any of our Secular leaders or organizations.

It is impossible to acquit Mr. Whitmore of the most flagrant dishonesty.

On the other hand, the real leaders in Freethought he does not mention. I will giv him a few names. John Watts, Austin Holyoake, James Watson, Ellen B. Watson, John Stuart Mill, Percy Shelley, Charles Darwin, Charles Bradlaugh, Annie Besant, Harriet Law, Charles Watts, Stewart Ross, C. C. Cattel, G. J. Holyoake, A. B. Moss, George Standring, Thomas Huxley, Algernon C. Swinburne, G. W. Foote. These are some of the names that leap to the lips of men who speak of Freethought leaders. If we compare them with those that figure in the list of Mr. Whitmore, can we hesitate to proclaim him to the world as false?

I answer his question, "What Becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" by pointing to the list of names just given. What becomes of them? Some are dead, and one of these lies in Westminster Abbey. Of the living you will find them chosen as members of Parliament or of school boards, presidents of the Royal Society, editors of papers and magazines, authors of books and poems, on lecture platforms, at the head of science classes, passing through universities, and in prison for conscience' sake. But diverse as are their positions their hearts are as one in their longing for the truth to be known to men, and for the wider reign of freedom.

EDWARD B. AVELING.

If the managers of the "Believers' Book and Tract Repository" in Washington were only as desirous of telling the truth as they appear to be of circulating "Infidel recantations," they would print Dr. Aveling's reply along with their tract, or cease circulating the latter. Their failure to do one or the other is an evidence of dishonesty in methods and purposes.

Letters from Friends.

HYDE PARK, PA, Oct. 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5—$4 to be applied on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and $1 for the monument to be erected in commemoration of the late D. M. Bennett, my friend and brother.

Yours fraternally, J. F. GREEN.

MOUNT KISCO, Oct. 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1 for Monument Fund in honor of our noble D. M. Bennett. Wishing you all success in your efforts to make THE TRUTH SEEKER the paper for Liberals t roughout the country, I remain, Yours truly, CHAS. C. SCHMITT.

BELLEVUE, IDAHO, Sept. 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5—$1 for the Monument Fund and the balance for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Thanks for sending it after my subscription had expired. I like the paper more and more, and hope it may liv many years to battle with superstition. I will send you the names of several who are liberal minded. Some of them may want to take the paper.

Yours in friendship, love, and truth,

SILAS RALLS.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN, Oct. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Here is my dollar for the monument to the memory of an almighty good. though perhaps not perfect, man—D. M. Bennett. He is the brightest star in my constellation of heroes, saints, and martyrs. Bennett never struck a foul blow. I honor him; and I could sit up nights to execrate the infamous characters of the men who hastened his death: Abbot, Comstock, Bundy, and their confreres.

Respectfully, S R. SHEPHERD.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed fifty cents from a trial subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hope to hav more names soon.

We hav lately had a visit from Mr. Leland and Mr. Wakeman, which was very much appreciated by the Liberals that attended their meetings. There was not so large an attendance as we might hav had if proper advertising had been made. We started a League that evening with twenty-eight names, of which I hope to giv good report in the future.

C. L. WATSON.

WELLAND, ONT., Sept. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I think I may congratulate you on your success in the management of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Its tone is of a scientific and common sense character. Some of your contributors are writers for the common people, and others are better suited to the more highly educated and more enlightened part of the community; but it is all good.

Wishing you success, and willing to help in the Liberal cause what I can, I am,

Yours very respectfully, JOHN RAY.

FLORA, IND., Oct. 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1.25, which sum place to my account on THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been taking your paper about a year; like it well; think it the best Liberal paper published. I would like to see John Peck's "Infidel Philosophy" in book form. I think it would be a good one to hand around.

We hav a population of about five hundred, with five churches; yet the devil is getting in his work. Alic Keys, a young Methodist, who had his sins forgiven last winter at a revival, is in the county jail, awaiting trial for murder in the first degree; while his father, who is a shouting Methodist and leader of prayer-meetings and Sabbath-school, is awaiting trial for manslaughter. Their victim was a Presbyterian whom they are charged with having murdered on the holy Sabbath. JOHN BARNARD.

PACIFIC, Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2 50 for the renewal of my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER I find it a hard task to do without it. It contains too much which is after my own heart and thought. It has so much good sense and pure motiv that it would not be just to throw it aside on account of a few Wintry blasts in wintry seasons. Motiv, consciousness, is alone what rules the world, and survives the object of that and all the seasons, and therefore minds them not. Excuse my way of talking, of expressing mv ideas; I can understand better than I can write. The reason why I stopped taking the paper was because of the harsh language used by some, and too much obtuse and transcendental matter, which would not help the cause for which Liberals are fighting, and but few can understand. I can well see the points made by Andrews, Wakeman, and Putnam, but of what use are they in overcoming the wrongs and causes which oppress us? Yours truly,

AUGUST H. KRUGER.

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $16 to pay for trial subscribers and books.

This list is a portion of the harvest reaped from the good seed scattered by those little missionaries—THE TRUTH SEEKER tracts—which are opening the way for the car of progress of this nineteenth century. THE TRUTH SEEKER is destined to open the eyes of creed-bound people enslaved by the teachings of a hypocritic priesthood. It will crack the shell of superstition and loose the chains of orthodoxy, and raise the human family to a higher plane of thought and moral principle; spread the light, truth, so that all may see the good, from the least unto the greatest. If each of your subscribers would circulate a few of those little missionaries, you would soon see good results. I think the most of those subscribers will renew for the next volume I ask no gold for what I may do in way of subscriptions. I feel an interest in the good work and will do whatever I can to help it on. R. BUTTERFIELD.

TO THE CHRISTIAN WHO INTRUDED.

OREANA, ILL., Oct. 2, 283.

MR. EDITOR: In defense of "total depravity" "J. N. B." says in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 28th: "I hold that a parent who, being aware of his evil bequeathments, . . . warns his child against the indulgence of certain natural proclivities," etc., "does his bounden duty." Certainly. So do I hold. So does Mr. Remsburg hold; but the dogma of total depravity holds that it is not merely certain natural proclivities which a "loving parent" should warn his child against the indulgence of, but that the parent warn the child against the indulgence of any and all "natural proclivities." Suppose I hav a son who by his environment has an acquired proclivity, or, by the law of heredity, has a natural proclivity for the use of strong drink, or riotous conduct for licentiousness, or for any other indulgence that tends to destroy the manliness of human character. It is my "bounden duty" to indicate to this boy the evils of following these proclivities, to warn him of the results of their indulgence, to restrain him in their exercise. "J. N. B." believes this; Mr. Remsburg believes this; I believe this, and I will pay "J. N. B." for his trouble if he will find me one solitary Freethinker in America or the world who does not believe it.

"J. N. B." has a son who, from some causes, has a proclivity for conducting himself righteously, paying his honest debts, guarding with scrupulous care the trusts confided to his keeping, claiming no privileges himself which he is not willing to grant others, for acquiring any or all the beatitudes that go to make a perfect human character.

Now it is "J. N. B.'s" bounden duty according to the dogma in question, to indicate to this boy the evils of following these proclivities to warn him against their indulgence; for, being the outcrop of the individul nature before it has been at the feet of Jesus to learn of him, they are worldly—are not of Christ.

Now just here I want to inform "J. N. B." that my humble opinion is, Freethinkers, and those of the Rochester Convention certainly, understand fully the meaning of those two much-mooted words, "total depravity," in the Christology of the church militant.

I wish, too, to point "J. N. B." to the patent fact that his understanding of the Christian's conception of this dogma and its effects is at fault. The New Testament, however ambiguous it may be as to side issues, such as baptism, communion, etc., is perfectly clear and uniform in its enunciation and elaboration of the innate cussedness of human nature, and the total inability of that nature to improve or elevate itself. No pleasure is allowed but the pleasure of communing with Christ. Man is "conceived in sin," and to be Christian he must be an enemy of the very authors of his being; and, too, the enmity must be the enmity of hatred. His natural proclivities, be they elevating or degrading, are "of this world"—are "sinful." At all times, at every point, in sunshine and in shade, in the fulness of joy and in the hunger of grief, in the chord of good actions and in the discord of hateful words, he is to fight against self and the spirit of this world. No act is to be performed, no word spoken, no thought conceived, save such as bear the trademark, "Jesus."

If you want authority in evidence of what the Christian's conception of this much mooted doctrin is, read the opinions of prominent Christian writers from Tradux animæ, tradux peccati of Tertullian, 200 A.D., down through Augustine, Calvin, Luther, Whitfield, the Augsburg Confession, the Thirty-Nine Articles. Read the writings of Jonathan Edwards and the writings of his friends Bellamy and Wigglesworth. "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God" and the "Day of Doom" will be especially instructiv on the subject in hand. Read "Riches of Divine Love," by Twiss, and "Original Sin," by Burgess. Read the sermons of more modern divines—Dr. Emmons, Nehemiah Adams, Gardner Spring, Spurgeon, or go hear the divinely divine, Talmage.

"J. N. B.'s" defense of vicarious atonement contains decidedly more pith than point. Fair criticism will find the pith of Mr. Remsburg's illustration in the sacrifice of the innocent for the guilty, instead of the few for the good of the many; and right here I would say that the majority of mankind do not believe in the sacrifice of the few for the good of the many, nor in sacrifice at all, of the kind Mr. Remsburg had in consideration.

The quintessence of "J. N. B.'s" conundrums about forgivness of sin, as I take it, is that figurativ prison. I, of course, would hav been unable to guess it but for the statement that "an understanding (!) and recognition of the law form the superstructure underlying the conditions of his release," etc. This makes it so plain that a preacher might guess it, and if Freethinkers with their "boasted" intelligence can't they ought not be forgiven.

"J. N. B." would like to hav pointed out to him the "difference between these two laws" which constitutes the one a "silly belief."

I must confess that it is too artistic a job for me. I giv it up. It looks to me that the man in the Albany and the one in the "figurativ" prison are in the same boat. They both earn—pay cash down, one hundred cents on the dollar, for—their release, and there is no forgivness about it; and, further, "J. N. B." knows, if he has read so much even as an almanac with the Christian calendar in it, that the Christian's position on the doctrin of forgivness is not as he presents it.

Hanging hell on the "primordial essentiality of law" may be a good way to dispose of hell, and as I hav already occupied more space than the case demands, I will just leave her hang.

In conclusión, I would suggest to friend "J. N. B." that a short investigation of law will convince him that "belief in the law," or an "understanding and recognition" of the law by the subject, is not an essentiality of law, executiv. A belief or a disbelief in the laws of man or of God, an understanding of them, or a want of this understanding, furnishes no grounds for an exercise of the executiv function of those laws.

I disbelieve in the law that establishes the grand jury and grants it inquisitorial power. Refusing to appear before it in answer to its summons, I am punished—not for my belief or disbelief in the law, but because of my act of refusal.

You walk off a precipice three hundred feet in hight, and are reduced to pulp. The law of terrestrial gravitation does not withhold its executiv function to inquire, "Do you believe you fell sixteen feet the first second?" "Do you believe that the distance you hav fallen divided by sixteen equals the time it took you to get here?" "Do you believe that all bodies fall with the same velocity, or, in other words, that a bottle of St. Jacob's oil would hav come to the judge's stand neck and neck with you?" No, my friend, you step off, and, whether you believe or not, understand or not, the little fact that reaction is equal to action, makes your "primordial essentiality" non est.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is certainly occupying the shelf of superlativ excellence in the library of periodicals in this country. It is clear, comprehensiv, and thorough, and fits the mind of the child, the mediocre, and the scholar. I would like to "shake" with John Peck, T. B. W., and in fact I think it would increase my spiritual strength to get a grab at any of the contributors. I believe J. R. P.'s "Problem of the Atoms," in No. 38, will giv his opponents some vigorous exercise. The editorials!—I can't do them justice, so I will not attempt it. W. H. GANTZ.

RUSH, PA., Oct. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith find $3 50; apply $2 50 on renewal of subscription as directed, and $1 as my contribution to the fund for erecting a monument to D. M. Bennett, who was the best Liberal worker I hav ever been acquainted with. I will, at any time, giv $5 for erecting a Bennett Hall or Bennett Memorial, whenever our Liberal workers think it prudent to make the attempt. I hav the works of Brother Bennett while in prison (shame for R. B. Hayes), "The Gods and Religions," also "A Truth Seeker Around the World." I cannot buy everything, yet I try to do my part. M. G. SHOEMAKER.

ROMULUS, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say a word. My Christian Bible is wrongly printed. Genesis ii, 7, says, "And man became a living soul." It should hav been, "And man became a living villain." If this had been Moses's view it would be correct. I am not Moses or Aaron, or priest or Christian. I hav been a Bible reader for more than seventy years, and I cannot believe the Bible to be the work of my maker. I think I was created to be a man, and the more I liv as a man the more should I worship my creator. I do not wish to make creeds for man. The less I mingle with men the less mean company I shall keep.

HELIM SUTTON.

EAST DUBUQUE, Sept. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am happy to congratulate you on the successful management of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is truly growing in grace, as our Christian friends would say. You hav a number of able and splendid correspondents, not excelled by any paper. And as you wish to extend your circulation, please forward a copy to the inclosed addresses. They are old-time Liberals, who hav patronized the Investigator for many years, and friends of mine. I hav tried to convince them that they cannot afford to liv without the blessings of the gods of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Respectfully and truly your friend,

D. R. BURT.

CHESTER, PA., Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: To-day I happened across a September number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, the first I had ever seen, and I must say that I was so well pleased with its contents that I at once concluded to subscribe. Inclosed you will find $1 25 for six months' subscription. I hav been a close observer of the so-called Christians and Christianity, and the more I look into them the more impatient I get with them. I believe in reasonable things and things that look reasonable. I want to see truth and honesty prevail. I would like to hear from some of your correspondents. Hoping to receive the next issue of your paper, I remain Truly yours, E. DICKERSON.

LINCOLN, Sept. 9, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: As a subscriber to your valuable paper, I ask the privilege of recording in THE TRUTH SEEKER the death of my father, W. S. Fancher, who died on Sept. 3, 1883, in Lincoln county, Kansas. The deceased was born in Overton county, Tenn., March 1, 1805, of Christian parents, and strictly adhered to the teachings of Christianity until about the year 1853; while engaged in studying some scientific work he became convinced of the fallacy of the principles taught him in his youth. And continuing to investigate and to seek after further light, he at last found that the more he examined the so-called evidences of Christianity, the more its spuriousness and falsity became apparent; and believing in the uncertainty of the future, as taught and professed by the followers of Jesus, he became resolved to pay strict attention to living an upright life in this world and endeavoring to make himself and his fellow-men happy. To the correctness of this humble testimony all those of his neighbors who knew him can fully testify. He died as he had lived, a firm believer in the rights of man, leaving the gods to fight their battles. He did not presume in the least to dictate to these gentlemen how they should manage their affairs, but simply endeavored to make the best of it here on earth, believing that man's highest mission is to lead a moral life, in dealing honestly and justly with his fellow-men. Hell-fire had no terror for him, and he always regarded that story as a relic of a brutal and most barbarous past. He remained fully conscious till his last breath, going to sleep calmly and peacefully, surrounded by his beloved family and some of his neighbors.

DR. U. C. FANCHER.

CATHLAMET, W. T., Sept. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Having by mere chance picked up at a friend's house that sneaking sheet, the Weekly Standard, you can well imagin the just indignation I felt on reading the article headed "Beecher and Ingersoll," wherein the writer has most shamefully and foully slandered the virtuous dead—to wit, the world-renowned and worthy late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, while in his fearless and manly endeavor to vindicate the freedom of the press, and for which he suffered the most unparalleled outrage that the history of our country is able to produce, simply for circulating knowledge of superlativ importance for the proper propagation of the human species, so that the prisons and lunatic asylums, with their heavy burdens in this, our fair continent, might become beautifully less, and human happiness further increased thereby. Yet this self-righteous critic would try to make believe that such conduct on the part of the church was but another instance of the latter's "charity and benevolence." Doubtless it was, and which the great model, Calvin, in his divine love to the learned and amiable Michael Servetus, fully corroborates. Not much wonder, then, that Col. Ingersoll's love toward the church forces him to exclaim in the glowing terms that he does. Fail in what they may—and oh, how often!—these pious Christians never fail to take the lion's share of all that is beautiful and true in the world, forgetting in their hot, fanatical haste that what they are pleased to term "Infidel rant and censure" is much older than Christianity, and in ages has been the grand lever which has accomplished much, if not all, of what they so blindly and ostentatiously lay claim to, demonstration of which, in another correspondence also published, under the head of "Death of an Unfortunate," emphatically substantiates my assertion, as a solitary instance, yet whose name is legion. Respectfully, H. A. ELIOT.

[The attack on Mr. Bennett Mr. Ingersoll, and Mr. Beecher is of the stereotyped style, consisting of ignorant denunciation of them because they taught and teach truths which show the falseness of the Bible. The item, "Death of an Unfortunate," recounts the finding of a "daughter of sin" dead upon the river bank, near Weiser City, Idaho, evidently washed up by the waves. She was decently buried by the ladies of the town. The writer of the account closes with these words: "One noticeable feature, and one which impressed your itemizer as he looked over the little group at the grave, was the visible absence of all those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly savior—the sinner's friend." It is indeed a telling comment upon the hollowness of the pietists' profession.—ED. T. S]

Finances of the League

The annual report of the treasurer of the League, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, is just published. The total amount received is something like eighteen hundred dollars less than the total amount expended. The following is the detailed report:

Account of expenditures and receipts of the National Liberal League from October 1, 282, to October 1, 283.

RECEIVED.

Charter fees	$90.00
Annual memberships	235.00
Life memeberships	160.00
Gifts from Leagues	61.50
Gifts from individuals	175.00
Subscribers to Man	1,066.00
Advertising in Man	177.00
Contributions at the Milwaukee Congress	136 00
Total	$2.100.50

EXPENDED.

Rent of New York office, one year	$290.00
Gas, $19.00. Coal, 19.50	38.50
Office repairs and furniture	22 00
Shorthand clerks, copyists, etc.	427.33
Blank books, newspapers, wrappers, and general stationery	21.00
Printing circulars, blanks, letter-heads, envelopes	118.95
Postage on 18,000 Ways and Means Appeal circulars	180.00
Other postage	42.00
Express on packages, $6.65. Telegraphing, $2.25	8.90
Trip of the secretary, West, in June, to organize conventions and lectures	73.00
Trip of the secretary in September, to carry out the same, and attend the League Congress	74.42
Appropriations to lecturers	127.00
City railroad fare of secretary on League business	15.00
Advertising	12.50
Cost of printing and mailing Man, including postage, since October 1, 1882	2,128.70
Premiums to subscribers	20.08
Commissions to Adv. agents, canvassers, etc.	266.10
Total Expenses	3,865 48
Total Recipts	2,100.50
Balance due Treasury	$1.764.98

Of the debt due the treasury from this year's operations, says Mr. Leland, the secretary, $120 is due to Mr. Palmer, the treasurer, and the balance, $1,644.98, falls wholly on Mr. Wakeman. In 1881, the League owned him $176.95. Adding this, makes the total debt to Mr. Wakeman, $1,821.93. In 1882, the League owed the secretary $206, which sum remains unpaid. Also in 1882, the League owed Mr. Palmer $452. Adding last year's payments by him, makes a total of $572 due him. Adding all these totals, makes a total debt of $2,599.93 due from the League to its managers. This is a large sum, but they do not expect immediate reimbursement. It has been created wholly on account of Man. If in coming years the paper makes a financial success they will be glad to hav their money returned; otherwise—well, they hav heard of things irrecoverable "going where the woodbine twineth!"

Twenty-three new auxiliaries joined the National League last year, making 263 in all. Also ten new life members, making the number of life members 39. Also 246 annual members—four more than last year.

Obituary.

Mr. Chas. E. Townsend, of Locust Valley, N. Y., a notice of whose death was published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 6th, died suddenly of heart disease in his seventy-fifth year. A few hours before his death Mr. Townsend had, apparently, several years of usefulness still before him. He had just completed a new book, which he anticipated publishing during the present month. The title of this book will be "Primordial Principles," and it will be an exposition, more elaborate and complete, of the philosophical system put forth in the "Essays," etc., and the "Sequel" thereto, two volumes which he published some years since. This system postulates matter as the sum of all existence. Matter is of two kinds, gross and subtil. Gross matter is the substance of the material, tangible world; subtil matter, the infinit being, mind, electricity, light, ether, and, in general terms, force. Matter, whether gross or subtil, is indestructible and eternal. The infinit mind, the essence of subtil matter, is not the creator of gross matter; both are self-existent. But the infinit mind is the efficient cause of the evolution of gross matter into its various forms. Its agencies are heat, light, electricity, mind; these correlate with the infinit mind, or perhaps are different phases of it. This infinit being is intelligent; it adapts means to ends. It is benevolent, for in the successiv adaptations of means to ends, there is constant progress toward the evolution of higher types. It is impersonal; it has no corporeal counterpart of gross matter, as the human mind has a body of gross matter for its counterpart. An infinit intelligence, it has impressed its laws upon gross matter, and thereafter has no need of interfering with the working of those laws; no place is left for miracles or special providences.

The human mind, or its synonym, the soul, is a portion of subtil matter; it is consequently indestructible, and at death it enters upon another career, clothed with a body of more subtil matter, developing its capacities, and attaining a perfection which, while in conjunction with its body of gross matter, it could only aspire to. To this apriori demonstration of the immortality of mind, he adds another: That, in the short time and under the hampered conditions under which we liv in this world, we cannot reach the full development of our powers, and that it would not be consistent with the intelligence and benevolence of the infinit being to cut our activities short at death. This peculiar Theism, and no less peculiar doctrin of the immortality of mind are based, in the opinion of their author, upon an exclusivly scientific foundation. He was an uncompromising opponent of the theological system which claims the name of Christianity; and the reconciliation which that system has vainly striven to effect between itself and the scientific theories of the day he claims to hav effected in the case of his own system.

Besides the books mentioned above, Mr. Townsend has frequently published articles in several periodicals. His subjects range over a wide scientific field, and his treatment of them is always original and unique.

Mr. Townsend was formerly a grain broker in New York city. He retired from business in 1848, since which time he has lived at Locust Valley, on Long Island, and devoted his time to studies and investigations, whereof the system of philosophy outlined above is the result.

A Suggestion from Mr. Green.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I notice that Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira, is a candidate for secretary of state on the Greenback ticket of this state. Although Mr. Beecher is a Christian clergyman, I believe he is an honest man, and I am informed on good authority that he has for years favored the taxation of church property. Because I believe him an honest man and in favor of that just measure, I shall vote for him. And I wish every Freethinker in the state would do so too. That would show our voting strength, and that we were not bigots, and were determined to stand by our principles. H. L. GREEN.

Where Would He Hav Been?

From John S. Cobb's Efficacy of Prayer.

When the tribe of Judah wanted to take possession of the land that had been allotted to them, they had to turn out the inhabitants who already dwelt there. In this laudable undertaking the Lord came down from heaven to help them, and with his assistance they drove out and slaughtered the inhabitants of the mountain, but when they came to the valley they could not drive out the inhabitants thereof. And why? "Because they had chariots of iron" (Judges i, 19). The Lord, with the armies of Judah at his back, could not overcome them because they had chariots of iron! Where would he hav been if they had had Krupp cannon and the modern breechloading rifles?

A CATALOG of Truth Seeker Publications will be sent free upon application to this office.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between MRS. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By MRS. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. MCDOUGALL and MRS. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seel rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology. Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL.D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS FINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS. AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT STREET, and

286 FULTON STREET,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

WILLIAM WILSON'S ELECTRO-CHEMICO VAPORIZER.

THE CULMINATION OF OPTICAL PHYSICS DEMONSTRATED IN "ACTINA."

"ACTINA,"

THE GREAT EYE-RESTORER.

"Actina has an instantaneous action on the various and mysteriously complicated organs of vision, the nerves, the blood vessels, the muscular coats and complex membranes which make up that marvelous mechanism of nature, the eye. Whether in the human being, the insect, or brute, all diseases of the eye result from an irregularity of the secretions. This may be brought about in a variety of ways—overwork, anxiety, breathing impure atmosphere, straining the eyes over intricate mechanism, etc., etc.; while hundreds of thousands hav ruined their sight by the use of powerful drugs taken with a view of curing other forms of disease. But all these cases can be met successfully by the regular use of "Actina."

"Actina" will relieve colds in the head, inflammation in the eyes, headache, catarrh, neuralgia, sore eyelids, and humors of all kinds.

☞NOTE.—"Actina" is not a medicin or lotion, but a self-generating vapor, easily applied at all hours, times, and places, can be carried in the pocket, and used by any member of the family with perfect safety, from infancy to old age.

TRIAL FREE OF CHARGE.

By calling at our several stores you may try the remedy, free of charge; but be particular not to use any vaporizer unless it bears the signature of William Wilson, who will state positivly if relief and cure be possible.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN.

W. WILSON, President.

D. J. COTTER, Secretary.

[All checks, post-office order, and drafts payable to the Anglo-American Electric Association.]

CAUTION:

Beware of cheap imitations of our goods. Read your back copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four years, and note our thousands of testimonials.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

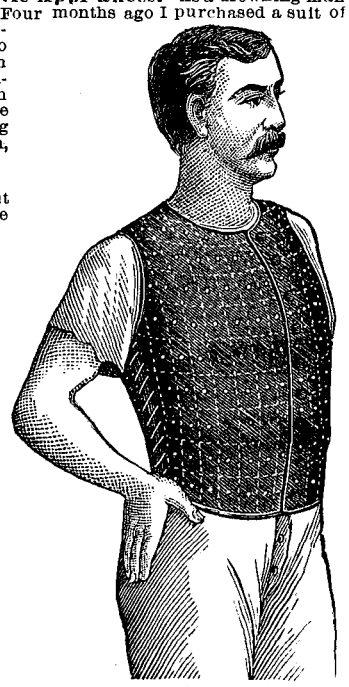
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,

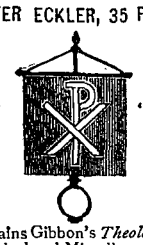
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION



Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office
6a 15

DR. FELLOWS

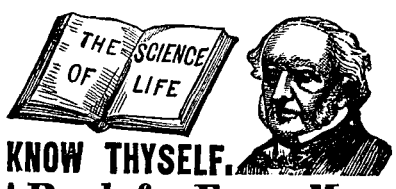
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and turpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

G. A. Lomas, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

THE world has yet much to learn and much to gain as to the necessity of moderation and self-denial. The greatest amount of happiness is not secured by yielding thoughtlessly to appetite and passion, or in giving the leading-strings to our lower animal incentivs, which should be controlled by the intellect—the reasoning power. We must learn to say "No" when lured to commit any excess, any infraction of the laws of our being. Health and happiness are far more important to us than momentary pleasure or the indulgence of animal passions. Let us learn to control the lower impulses and pursue the course that will result in health, peace of mind, long life, and consequent happiness.—D. M. Bennett.

THE melancholy days are come,
The saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds and naked woods,
And meadows brown and sere.
Heaped in the hollows of the grove
The withered leaves lie dead;
They rustle to the eddying gust
And to the rabbit's tread.
The robin and the wren are flown
And from the shrub the jay,
And from the woodtop caws the crow
Through all the gloomy day.

—William Cullen Bryant.

IT was upon the vote of such men as Athanasius that the New Testament was decreed to be the word of God, and nothing can present to us a more strange idea than thas of decreeing the word of God by vote. Those who rest their faith upon such authority put man in the place of God, and hav no foundation for future happiness. Credulity, however, is not a crime; but it becomes criminal by resisting conviction. It is strangling, in the womb of the conscience, the efforts it makes to ascertain truth. We should never force belief upon ourselvs in anything.—Paine's Age of Reason.

RELIGION is fundamentally irrational when it rejects the method of reason as a method, or the highest method of intellectual apprehension; when it subordinates reason to a church, or a book, or to a person. . . . "The word of God is not bound." Therein spake the apostle a true word. It is not bound to any church, to any book, to any person. It is subordinate to none of these. It subordinates them all. Happy and glorious the day when a man comes to see this clearly and surely. Henceforth he will no longer feel obliged to square the infinit truth with any church decree, with any Holy Writ, with any utterance of Moses or Jesus.—Chadwick's Rational Religion.

MEN are very slow to giv up their faith in physical force, as necessary for the guidance, correction, and disciplin of others. Force is a very palpable thing, and dispenses with all inquiry into causes and effects. It is the short way of settling matters without any weighing of arguments. It is the summary logic of barbarians, among whom the best man is he who strikes the heaviest blow or takes the surest aim.—Dr. Sam Smiles's Duty.

I CARE little about the sword. I will allow a thing to struggle for itself in this world, and with any sword or tongue or implement it has or can lay hold of. We will let it preach, and pamphleteer, and fight, and to the uttermost bestir itself and do, beak and claws, whatsoever is in it; very sure that it will, in the long run, conquer nothing that does not deserve to be conquered. What is better than itself it cannot put away, but only what is worse. In this great dual nature herself is umpire, and can do no wrong; the thing which is deepest in nature, what we call truest, that thing, and not the other, will be found growing at last.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

FOLLOWING every voice of mercy
With a trusting, loving heart,
Let us in life's earnest labor
Still be sure to do our part.

Now, to-day, and not to-morrow,
Let us work with all our might,
Lest the wretched faint and perish
In the coming stormy night.

Now, to-day, and not to-morrow,
Lest, before to-morrow's sun,
We, too, mournfully departing,
Shall hav left our work undone. —Anon.

"LET me send for a clergyman," Hermione pleaded with her dying husband. His face looked calm and with inexpressible tenderness he said: "Belief in the creed founded on a lie and maintained by craft and cruelty?—where the fiction of a God-man, because of God's love for the earth, is made the weapon which destroys human happiness and love? No! I am what I hav been—an Agnostic—knowing nothing and refusing to affirm what I cannot prove." "But when we die, Richard—" "We go into the light of knowledge or into the darkness of annihilation," he answered calmly. "It must be one or the other, and the laws of the universe will not be altered because one man believes in immortality and another is content with doubt."—Mrs. Linton's Under Which Lord?

WHY pray for the dead? They are at rest.
Pray for the living, in whose breast
The struggle between right and wrong
Is raging terrible and strong,
As when good angels war with devils.

—Longfellow.

A MAN of philosophic character, instead of looking back on the past with regret, finds himself more at home in the world and more satisfied with its order, the longer he livs in it. The melancholy contrasts which old men are sometimes disposed to state, between its condition, when they are about to leave it, and that in which they found it at the commencement of their career, arises, in most cases, from the unlimited influence which, in their early years, they had allowed to the fashions of the times, in the formation of their character. How different from those sentiments and prospects which dignified the retreat of Turgot and brightened the declining years of Franklin!—Dugald Stewart.

THE husbandman hath long patience for the precious fruits of the earth, till he receive the early and the latter rain.—James v, 7.

Odds and Ends.

A TEXAS hen has sat for three days on a nest full of hailstones and hatched out a cyclone. She has not been seen since.

AN eminent historian traces baseball back to the time when Rebecca went down to the well with a pitcher and caught Isaac.

"IS there anything wrong in kissing?" he asked her, as they stood together at the gate. "Certainly there is," she replied, "or there wouldn't be any fun in it."

A TROY man bears the imprint of a horseshoe, plainly and perfectly outlined, upon his hip. He does not think it is a birthmark; he thinks it came from fooling around a mule.

A RAILROAD conductor lately promoted to deacon of the church, as he started around with the contribution baskets, involuntarily remarked: "Tickets, gentlemen!" The contribution was unusually large.

THE fastidious young lady who teaches a class at Sunday-school, and considers it decidedly naughty and wicked to steal a pin, thinks nothing of securing money from her husband to purchase a number of pairs of new kid gloves, and then going and having her old ones fixed up and dyed so that her lord will not recognize them, while she spends the money for caramels and ice-cream.

"SAY, you think of about everything mean there is going, don't you?" said the grocery man to the bad boy, as he came in to show that his black eye had been cured. "The minister explained to me yesterday how you caused him and your father to lay and soak in the water for about three hours, one hot day last summer, in the lake, and they both blistered their backs. What caused you to play such a mean trick on them?"

"Oh, it was their own fault," said the boy, as he looked with disdain on a watermelon that was out of season and had no charms in October. "You see, the night the sociable was at our house the minister and some of the deacons were up in my room, which they used that night for a smoking-room, and while they were smoking they were telling stories about what fun they had when they were boys, and I remember one story the minister told about finding some girls in swimming once, and stealing their clothes, and making them wait till night, and then a girl had to fix herself up with newspapers and go home and send a wagon after the rest of the girls. The minister thought it was awful cunning, so when the church had the picnic last summer on the bank of the lake, I remembered about it. Beats all, don't it, how a boy will remember anything like that? Well, after dinner I saw pa whisper to the minister, and they took a couple of towels and a piece of soap, and started up the lake about half a mile, and I knew they were going in swimming. Well, it don't take me very long to catch on. I got an overdress that one of the girls had been wearing to wash dishes in, and a shawl, and stole a hat belonging to the soprano of the choir, and a red parasol that a girl left under a tree, and I went down in the woods and put on the clothes over my pants and things, and when pa and the minister had got in the water and were swimming around, I put up the parasol and tripped along the shore like a girl picking flowers, and when I came to the stump where they put their clothes I didn't look toward the water, but acted tired, and sat down on the stump and began to fan myself. You'd a dide to see pa look. He crawled up on the beach, in the shallow water, and said: 'Elder, do you see that?' The elder looked, with hisself all under water except his head, and said, 'Merciful goodness, squire, we are in for it. That interesting female is going to sit there and read a novel through before she goes away.' I peeked through the fan and could see all they said, while I pretended to read a novel. They swam around and made a noise, but I was deaf, and I thought it wasn't any worse for me to sit on the stump than it was for the minister, when he was a good little boy, to steal the clothes of the girls. I stayed until I got tired, and didn't hear them when they hollered to me to go away, and after a while they got water soaked and had to do something, so the minister broke off a piece of a tree and dressed himself in it, and came up toward me and said, 'Madam, excuse me for troubling you, but if you will go away while I get my clothes, I will take it as a favor.' I pretended to be insulted, and got up and walked off very indignant, and went back to the picnic and returned the clothes, and pretty soon they came up looking as red as if they had been drinking, and the picnic was ready to go home. Somebody told pa it was me, but I don't know who giv it away. Anyway, he chased me clear out of the woods with a piece of sapling."

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utan.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
Dr. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.
A. ATWOOD, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents.
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others	8
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers	8
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	8
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett	5
26	Underwood's Prayer	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett.	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers	2
31	Gods and God-Houses	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett	8
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston	8
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	8
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	8
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood	8
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett	8
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter	8
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild	5
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett	5
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1	5
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood	5
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	2
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett	5
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman	8
56	Bible Contradictions	1
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood	2
58	Prophecies. Underwood	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	2
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden	5
62	The Jews and their God	10
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers	8
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett	5
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown	2
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2	5
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon	8
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	2
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett	8
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett	5
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman	2
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett	5
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers	2
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett	1
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey	5
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London	2
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett	10
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett	2
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood	1
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker	2
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson	8
90	Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates	2
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood	1
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	8
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle	1
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper	5
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers	10
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota.	2
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown	5
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett	2
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston	1
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett	2
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston	8
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard	8
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers	8
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman	2
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul	5
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman	2
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford	5
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr	8
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson	1
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood	8
134	Talks with the Evangelists	5
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett	8
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett	8
137	Christian Love. C. L. James	8
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper	2
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston	8
140	Astro-Theology	5
141	Inudelity. H. W. Beecher	2
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon	10
143	Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins	2
144	The Comstock Laws	10
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin	10
146	Seymour Times Prayer	5
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws	2
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus	2
149	Age of Shams	8
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Huribut and Wakeman	10
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H	5
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas	2
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway	5
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce	8
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin	2
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley	2
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett	8
158	The Fool's Creed	1
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston	8
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman	8
161	Protestant Persecutions	8
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	10
163	Ingersoll's Creed	2

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D	5
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood	2
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood	1
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase. M. D	10
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCabe	2
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D	2
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M. D	2
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium	5

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

HAV YOU READ IT?

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL.

THE DANISH CURE EXPLAINED

BY WILHELMINE D. SCHOTT,

Practitioner of the Danish Cure.

WITH PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; large type, widely spaced; extra cloth, black and gold side and back stamps; 12mo., 319 pp.; $1.50.

A VERY APPROPRIATE GIFT BOOK.

It tells you what physicians should tell their patients, but do not: How to avoid contracting "doctors' bills;" how to hav good health without taking medicins. Hints on every subject pertaining to the health of women and children.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to giv a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick. She considers Animal Electricity, used as directed in this book, a very important curativ agent.

Although written primarily for women, this book will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, Nature will remove the difficulty without other aid.

Send to THE TRUTH SEEKER for circular and contents.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance, STYLED

Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

To My Friends:

No God, no heaven, no hell,
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents. "John's Way," 15 cents. "Clergyman's Victims," 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances. "Studying the Bible," 75 cents. "Godly Women," showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. "Private Physiology for Girls," worth $5 to any woman if she heeds health, $1. Photos, card, 15 cents; imperial, 20 cents. "Crimes of Preachers," 25 cents. "Leaves of Grass," a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2. "Infidel School Teacher," 25 cents. "Little Lessons for Children," 50 cents.

DIANA.

A Startling Book. Original in theory, unobjectionable in language, scientific in treatment. None should marry without consulting "DIANA." Price, 25 cents. "Sexual Physiology for the Young," cloth, 50 cents. "Science in Story," a comic, amusing, scientific, and sensible story, cloth, illustrated, $2. "Plain Home Talk," the cheapest book in the world, and full of hygienic information, 1,000 illustrations, $1.50. "Health Hints," 25 cents. These four are by Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York. "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism," $1.50. "Vindication of Gibbon," a valuable work crowded with thought and truth, $2. Specimens of Herald of Health, Health Monthly, Herald of Industry, Alpha, THE TRUTH SEEKER, Iconoclast, Thinker, Queen Bee, Liberal, Investigator, Blade, and Matrimonial Review, 6 cents each. "Six Tracts," 6 cents each. And any other Liberal book you may want, at publisher's price. Address,

ELMINA D. SLENKER,
4t40 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Wanted.

In a Liberal family or school a position as teacher of English branches and art or a good situation as housekeeper or governess, by a lady thirty-five years old, with experience as teacher and housekeeper, but who has now lost all her property through the knavery of some very pious people. Best of reference. Address, M. M., care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 43. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, October 27, 1883. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

HOWARD CROSBY says the publications of the National Temperance Society are filled with "the most outrageous and abominable falsehoods."

ANOTHER angel was manufactured down at the Tombs in this city last Friday. He went to heaven from the gallows, after having the holy sacrament administered to him. His victim was a woman who is now in the other place, according to the best Christian authority.

THE latest refrain of the Salvation Army, according to the Chicago Herald: "If you can't get in at the golden gate, get over the garden wall." Those who hav witnessed the performances of this peculiar people hav had an idea they would find a way to get in.—Peck's Sun.

A DEVOTEE full of Christian submission and afraid of making some indiscreet demand of heaven, contented himself with repeating every night and every morning, as his only prayer, all the letters of the alphabet; then he ended by saying, "There they all are, O God; arrange them to suit yourself."

A PASTOR'S life, it seems, is not altogether without its joys. At the Upper Methodist Conference at Marion, Iowa, the other day, the Rev. R. W. Coates, in making a report of his stewardship, said he had passed three very successful and pleasant years at LeClaire, having had an unusual number of funeral services during that time.

DURING the recent political campaign in Iowa, the Methodists and Congregationalists held a union meeting to further the prohibition cause, at which an irate Greenbacker rose and wanted to know if they proposed to run their religion in the interests of the Republican party. He was promptly thrown out of the church.

THE State Saloon-Keepers Convention at Milwaukee having resolved that drunkenness is not due to the saloons, but to the lack of education in youth, the Sun remarks: "This is a new view of the liquor problem and a reversal of the prohibitionist way of putting things. It would be instructiv if those saloon keepers would clearly set forth the exact degree of education that a man must attain before he would cease getting drunk. It has been the impression that there isn't any limit."

PRINCE BISMARCK is much annoyed at the revival of the Socialistic propaganda in Germany, which has already spread broadcast a great quantity of seditious literature. The extensiv seizure of Socialistic books and the arrest of several men who are known to hav been engaged in disseminating reading matter of this character, shows that Bismarck is determined to crush the movement before it gains much headway. Socialism will liv, however, long after the German prince is dead.

THE editor of the Cherokee (Ala.) Advertiser is troubled in spirit. He says: "A minister of the gospel led us to one side, and said: 'It is said that there is less Christianity and more Infidelity in Center than any place of its size in the United States.' This threw us off our pins, and our astonishment was only equaled by our grief at the thought that such an idea should get foothold in this land of diversified religion, and among a people of broad and comprehensiv views, with opinions upon the ritual of all modern Christianity."

THE Rev. P. C. Archer, pastor in charge of the M. E. church South at Gainesville, Texas, is reported to hav said that the Bible was full of mistakes from the beginning of Genesis to the last of Revelation, and that every intelligent minister in the United States would indorse the above. M. N. Seiver questions the truth of the statement in a card in the Gainesville Independent, and calls on the Rev. Archer to string his bow and defend his position in a public debate. In the light of the recent revision of the New Testament, says the Dennison Gazetteer, we should say Mr. Archer has the strong side of the issue.

THE Rev. George H. Hill, D.D., is one of the parsons engaged in the probably hopeless task of tucking his God into the Constitution. This generous Christian says, "If any cannot conscientiously liv under a new Christian government, they can conscientiously go elsewhere." To this the Winsted Press remarks: "Excusing the gentleman's bad grammar, we would say to him that if he cannot conscientiously liv under the Constitution as it is, he can conscientiously go elsewhere. He need not stand upon the order of his going; let him go at once; and when he has tarried in Jericho long enough for his beard to grow we trust he will conclude to tarry in Jericho during the remainder of his life.

THAT pulpit notoriety seeker, the Rev. Mr. Houghton, of Stratford, Conn., who preached such outrageous sermons on the recent tragedy in that town, has come before the public again as a patron of the turf. The charge against him is that he entered his fast horse under a false name at a neighboring fair, and was barred out by the judges who discovered the fraud, after which he entered him at another race under his right name, and was forced to pay a fine of $100 for changing cognomens, which he did, and won the purse of $200, clearing $100 by the operation. Mr. Houghton denies that his congregation asked him to resign because of his sensational sermons on the Rose Ambler murder, but he is reported as being fearful that this last escapade may bring about that calamity.

POOTS, who livs in Sedamsville, says he is not a member of any church, but he would not dare to giv the preacher the back talk that his wife does, who has been a good church-member for forty years. The last time the minister called on them he remarked: "I didn't see you at prayer-meeting last night, sister Poots." "No," was the response; "the night was so stormy and the road so muddy that I concluded not to go to the meeting." "But the Lord was there," interrupted the minister, with some severity. "I know, but the Lord didn't hav to wade through the mud to get there, though." Then the minister, to change the subject, asked Poots if he thought it didn't look as though we were going to hav some more rain, and Poots said it appeared to be clouding up some. And the minister started for home immediately.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

THE General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church has been in session in Philadelphia, says Puck, but as yet we hav not heard that that honorable body has had anything to say about the case of the Rev. Mr. Cowley. In 1880 Mr. Cowley was sent to Blackwell's island, a convict. He had been found guilty of maltreating children placed under his charge in a so-called "home." The trial was fair, the testimony clear and direct. No man above the intellectual grade of idiot has ever questioned the justice of the verdict. At the time we said of the crime for which the Rev. Edward Cowley was punished that it was "a crime of which no one doubts he was guilty—a brutal, deliberate, revolting crime, that can call forth no plea in extenuation." What Puck said then it says again. The Rev. Edward Cowley was rightly punished. His crime should hav cost him much more than the one year's imprisonment which he suffered. But it was supposed that the awful degradation, the shame of public exposure and imprisonment, would be enough to crush the man forever. He was not crushed. He bobbed serenely up again; the Episcopal church went through the mockery of a most absurd "trial," declared the Rev. Edward Cowley "not guilty," and left him the Rev. Edward Cowley. He is still the Rev. Edward Cowley, a clergyman of the church of England, or the Episcopal church of America, or whatever it likes to call itself. A fine clergyman he must be who givs the right hand of fellowship to the Rev. Edward Cowley.

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH, lecturing in Manchester, Sept. 30th, made an important announcement with regard to the course he intended to pursue next session, says the London Times. He denied a statement which had been made that he would use force to obtain his seat. His course, he said, would depend very largely upon the decision of the courts of law in November. If the law courts decided in his favor, then he thought it possible that the courts and the House of Commons would be left to settle between them which was the stronger; but he should feel it his duty to stand between them and see fair play. If the courts decided that the House of Commons might make law against the statutes, it would be clearly his duty not to hold the seat any longer. If, on the other hand, the courts decided in his favor, he hoped the House of Commons would set the example of obedience to the law which he had tried to inculcate, and that this struggle, disgraceful in its continuance and dishonorable in its manner of fighting, would come to an end. If the courts decided that the claims of privilege prevented their interpreting the law, then the duty would be placed on him of interpreting the law.

A DESPATCH from Rome to the New York Herald says: "There are reports at Rome that many private documents referring to the papacy hav disappeared from the Vatican. It is feared that the Italian government may take under its protection those treasures of the Holy See which hav been collected with the people's money. To these treasures belong libraries containing more than one hundred and eighty thousand codices and one hundred thousand manuscripts—among them, fifty-six gospels in the oriental tongues, written on scrolls. To meet the emergency, the clergy are said to hav been hiding, first, the archives of extraordinary ecclesiastical affairs; second, the archives of the Propaganda; third, the archives of the Inquisition; and, fourth, the archives of the Congregation of the Index Expurgatorius. These documents were once kept in the Palace of the Quirinal, but were transferred to the Vatican by a papal emissary, who persuaded the commander of the Italian troops that the said documents were simply baptismal registers without historical value. Some of them are now well guarded in the old tower near Anagi. The letters of Pope Alexander VI. are still in the Vatican, together with other papers which the pope would never voluntarily place at the disposal of the public. Many of these documents are hidden on secret shelves, in walls, and behind other papers."

ANOTHER case of insanity resulting from religion is made known by the Philadelphia Times. Annie Dick, a pretty brunet of twenty-one years, lived with relativs in Allegheny City, and was one of the loudest and most enthusiastic shouters that the Salvation Army had recruited in that place. Her audiences, composed mainly of young men whose sudden show of piety was a surprise to their friends, were remarkably large and attentiv. The young men did not make sport of Miss Dick, as they would hav done if Flag-bearer Biggerstaff or some other officer of the army had been making a pious harang to them. The success of Miss Dick filled her with an ambition to be captain of the forces in Allegheny, but as there seemed to be no sign of the death, resignation, or removal of the glib-tongued gentleman filling that office, Miss Dick became despondent and was no longer able to charm her flock of sinners. Her mind became unbalanced. She would wander through the streets, wildly exhorting everybody whom she met to giv up his evil ways and be saved. This became annoying to the public, and the fair maniac was arrested in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, where she said she had an appointment to meet the savior. She is now in the insane department of the Allegheny City Home. The Salvation Army is denounced by many people as the cause of her misfortune, and threats are made that if the troops do not leave town their barracks will be bombarded.

News of the Week.

IT snowed in Minnesota last Sunday.

A TREATY of peace has been signed between Chili and Peru.

IRVING, the English tragedian, landed in New York on the 21st.

THE pope is preparing an allocution upon the condition of the Catholic church.

AN Irish bailiff was shot on the 20th. This is supposed to be an agrarian outrage.

SUFFRAGE has been granted to women by the legislature of Washington territory.

THERE are 47,863 post-offices in the United States, an increase of 1,632 during the last year.

AN earthquake in Asia Minor last week killed 57 persons, wounded 150, and rendered 14,678 homeless.

SENATOR SESSIONS, of New York, who has been on trial for receiving bribes, was acquitted by the court.

A POWDER MILL at Secaucus, N. J., blew up last Saturday, destroying $6,000 worth of building material and killing a deaf mute.

THE case of the heretic, Rev. John White, of Pennsylvania, is to be reopened. It is expected that he will be expelled from the church.

Two professional burglars and cutthroats named Walsh and Irving had an altercation in a Sixth avenue barroom, in this city, one night last week, and both were shot dead.

THE exclusion of American pork from Germany has not had the effect of ridding that country of trichinosis, a disease which has been attributed to the eating of pork from this side of the water.

MARGARET HARRIS was hanged at Calhoun, Ga., on the 18th, for poisoning a family with whom she lived. Upon the scaffold she expressed a confident hope that she should meet her friends in heaven.

GEN. PRYOR, the American lawyer who is to defend O'Donnell, the slayer of Informer Carey, says that he is satisfied his client acted in self-defense. O'Donnell pleaded not guilty on the day of his indictment.

THE detectivs in the Rose Ambler murder case, in Stratford, Conn., still adhere to the theory that William Lewis killed the girl. They claim to hav discovered reasons for which he wished her out of the way.

THE annual conference of the Wesleyan church in America, in session at Syracuse, N. Y., refused to admit a delegate who is a member of a college fraternity, or of the Good Templars, or any other secret society.

PROTAP CHUNDER MOZOOMDAR, of India, an apostle of the Brahmo-Somaj, lectured in Brooklyn last Sunday night. He held that his religion was in sympathy with Christianity, and is doing immense things for the Hindoos.

THE Rev. Frederick Nixon was arrested in Philadelphia last week for picking the pocket of a bartender in a disreputable resort. Nixon is a young man, and has already lost one position as preacher on account of improper conduct.

THE centennial anniversary of the disbanding of the American army of the Revolution was celebrated at Newburgh, N. Y., on the 17th inst., with great noise, caused by cannons, bells, and steam whistles. THE TRUTH SEEKER office contributed a printer of warlike proclivities to add to the general impressivness of the military parade.

CAPTAIN SMITH and Captain Sackett, of Locust Valley, Long Island, attended a Methodist oyster supper on the 19th inst., and engaged in a fight with each other. The pastor attempted to separate them, and was struck by both. The combatants hav been arrested. As they were both respected members, considerable excitement was caused among the congregation.

Communications.

Mind and Matter.

The two able articles of Mr. Otto Wettstein in THE TRUTH SEEKER, June 2d and July 28th, certainly merited an earlier reply; but the readers had been for awhile treated on such heavy food that consideration for their mental digestiv apparatus influenced me to postpone for awhile what I had to say; so long, in fact, that I begin to fear that the "statute of limitations" will exclude me. However, as the subject is one of those universal ones which are interesting at any time, whenever the appetite is aroused, and as TRUTH SEEKER correspondents still keep up the discussion, I venture to offer my mite.

Were Mr. Wettstein but willing to abide by his own logic (and perhaps he will be when it is pointed out to him) there would be found scarcely a difference between us, though he claims to be but a Materialist, while I claim to be an Integralist, i. e., both a Materialist and a Spiritualist (Transcendental). The current Spiritualistic doctrin (which it almost seems Mr. Wettstein mistook me as talking about) is in entire consonance with either Materialism or Transcendental Spiritualism, and is not involved in this discussion, being but a subordinate division or domain of the larger domain. I say in consonance with Materialism, for I hold that the doctrin held by many, that "spirit is refined matter," is nothing but Materialism; and its facts must be decided, not by argument, but by the scientific method; by an appeal to the test of observation and experience.

But listen to Mr. Wettstein; he says:

> "In this sense—as ever-activ vital forces—all matter is ever alive and immortal." And again: "A beginning of cosmic life . . . is absolutely unthinkable, because it implies that all this vast aggregation of matter at one time . . . existed in absolute standstill, which, if a fact, would of course hav prevented it ever afterward from becoming activ energy, or living matter, as what it did or could not accomplish during the eternity preceding this commencement, it, of course, could never accomplish at any subsequent time."

Why Mr. Wettstein should reason that it was not possible for "a vast mass of dead, inert substance" to become "activ energy or living matter," and yet that it was possible for it to become conscious matter or evolve conscious life, I do not quite comprehend. But if we read farther we shall see that he does not—that he considers mind also eternal. He says: "It is entirely consistent, then, with humility and logic to predicate no first form or body, either organic or inorganic, but all such phenomena to be but eternal repetitions of an infinit number of like phenomena ever preceding them." . . . "The evolutions of physical forms, having gone on forever and ever in the past, it becomes evident that the evolution of minor forms, like man and beast, has gone on forever and ever in the past, and that in this sense, and only in this sense, it is true that matter and mind (the latter as a function of organized matter) are both alike eternal; and a first man being impossible, a first mind would likewise be impossible."

This, logically carried out, is a concession of my whole doctrin. I claimed that mind neither evolved matter, as the Transcendental Spiritualists claim, nor that matter evolved mind, as the Materialists claim, but that they were and are co-eternal, just as Mr. Wettstein says.

Matter and mind in conjunction evolve and develop forms of both matter and mind; but matter does not from itself evolve mind, nor mind matter. Their elements always were. They are coeval, and, as Mr. Wettstein says, "the evolution of their forms has gone on forever and ever in the past."

I will return to the consideration of this extract later on, but now let me call attention to the immense potencies which Mr. Wettstein ascribes to "dead, inert matter," while "confining ourselvs to this little globe" of ours. "It is now generally conceded," he says, "by all thoughtful minds that the material composing our earth . . . was in a nebulous condition; . . . after millions of years . . . a condensation process took place causing this nebulous matter to ignite and change into one vast sea of fire." "Then follows a period of fire and flame," when our earth was "a vast, terrible, seething, belching, boiling mass of burning matter. Can we conceive of mind existing then and there?" asks Mr. Wettstein. By mind he evidently means only the mind as it is manifested in man. "Can we conceive of mind existing then and there?" Of course not, but Mr. Wettstein had already said that "the evolution of minor forms, like man and beast, had gone on forever and ever in the past," so that mind, according to him, existed elsewhere. Darwin concedes that a "few germs" may hav been brought to this earth from other worlds, and "my brother Herman," who has furnished "an ingenious idea in solution of this complex problem," says that "we must imagin the minutest form of animal life." Now it is just this "minutest form of animal life" that is the problem. Grant this, and the rest succeeds as a matter of course.

But the nebular hypothesis upon which Mr. Wettstein founds much of his argument is but a hypothesis. It is not yet settled beyond cavil. So learned an authority as "W. H. B.," of Washington, says that, although it is generally accepted by scientists, it will hav to be given up, and he says that "the accretion theory of world formation answers to all the data of astronomy and geology. It is based upon two incontrovertible facts, namely:

1. "Our solar system swarms with innumerable meteorites which are continually falling upon the planets, and thus slowly adding to their bulk.

2. "It is a law of nature that pressure produces heat; it therefore follows that by the prodigious pressure of gravity the center of a planet becomes heated, and the thickness of the crust prevents the radiation of heat into cold space."

So the accretion theory is plausible enough to base suppositional arguments upon—in fact, as plausible as the "nebular" theory. If matter can be accreted, that is, in the change that is constantly going on in the forms of bodies, matter is carried from one body to another, as we know it is, for it must come from somewhere, may not the germ of life come with the matter? To me this conception seems much more reasonable than that this earth should hav been at any time but "one vast body of flame," and should begin all over again the work of evolving life and consciousness from the mere debris, such as it must hav been after "millions of years of fire and flame."

I will now return to the consideration of the other part of the extract I quoted. Mr. Wettstein says that "in this sense, and only in this sense, matter and mind (the latter as a function of matter) are both alike eternal." It is that in parenthesis I refer to—mind as a function of matter. This is fully conceded—nay, never disputed. Mind, as displayed in man (or in beast), is a function of matter. It obeys its behests. Organized matter—the body—is hungry. It feels the hunger, but it cannot cognize the feeling except by the aid of the mind. The mind comes to the rescue; it cognizes the hunger, answers the question of where it (the body) can get the food to appease the hunger, directs how to get it, and it is done. But—and this is the new truth—it is just as conceivable that matter is a function of mind. The mind has its behests and the body obeys them. "In mathematics, if a is the function of b, then b is the function of a," and mathematics is the model of the universe—the model of the universe as we conceive it in our minds, and of each and every department or domain of the universe. This is the demonstration of Universology. It has been the dream of philosophers of all ages; and attempts hav been made to accomplish the discovery before, but it has never been fully demonstrated till now.

Mr. Wettstein, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, July 28th, speaks of this earth "being influenced and controled solely by the sun, and its own inherent properties, yet destined, finally, of necessity, to evolve to its present condition of perfection."

Here Mr. Wettstein, Materialist as he is, acknowledges a controling power—necessity. It matters not that it is "its own inherent properties;" it is not matter. It is a property of matter, he says, but in thought and in speech we hold it as not matter. Herbert Spencer speaks of force being the "prime postulate." Mr. Wettstein says "matter and force are the sole causes," not cause. And again, "matter and force exist prior and are the sole agents [not agent] producing mind." Here again he speaks of something other than matter.

There are some of his arguments that hav, it seems to me, really no place in a Rationalist's repertoire, or in a Rationalistic journal, except it be as addressed to an orthodox religionist. I will mention but one (July 28th). He says that the doctrin of the co-eternity of matter and mind is "equivalent to assuming that the animal germ of the rat, cat, or dog, as well as that of man, prior to conception, designs and superintends in infinit wisdom, the formation and growth of its own body, even before conception, as well as while yet in the womb or a struggling brute." This is a mere assumption on Mr. Wettstein's part, somewhat like the assumption of Mr. Putnam recently that Universology claimed an "infinit reason back of the universe." Integralism, so far as I understand it, claims no infinit reason governing in infinit wisdom over finite things or acts. It does claim that the same act which placed the physical germ in the right condition to develop itself into a physical body placed also the mental germ in the right condition to develop itself into a mental body.

There are, as I said, other arguments that, as far as Integralism or the popular Spiritual doctrin is concerned, hav no call whatever. They are to them mere men of straw, set up to be knocked down.

But after all, Mr. Wettstein's regard for Materialism seems almost to be love for the word merely. In his article of June 2d, he speaks of the various isms, Spiritism, etc., in a deprecatory manner, as though they had no place in our vocabulary. He asks, "If some other science should yet step forth and solve the problem, would it not emerge from all these isms, and submerge itself in and with Materialism" [ism is better, it seems, when attached to matter]; "would it not lose its identity," he asks, "and come forth a pure transcendent Materialism?" I answer, that depends whether, by the common consent of mankind, you can stretch the word so as to cover in its meaning all that is—force, power, energy, etc. In that case, you would hav to provide some other word to mean just what is meant now by matter, i. e., mere concrete substance. In his last paper Mr. Wettstein has thus stretched the word, but he has not gained the consent of common usage, nor has he conducted his own argument true to the enlarged meaning. But ism means a doctrin or philosophy—not a science—and in his last paper Mr. Wettstein has chosen a much better term, namely, Universology. That is, indeed, as its construction indicates, a science of the universe. The ism or philosophy arising from that, as Materialism arises from the physical sciences, is Integralism.

My paper is already long, I know, but allow me one more point and I am done.

In his last paper Mr. Wettstein rather takes Mrs. Heddon to task for advocating certain doctrins because she loves them—because they are in accordance with her wishes and aspirations.

He adds, "But this charge of selfishness and egotism can never be preferred against the Materialist." Indeed! Can it not? Does he not make it himself—and against himself too—in the very next paragraph? He says of his "new faith," "And I now love it as a priceless treasure which I would refuse to exchange for all the wealth of a Vanderbilt, and upon the fact it teaches in regard to man's destiny, I look as the source of serenest happiness and the greatest boon vouchsafed to man." In fact, so dearly does he love his present prospects of annihilation, that he thinks he would be "most miserable"—"verging on madness"—if he should become convinced that there was a possibility of immortality. Is not his love for the doctrin that "death ends all" about as strong and as potent, according to his own words, as the Spiritualist's love of the opposit? Although I believe in a life continued beyond the death of the body, I think my love for it is not so strong as Mr. Wettstein's love for his prospect. I think I could look upon whatever is to be with no thought of "verging on madness." But it had better be known, and acknowledged at once, that no one of us is or can be wholly free from the bias of sentiment as effecting our intellectual conceptions; and I am glad to hav this unconscious testimony that even Materialism can call out an enthusiasm which may somewhat vitiate the cool judgment of the thinker. Mr. Wettstein and Mrs. Heddon seem to be only fairly counterpoised in this matter. Integralism is the systematic effort to hold the balance between all different phases of convictions and feelings, between all isms or specialized views of universal things.

A. C. MACDONALD.

P. S.—Since writing the above I hav read Miss Gibson's contribution to the discussion. It is admirable. I disagree with her in only one respect. I hav had evidence, amounting to almost proof, that the mind, taking a finer body, livs on awhile in another form, goes through another phase of career. To me it is an absurdity to talk of immortality in any one form—spirit form or what not. The identity is immortal—that is, I cannot conceive the opposit, but the forms are ever changing.

A. C. M.

Paine and Franklin.

Few men hav exerted a stronger or more healthful influence over the thought of their age than Paine and Franklin. Independently of the warm sympathies that made these two natures akin, there occur in their life-histories many points of similarity interesting to note. Paine, born in England, crossed the Atlantic, lived for many years, and at length died, in America. Franklin, born in America, also crossed the great ocean dividing England from the mother country, and lived for many years in England. Each was born poor, in a humble station of life, and each, in spite of many social disadvantages, climbed to a high rung of fame's ladder, and left a name never to be forgotten—a convincing proof, if proof were needed in these days of social progress, how independent is talent of most accidents of birth and of all accidents of station.

Both men possessed that rare form of patriotism that has always appeared to conservativ thinkers a special form of madness; the patriotism that implies, not merely love for the particular race among whom one happens to be born, but for each and every nation under the sun, of whatever tongue or clime, color, race, or creed. Both took in science a deep and eager interest, an interest the natural sequence of their earnest practicality and deeply rooted love for truth. Such natures are seldom content to take scientific truths at second-hand from others, but must, like inquiring Faust, themselvs be often holding commune with the great "Erd-Geist," and winning from it some answer, be it ever so faint a whisper, as to nature's mighty secrets. Franklin, indeed, questioned the "Erd-Geist" to some purpose, and was hence able, as Burke declared, to "bring, like a modern Prometheus, the lightning down from heaven." Both hated war and all its attendant miseries with the two-fold hatred of the philanthropist and of the philosopher. "There never was a good war or a bad peace," wrote Franklin. Yet, when liberty was at stake, each fought in the battle-field; Franklin for the land of his birth, and Paine for that of his adoption. They both took an important part in the foundation of the American republic, in the framing of the American Constitution.—Progress.

The God Argument.

This is a land of social, political, and religious liberty. Every man has a perfect right, before the law, to entertain and promulgate whatever social, political, or religious opinions the evidence he has compels him to entertain. Enjoying these privileges, bought by the blood of more than a hundred generations, I often find my mind wandering in quest of the reasons for the initial impulses to the various and often dissimilar systems of religion, both of the present and the past; and in my meditations the question, Is there a God, and if there is, is he the author of the book we call the Bible? seems veiled in a cloud of dense and almost impenetrable darkness. That there is a God nine-tenths of the people of the world believe. The more people, the more mind. The more mind, the greater the ability to discriminate between true and false theories. Therefore that there is a God is evidenced by what we may call popular consent. This evidence, though it may be regarded by the superficial reasoner as final, yet to the real unbiased thinker who, regardless of pet theories, is willing to go where reason leads, it is not of that conclusiv character necessary to the formation of an absolute moral certainty, as the onward march of the public opinion of to-day declares as false that of yesterday. As less than absolute proof is insufficient in a matter of so much import, and as public opinion is not absolute proof, then it most naturally follows that if we would know, we must seek for our proof in some other source. Perhaps in our endeavors to answer the question, "Why this almost universal belief in the existence of a God?" we may arrive at more satisfactory results.

We believe this opinion to be the result of a course of reasoning founded on apparently true, yet false, premises; and as the truth of the conclusion is determined by the character of the premis, then the verity of the premis is the hinge on which turns the conclusion. The means by which we ascend from nature to an idea of the existence of a God is very aptly and forcibly illustrated by Paley's design and designer hypothesis. This design and designer standpoint we honestly and candidly look upon as false, from the fact that if extended it will prove the existence of a million as well as one God—a conclusion which all intelligent monotheists will agree upon as ridiculous; and as the ridiculous has no residence in the economy of the universe, it follows it is false.

Declarations without evidence being of no avail, we turn to the proof. In order to a clear and distinct notion of the design and designer premises, we must strip them of the paraphernalia of language which by its superabundance obscures rather than makes plain, and reduce it to its clear, simple, unwashed self.

This it is, "Everything that exists is a design;" every design must hav a designer.

Nature exists; therefore, according to the first proposition, it must be a design; and as it is a design, the second proposition proves it to hav had a designer. That designer we call "God." This is the reasoning of Paley and other one-god theorists.

Now mark the first premis, "Everything that exists is a design." God exists, or, at least, most Christians hav an "ideal" which to them serves the purpose of a God. If he does, in fact, "exist," then, according to the first proposition, he must be a design; and if a design, according to to the second proposition, he must hav had a designer; and so we hav an unbroken chain of logic proving the existence of gods innumerably more numerous than the sands on the sea-shore. This is the inevitable conclusion from the "design and designer hypothesis." It proves so much that all rules coincide in denouncing its premises as false. The fact is, there is an existence somewhere that is not a design; what that something is, is a matter of assumption, one assumption, unsupported by evidence, being no better than another. The assumption that God exists as the first great cause of all things carries no more logical force than the assumption that he does not; this, nothing short of egotistical bigotry can deny.

But for curiosity's sake come with us and examin the real conditions of this theological assumption, with the proof by which it is sought to be established. The first and most essential condition is that you grease and swallow without a struggle the proposition that there is a God. The next is that everything that exists, excepting God, is an effect; nature exists, therefore it is an effect; and as it is au effect, it must hav had a cause, and that cause is God; but is it not the devil's logic out of jail to use the conclusion as a part of the premises from which to draw that part as a conclusion? That looks like reasoning in a circle, for the God of the first premis is also the God of the conclusion. This we believe to be the exact position of every anti-Atheistic reasoner, from the remotest past down to the present. If it is not, all the religious teachers with whom we hav had the pleasure of conversing hav been unable to giv the reason of their faith. Now, as nature is not an evidence of the existence of a God, we will try to show some of nature's evidences as to his non-existence. We admire the activ, industrious, energetic man, and we loath the inactiv and lazy man; so we must admire or loath these characteristics, even though they be found in a God. Consequently our idea of God, that we with our natures may respect him, must be an idea of an energetic being. So it follows that if we can show, by inference or otherewise, this orthodox God to hav existed through an almost infinity of ages in a kind of semi-conscious, torpid, inactiv state, rolled up in the folds of an oblivion plus his own existence, then we show you a character whose parallel in man we regard as justly contemptible because of existing to no purpose.

"God created all things." Then there must hav been a time that things did not exist. Now suppose we take a ball of gold equal to all the matter, as regards quantity, of all our astral system, and hammer it into a sheet as thin as gold is susceptible, on which write nines as closely as possible for the best engravers, then stretch these nines out in a straight line, letting the unit be a billion of geological times, imagining this great lapse of duration to reach back just to the time when God did create. Still beyond this point there is a portion of duration millions of times greater in which we see this orthodox God sitting in the lone and solitary depths of oblivion, inactiv, inert, and torpid, the very character we loath in a man. So we infer that as through this long lapse of ages there was no action, probably there was no actor.

But again is it within our power to conceive of the existence of things without a divinity to create? We think that it is, nay more, we believe a divinity would be an unnecessary interloper in the affairs of things which of themselvs possess the powers and potencies sufficient to their own varied and constantly changing existence. If so, then God is not a necessary factor to the production of the universe; and as nature's economy permits no silent factors, we hav another Atheistic evidence. Nature is believed to be the result of two factors, to wit, substance elements with inherent principles or rules of combination. Are these factors universal, eternal, and self-existing, or are they creatures subject to change, modification, and destruction in obedience to the will of the creator? We believe them to be self-existing and eternal. It is a rule of judgment as old as the science of reasoning that "we must not determin against that which we know because there may be something which we know not. This self-evident proposition is the base from which we draw another similar and scarcely less evident proposition, to wit, we must not determin against that of which we can conceive, because there may be something of which we cannot conceive. It is easy to conceive how a thing composed of parts may hav been made by the proper adjustment of its parts, but to conceive of how the parts of a thing not composed of parts may be so adjusted is quite beyond our comprehension. We know that the simple elements exist. We cannot conceive of their creation, because they are not composed of parts; therefore, according to the preceding rules of judgment they can be nothing else than eternal and self-existing. We cannot conceive of the element oxygen void of what is called chemical affinity for certain other elements. Eliminate this principle and it is no longer oxygen. So we see that chemical affinity is an absolute and necessary quality or principle inhering in the eternal element, oxygen; so it most naturally follows that the principle is no less eternal than the element; and as chemical affinity is nothing more than a species of attraction it follows that the principle of attraction is self-existing and eternal, and not the result of the operations of the will of a god. If there is a God he did not create the living principle, from the fact that if he did there must hav been a time in which he did not liv, because during the time anterior to their creation, a thing as life could not be. Thus we hav the living principle, self-existing and eternal. The fact that we cannot conceive how God could make three times three ten, takes from him all power over the principles of mathematics, and shows them to be self-existing and eternal. God did not create the principles of morality, else before their creation he could not hav had a moral nature, and a God minus a moral nature would be little else than a devil; and a devil's factory of moral principles would be a curiosity indeed. Since God did not create the simple elements, the principles of attraction, the principles of mathematics, the living principles nor the moral principles, in the name of all that is good and great what did he create ,seeing that nature, according to science, is the result of these and other similar self-existing and eternal factors?

WILEY W. WADSWORTH.

IF no man could be saved except those who believed in Christ, what has become of those millions of human beings who passed away prior to his birth? and what will be the fate of those now living who hav never heard and will never hear the name of Jesus of Nazareth? Were the former saved by anticipation, and will the latter be saved on account of their ignorance? If so, where was the necessity of the atonement at all?—CHARLES WATTS.

Mr. Tucker Differed With.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The accompanying short treatis on "Anarchism" was prepared for and sent for publication, a week ago, to the Word. It has been returned to me with the following note from Mr. Heywood. If you concur with him in thinking it appropriate to your columns, please publish it. Mr. Heywood's letter is in part confidential, and relates to his impressions of the prospects in his coming trial. It is not therefore given in full. There is no doubt that he stands in great danger, the prosecution being very stiff in its determination to convict; and Liberals of all schools should watch the case with the closest scrutiny. It is not the time now, perhaps, to say more. S. P. A.

PRINCETON, MASS., Oct. 14, V.L. 11.

DEAR MR. ANDREWS: Found yours on reaching home last evening. Would gladly print your article, but we hav closed the printing-office a while, until after the trial, which is coming on soon—Oct. 23d to 30th; day not fixed yet. Hence November Word will be quite late; so I return the article, and hope you will get it into THE TRUTH SEEKER, as the issues involved in the discussion are vital and will interest many people. District Attorney Blackmer is to take charge of the case; will not heed the petition to drop it. . . . So you see the outlook is not encouraging. But from now forward I drop all else possible and equip myself for the conflict. We are hard pressed for funds, and shall be glad of all material aid friends can render. Yours ever, E. H. HEYWOOD.

"ANARCHY" AND "INTEGRALISM."

In Liberty for October Mr. Tucker, editor, indulges in a somewhat savage onslaught on Burnette G. Haskell, editor of the San Francisco Truth, in respect to a movement on which it seems Mr. Haskell is entering, and which he calls "an endeavor to reconcile the various factions of Socialists." I wish to intervene, in a brief way, in that discussion, because a terse statement made in it by Mr. Tucker offers a favorable opportunity for indicating the precise point of difference between Anarchism and Pantarchism (no-government and all-government, the government of all by all, for all, through the exhaustiv study and acquisition of the true principles of government). The statement I refer to is this:

"You [Mr. Haskell] are attempting the hopeless, the impossible. Either Liberty or Authority must guide you wholly in your search for Truth. And if you accept Authority for your guide, Falsehood will be your goal. 'You cannot serve two masters.' If you hav not, as I fear you hav, already chosen, then 'choose you this day.'"—Benj. R. Tucker.

I do not see Truth, and hav little knowledge of Mr. Haskell. I am interested in him through Mr. Tucker's own statement. Not only from my point of view is Mr. Haskell's endeavor not futil, but it foreshadows the inevitable outcome of Social Progress. He is, tentativly, and somewhat unguided perhaps by the ultimate philosophy, an Integralist (one of all-sided views), and Mr. Tucker and the Anarchists are in this matter Partialists. By inserting the words "in the search for Truth," Mr. Tucker has made a diversion from the question before him, unless by Truth he means the right adjustment of practical enterprises as well. The point here is not abstract study alone, but a "union of Anarchists and state Socialists," presumably in doctrin and in work. The one exclusiv principle adequate to the complete regulation of this immense sphere of things, is, according to the Anarchists, Liberty. According to Integralism and Pantarchism, Liberty is, indeed, indispensable, and, in the right order, fundamental; while yet it is ever and inevitably counterparted by, and must be adjusted to, the opposit principle—that of Authority. I hav given the platform of Anarchism in the preceding extract signed by Mr. Tucker. The Integral and Pantarchal Platform is contained in the following formula:

1. Liberty, reaching to and including the criticism and the free rejection or acceptance of authority; and
2. Authority, when accepted, in freedom, submitted to, and used in the service of freedom.

Mr. Tucker, in the short extract I hav quoted, has twice fallen back upon "holy writ" for authority, a rare thing for him. If we hav God and Tucker both against us, it is heavy odds; but I stand to my colors, and perhaps Mr. Haskell will not be frightened, either.

First. "You cannot serve two masters." Denied. We all do and must serve two masters, from the cradle to the grave; two fundamental opposit principles, always and everywhere existing in the nature of things; and the whole art of life consists in reconciling them proximately or relativly; as they can never be reconciled absolutely.

Second. "Choose you this day;" meaning one of the two. Denied again. We propose to choose both, every day, and to study the true basis of their relativ adjustment. Mr. Haskell is on the right track; and Mr. Tucker will yet hav to learn of him; though very likely he may lack Mr. Tucker's profundity, and acuteness in seeing clearly the particular principle which he does see. Few men can rival Mr. Tucker in that quality. You, Mr. Editor, will understand me, however, when I affirm that he must, sooner or later, study "the Equation" and "the Wag." Tied to a fixed position or post, a man may fight desperately and with power; but it is a great disadvantage, all the same, to be tethered in that fixed way.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

The Liberal Club.

A marked feature of the last meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was the reappearance upon its platform of the secretary, Mr. Hugh Byron Brown. This gentleman received quite an ovation as he ascended to the platform to perform his official duties, and his success at deciphering the assistant secretary's minutes of the previous meeting provoked renewed applause, which he acknowledged in a graceful manner.

Before introducing Mr. Frederick Cook, the speaker for the evening, Mr. Wakeman, presiding, drew the attention of the audience to a powerful editorial on the Catholic church in the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Everyone should read that editorial and find out what it was that Liberals had to contend with. The newspaper Man, which, he wished it understood, contained the only full report of the Milwaukee Congress of the National Liberal League, was on sale at the door. Mr. Wakeman then seized the opportunity to do himself the honor of introducing Mr. Frederic F. Cook to the audience. Mr. Cook is a Transcendental Spiritualist. This is a rare type of Spiritualist. It is seldom met with, and Mr. Cook was regarded with not a little curiosity. He exhibits no external evidence, however, of being different from the casual citizen.

Mr. Cook's subject was "Spiritualism and Materialism in Liberalism." Starting out with a broad and comprehensiv lack of information as to what Liberalism is, and with a sort of Spiritualism in his mind which no one ever before heard of, he delivered very much such a lecture as might hav been expected under the circumstances. As no one was exactly aware of these circumstances at the outset, however, the lecture was a series of surprises. It satisfied neither Materialist nor Spiritualist, and even Mr. Andrews, who is both, expressed himself as disappointed. A thread of liberty, like a gold wire through a string of brass buttons, pervaded the discourse, and was its redeeming feature. The liberty demanded, however, was that which would allow a man to misrepresent all phases of Liberalism, and it seemed to some as if that was the kind of liberty exercised by the speaker. The points upon which stress was laid were that Liberals could not consistently organize, and that Spiritualists and Materialists should not unite as against the tyranny of the church, because when they had achieved freedom from ecclesiastical interference they would quarrel with each other. Comstockism, humanitarianism, vaccination, compulsory education, and opportunism were denounced in the same breath. Precisely what opportunism is does not appear from the dictionary, but as Mr. Cook has declared it to be something vicious, it is presumably a good thing for Liberals to tie to when they find it. Mr. Courtlandt Palmer has used the word. It is probably one of the technicalities of Sociology and the Religion of Humanity.

When Mr. Cook had finished his discourse the subject of it was declared open for discussion. Mr. Rosevelt was the first to respond. He took the audience back to the days of Madam Roland, and as only ten minutes were allowed him, he did not hav time to fetch them down to the subject of the evening's lecture. After discoursing pleasantly on greenbacks, Lake Champlain, and the Fourth of July, Mr. Rosevelt waved his umbrella, denounced the existing order of things generally, and sat down amid much enthusiasm.

Mr. Wakeman cautioned the speakers who were to follow that they should speak to the subject under discussion. This drew a protest from Mr. Rosevelt, who said liberty was the subject and maintained that that was what he had been talking about. The chairman smiled benignantly upon him, and, at the suggestion of the audience, took the floor himself. By placing the objects and aims of Liberalism in their right light, he made it appear that Mr. Cook had an erroneous conception of the truth. Mr. Wakeman is an involuntary humorist. Without any apparent attempt to be facetious, by mere force of logic, he showed the lecturer to be occupying a position that was quite ridiculous, and caused the audience to laugh immoderately. He (Mr. Wakeman) could not see that between Materialistic and Spiritualistic Liberals there was sufficient divergence of views to justify personal violence.

Mr. Andrews said that philosophy was a big thing, and was all-sided. Universology, in which Mr. Andrews is understood to be somewhat interested, was the only philosophy that took all sides into consideration. There were fundamental differences between the two wings of the Liberal world. Spiritualists and Materialists might agree on some essential points, but the emphasis was differently placed. Each ism had its burning focus, and the two were as wide asunder as the poles. One focus was more brilliant than the other. Mr. Cook represented the first, Mr. Wakeman the second;

> "Yet still between his Darkness and his Brightness
> There passed a mutual glance of great politeness."

Integralism covered the ground from these two points of view, and from all others. There is immense doubt in the minds of some as to how this is to be effected. The last recommendation from the Great Universalist Preacher is a proper study of the Equation and the Wag. If this works according to expectation the lamb will some day lie down outside the lion, and O'Dynamite Rossa will join the Society of Friends, while the Christian world will acknowledge with one accord that Liberals hav rights which it is under obligations not to meddle with.

Mr. Stone explained what Liberalism is as he views it. Dr. Lambert read an extract from a book. Liberalism in a Barnumian sense was a What-is-it. Mr. Wakeman said Dr. Lambert did not know what he was talking about. Dr. Caleb S. Weeks said as much in ten minutes as had been said by all the rest of the speakers. This he was enabled to do not alone by his remarkable facilities for rapid speech, but because he has clear and ready ideas. It is true that he speaks as though each minute was the tenth, and loses some ground by saying the same thing several times, but as the most that he says is worth repeating, this cannot be regarded as altogether a failing. Mr. Samuel P. Putnam broke the silence that followed the interruption of Dr. Weeks's speech by the chairman. Mr. Putnam would be satisfied with nothing but the most perfect liberty. He said hands off to the church, to the state, and to science. He would brook the authority of nothing but unfettered human reason. This, he said, was anarchy. He did not like the name, but would accept it rather than accept authority. Mr. Putnam throws the utmost energy into whatever he says, and could hardly be more earnest or eloquent if pleading for his life than he is in demanding liberty for the minds of others. He fills the platform, a long-felt want, and the bill generally.

Mr. Cook, in making his closing remarks, did not acknowledge that he had been shown the errors of his way, and still held to the same views advanced in his lecture.

The diversity of ideas among the orators made the meeting one of unusual interest, the only pullback to general happiness being the absence of Mr. Shook. On the evening of the 26th Mr. Clinton Furbish is to address the club.

The Boston Liberal Club.

A good attendance greeted Mr. Ellis B. Mackenzie last Sunday morning, when he delivered in an able and effectiv manner his essay entitled, "The Failure of Democracy in America." In his remarks Mr. Mackenzie maintained that democracy in America was a failure, both absolutely and relativly to other forms of government, and that in all its aspects—political, economical, educational, and social. When compared with hereditary monarchy as exemplified in the governments of Europe, and even by some of Asia, the attempted government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" is a failure demonstrated and accepted. The sovereignty of the individual was the only doctrin by which the vexed question could be solved. The position that the Individualists took was that the nature and constitution of the social organism is determined by the nature and attributes of what may be termed the constituent molecule of society, viz., the individual. All social arrangements hav sprung into existence for the sole benefit of the individual. No individual can delegate to another, or to any number of others, the exercise of a right which, as an individual, he does not inherently possess. From the basic declaration of the right to life, liberty, and happiness, it is impossible to derive any authority competent to invade the domain of the individual.

In the discussion which ensued, the words "law," "liberty," "anarchy," "government," etc., were thrown very loosely about from one member to another, and were sometimes handled by the catchers with considerable dexterity; but it must be said, if we follow truth, that some were hit in a manner which appeared to giv pain. Some wanted protected liberty, others the liberty of protection; some, mistaking license for liberty, handled the latter with the license which they so much condemned and deplored. Others wanted to be governed in matters of their choice, but in others to be let alone to do as they please. A few only were so consistent as to class themselvs among those who wanted others to look after and lay down for them their rules of living.

The matter was presented by Mr. Mackenzie in perhaps the most able and interesting discourse that the club has yet listened to. It brought out an intense feeling of interest, and it has been decided to devote the next meeting to a continuance of the discussion.

The club is increasing in members, and its future is very promising.

QUEER things seem to be being done by some members of the Ohio Young Men's Christian Association. According to a recent writer in the Tribune, certain paid members of the Young Men's Christian Association, among whom are Mr. Sinclair, of Dayton, and another gentleman in Springfield, are using their offices, not to promote religion, but to do a brokerage in lecturers. These gentlemen hav undertaken to supply lecturers to churches and brother Young Men's Christian Associations at a profit to themselvs. It is said that Mr. Sinclair's profit on a lecturer is five per cent. of the lecturer's fee. When these lecturers came from the Boston Bureau that Bureau received ten per cent. Thus, by using his sacred office, the thrifty Mr. Sinclair is enabled to make a thousand or two of dollars a year over and above his salary and hav no extra expense for office rent and postage, that being contributed by religious societies. This is really doing a private money-making business through the power and influence of their sacred office. In a word, these gentlemen trade on religion. Recently Mr. Sinclair, of Dayton, sent a secret circular to a New York Young Men's Christian Association disparaging, and, in fact, slandering, certain well-known lecturers who were not supplied through the Dayton Bureau. Mr. L. W. Munhall, of Indianapolis, who recently wrote an article for the Young Men's Christian Association Monthly attacking Drs. Swing, Thomas, and Henry Ward Beecher, is said to be making a profit out of lecturers whom he recommends. Mr. Sinclair and his brothers holding paid offices in the Young Men's Christian Association should leave that organization if they wish to run lecture bureaus. —Evening Journal.

The Sabbath of the Priests.

Nearly every person in Christendom believes there is a peculiar sanctity about Sunday, or that there is some authority for its observance in the Bible. It seems impossible to get the truth impressed on minds that are constantly influenced against it by custom. When the Methodists objected against the publication of the Chicago Times on Sundays, the proprietor, Medill, a great Methodist, asked them "why they objected." The reply was an expression of astonishment at his ignorance and the quotation of the fourth commandment, "Six days shalt thou labor," etc. He answered that this commandment applies to Saturday, and that other days were ordered to be observed as sacred equally with Saturday by the laws of Moses. They replied that the order to observe the seventh day had been transferred to the first day. He asked for scriptural authority. It could not be furnished. He then turned on them, and showed that not only is there no authority in the scripture for observing Sunday, but that it is against the observation of any day. He then showed how this Sunday observance originated in an order of Constantine, the Roman emperor. Gozeman, in his "Church History," written in the fifth century, says (in book 1, chap. viii): "Constantine also enjoined the observance of the day termed the Lord's day, which the Jews call first day, and the Greeks dedicate to the sun. He honored that day because on it Christ arose from the dead."

Here is the first intimation we get of any legalized observance of the Lord's day, adopted from the universal custom of the pagans. Its very name shows its origin, Sun's day, as does the name of the seventh show its origin, Saturn's day or God's day. Luther and Calvin and Melanchthon, and all the great leaders of Protestantism, denounced in the strongest terms the observance of Sunday as a peculiarly holy day. But priestcraft soon found that unless it could compel the people to listen to it exclusivly during at least one-seventh of the time, its hold on them would soon be lost. Hence the priests of Protestantism soon became more strict observers of Sunday as a holy day than ever were the Catholics. So the Mohammedan priests, perverting their great founder's teachings, began to honor him as a demi-god, though he continually protests in the Koran that he is merely a preacher, and they fixed on a holy day, Friday. Among ourselvs, nothing is more common than to hear ministers and teachers trying to impress on their hearers the peculiar holiness of Sunday. They pervert the forth commandment, and their hearers never pause to think whether it has anything to do with their first day. There are millions who actually believe that Almighty God ordained the observance of this day, and is angry at even little children who play on that day. But even in the fifteenth century, the English Protestants did not regard the day as sacred. Nicander Nucius, who was of the suite of the embassador of Charles V. to Henry VIII., says, speaking of the Protestants of England of that time, "They work during all the days of the week, but respect the day named after our Lord, and on that day assemble in their churches." Luther's direction to his congregation on this was as follows: "If any shall attempt to impinge on Christian liberty, and enjoin on you to observe this day as peculiarly sacred, then I order you to work on it, to play on it, to sing on it, and dance on it." Similiar language was used by all the great reformers. Nowadays it is wicked to dance on any day, let alone Sunday, such has been the progress of priestcraft. Professing to make the Bible their guide, they rarely look beyond their own made creeds. They transfer the order to observe Saturday to Sunday by their own ordinances, and then falsely teach us it is of biblical authority. Wonderful it is, to those who know the real origin of Sunday observance, to see these priests and their deluded followers using every exertion to prevent all travel, all labor, all amusement, all the signals of ordinary life, even closing to poor laboring men the public libraries on Sunday, because of its peculiar holiness. The orders of their God himself in their Bible to observe Saturday, and the more solemn orders to observe certain other days "forever through all their generations," are coolly disregarded and set aside, and the order of Constantine the emperor is substituted, and the people are told this is God's law.

HOLT.

The Result of the Ohio Election.

The church-ridden Republican leaders in Ohio hav received their just reward. The state has gone Democratic, and the "Russell bill" is largely to be credited as a factor in the changed political aspect thereabout. A special despatch to the Sunday Herald (Boston) on the eve of the election affirmed that "the Spiritualists in the state, nine-tenths of whom hav heretofore voted the Republican ticket, will vote the straight Democratic ticket Tuesday, because of the passage of the Russell bill requiring mediums and clairvoyants to take out a $300 license;" and now comes First Controller Lawrence, of the United States treasury department, as noted in the Evening Star, of Washington, Oct. 11th, with an indorsement of the statement, as follows:

"First Controller Lawrence said to-day, in conversing upon the Ohio election, that in his opinion the Republicans lost nearly 20,000 votes of Spiritualists who voted against the Republicans on account of the law passed by the legislature imposing a tax on clairvoyants and Spiritualistic exhibitions."

We hav private information that this same gentleman has represented himself glad—and what lover of equal rights for all will not be so?—that the state of Ohio has gone against his party, as it will teach a lesson of religious toleration in certain quarters, and that the Spiritualists are a power in the land, and cannot be summarily disposed of by statutes inaugurated by the self-righteous on the one hand, or plastic politicians on the other.—Banner of Light.

Marriage and Divorce Under the Sole Jurisdiction of the States.

Not long since the Protestant Episcopal bishops of New England denounced all state laws of divorce, and considerable comment was made on the position of the Rev. Dr. Dix, who echoed the opinions of the ecclesiastical heads of the church north of his diocese. More recently, the Rev. Adirondack Murray, who sojourned for some time in Texas in self-sought exile, lectured in Chickering Hall on free marriage and free divorce, and made a palpable hit by the expression of liberal, advanced opinions. But later still, a Catholic Convention of prelates in this city issued a pastoral letter, in which "mixed marriages," as they are strangely called, are set down as abhorrent to Rome. That sort of marriage between Catholic and Protestant is prohibited, and when permitted at all it is under a promis from the latter that the offspring shall be brought up in the church over which Leo presides. Held as an institution, jure divino, the prelates insist that no marriage must take place unless the banns are published for three weeks from the pulpit, and forbid the marriage of any adherent of their church by a Protestant minister under pain of excommunication. As for the state divorce laws, these are, of course, ignored. Later still, a committee was appointed by the Protestant Episcopal church, now in convention in Philadelphia, to report for or against the incorporation in the rubric of a prohibition to the effect that no clergyman of that denomination shall marry divorced persons. The question was dodged by the committee reporting that it was at this time inexpedient. Immediately thereafter the Anti-Divorce League, composed of New England and other clergymen of the convention, met and aired their opinions on the secular law of marriage and divorce in the several states. All that is of a piece with the roaring of Talmage last Sunday on "God in the Constitution," and the return to medievalism by numbers of Protestant ministers. Now, without the slightest leaning toward either extreme, or partiality for any sect, the secular press should freely express but one opinion, and it should be that all interference with our state and federal laws and institutions by ecclesiastics is unrepublican and unjust. All religions are tolerated and protected here, and that should insure respect for our laws. Already there is much talk of taxing church property of all denominations, and the excesses of ecclesiastical bodies will augment the number of its advocates. Washington and all the members who formed the convention to create the Federal Constitution would not profane the name of the deity by mixing its august majesty with the provisions of a political instrument, and especially as that instrument was to ignore church and state—a union in Europe which led to appalling crimes and bloodshed. The ecclesiastics ought to understand that marriage is and will remain a civil contract, and our laws only permit them to celebrate it. In this country the right of any priesthood to marry contracting parties is denied. Only the civil magistrates who administer in other words, to perfect a civil contract. The legislature can in a moment take away from priest, rabbi, and parson the permission to celebrate marthe civil law hav the right under it to marry parties; riage, and, in fact, as it is only a civil contract, its perfection by ecclesiastics is in violation of the genius and intent of American institutions.—Sunday Mercury.

A Liberal Revival at Union City, Michigan.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On Monday evening Oct. 8th, a large and enthusiastic crowd of Liberals congregated at the Opera House to listen to Mr. Charles Watts, of London, England, and Mr. George Chainey, of Boston, Mass., now traveling together and lecturing for the cause of Liberalism.

"Fallacy of Popular Theology" was the subject of Mr. Watts's lecture, "The Clergy" that of Mr. Chainey's. They are fluent speakers, logical reasoners, hav a wonderful command of language, and handle their subjects with a spirit that commends by its earnestness. For two and a half hours they held the audience spell-bound, pouring forth eloquence exceedingly rare, and seldom if ever surpassed. Though being full of wit and humor, they were frequently interrupted with loud applause and hearty laughter.

The profoundest attention was paid to the speakers by the audience, and all appreciated what was said, except it be a few narrow-minded, bigoted orthodox who hav no reverence for anything but rotten theology and blind superstition. In all, it was a precious boon to the Liberals here.

These gentlemen are a luminous light in the cause of Liberalism, and are doing what they can in severing the roots of superstition with the axe of reason; thus freeing the people from that bondage of what Karl Heinzen called the stony sum of all vices and all despotism, of all darkness and barbarity—the church.

They challenged the orthodox clergy to meet them in debate. Not one came forward to accept the offer, but as usual kept their coward's castle.

Athens, Mich., Oct. 10, 1883. JAS. E. BUNN.

An Incident in a Horse-car.

Brother Seaver, of the Investigator, tells this tale:

A little affair, hardly worth relating, but there is a moral to it, occurred the other morning as an Infidel was riding into the city. An old lady, lame and poorly dressed, and of perhaps eighty years, hobbled into the car, and the Infidel offered her his seat.

"I am very much obliged to you, sir, for your kindness," she said.

"You are perfectly welcome, madam; the aged and infirm should always be assisted," was the response.

"That is good Christian doctrin, and it becomes you," was the reply.

The Infidel smiled and bowed, but said nothing, merely biting his lips and looking as if he wanted to say, "Wise judges are we of one another!"

In a moment or two the conductor asked her for her ticket, but she was unable to find it, and said she must hav dropped it when entering the car.

"Our rules are strict, and you must leave," said the conductor.

"No! she must stay, and I will pay her fare," interrupted the Infidel, handing him a ticket.

The act created quite a sensation in the car, and while two or three of the passengers said, "That's a good man," the old lady was very profuse in her thanks.

"Now," she said, "I know you are a good Christian, and perhaps you are a minister of some church."

"Madam, you mistake; I am not a minister, nor a church-member, nor a Christian, but an Infidel," was his reply.

She looked more amazed than when she missed her ticket. "An Infidel!" said she; "well, I declare! I wish that all ministers and church-members were as kind as you are."

The Infidel bowed, and shaking hands with the complimentary old lady, left the car, and, musing on his adventure, took his way into Appleton street, ascended the lofty stairs of the Paine Memorial, and went to work on the Investigator.

And adorns it by pointing this moral:

Lend a helping hand to all in need, especially the aged and feeble; for though you may not by so doing "entertain angels unawares," you will be rewarded by the exercise of "the quality of mercy which is twice blessed—it blesseth him that givs, and him that takes."

It is a little incident that we hav given in the above, and hardly worth mentioning, yet it is little things that oftentimes afford pleasure to the giver and joy to the receiver. Most beautifully and truly does the poet and dramatist, Mr. Talfourd, say, in his play of "Ion:"

"'Tis a little thing
To giv a cup of water; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May giv a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisit than when Nectarean juice
Renews the life of joy in happiest hours.
'Tis a little thing
To speak a word of common comfort
That by daily use hath almost lost its sense;
Yet on the ear of him who thought to die unmourned,
'Twill fall like choicest music."

Book Notes.

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S ALMANAC FOR 1884. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant. Published by the Freethought Publishing company, London.

This is a very handy Freethought compendium, embracing as it does dates of all the principal events of past years with which Freethinkers were connected, and a resume of the work accomplished in the year now rapidly drawing to a close, and a concise report of the trials for blasphemy which hav in 1883 disgraced England. The varying phases of Mr. Bradlaugh's parliamentary struggles are given, and we commend the account to the attention of those papers which are constantly making erroneous statements concerning it. Besides these important data, the Almanac contains lists of the National Secular societies in England, which now number several hundred; a statement of the objects of the London Anti-compulsory Vaccination Society; some statistics on marriage and divorce in Switzerland; a report of the finances of England, and a table of wages, interest, etc.; objects of the Malthusian League; a brief list of Freethought societies on the continent, and reference to the United States—in the latter of which occur several minor errors—the whole made pungent by some jokes especially recommended to Mr. Justice North, the legal luminary who sentenced the men convicted of blasphemy. This is the fifteenth year of issue of this almanac. It is a valuable publication, and we hope to hav a similiar one for America before long.

FREIDENKER ALMANAC FOR 1884. Seventh annual edition. Published by the Freidenker Publishing Co., Milwaukee, Wis. Price, 25 cents.

Those of our readers who understand the German language will find this the almanac for their use. It contains the chronologies of different nations, with their calendars, many facts concerning our solar system, and several short articles and poems. It may be obtained at the Freidenker office.

Lectures and Meetings.

H. L. GREEN will lecture in St. Petersburgh, Pa., on Friday evening of this week, and on Saturday evening following at Edinburgh, Pa.

MOSES HULL has removed to Cleveland, Ohio, and will accept calls to lecture within easy distance of that city. His address is 1289 Lincoln avenue.

COMMENCING Sunday, Nov. 4th, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, the well-known trance speaker, will hold a series of Sunday evening meetings at Chickering Hall, this city.

THE Spiritualists and Liberalists of Van Buren and adjoining counties will hold their next quarterly meeting at Grand Army Hall, in Bangor, Mich., on Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 3 and 4, 1883, commencing on Saturday, at 2:30 P.M., and continuing over Sunday. C. A. Andrus, of Flushing, Mich., and Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, of South Haven, Mich., are engaged as speakers; and Mrs. Olie C. Denslow, of South Bend, Ind., as singer.

ONE of Pastor J. C. Whittmore's cases of Infidel apostasy, it will be recollected, was Charles Southwell. Dr. Aveling is now in receipt of a long communication from a friend of Mr. Southwell, which shows that he died an Infidel. An extract from it reads:

"My personal reminiscences take me back to the most popular and celebrated Atheistical controversialist of his day, Charles Southwell (originally a cabinet-maker), whose acquaintance I chanced to make when fulfilling a theatrical engagement at Liverpool. I attended Southwell's death-bed, and was consequently a witness of that last eventful scene which sooner or later awaits us all. My dear friend died at Auckland, New Zealand, on the 7th August, 1860, in the forty-sixth year of his age. The disease to which he succumbed was consumption, brought on by exposure to intense cold in the Pyrenean mountains, when serving as a soldier in the British Legion during the Carlist-Isabella war in Spain. For several weeks before his death he continued to receive the visit of his friends and talked to them with his old liveliness. To a Christian minister, an exceedingly good man, who frequently called Southwell the greatest orator in the world, he said: 'Ah, my dear friend, did you pray for me last night?' This good minister, with tears in his eyes, answered; 'Indeed I did with all my heart. I prayed for your speedy recovery.' 'And assuming that there is such a being as a God, do you think he would permit me to suffer like this?' 'God knows best,' was the reply. 'My friend,' answered the dying sufferer, 'I know that I am on my death-bed; I know also that my views with reference to God or gods are the same as ever. Why all this fuss about dying? A good, wise, humane God would never hav occasioned his creatures a moment's needless suffering. I hav said what I hav repeated upon numberless occasions, and still maintain that Theist, Deist, polytheist, Atheist, or other terms having reference to God or gods are altogether meaningless. All men must die, and the sooner I shuffle off this coil the sooner I shall cease to suffer. Addison sent for a friend to let him see how a Christian could die. I shall die as calmly as he, finding more real consolation in the affection of the living friends of my way of thinking, who now surround me, than in any of the senseless creeds of Christianity.' Such were the last words of my dear friend Southwell, addressed to the Rev. Mr. Campbell, a few hours before his death. Whenever Southwell's friends approached his bed, his noble features would light up with a glow of inexpressible tenderness. Gradually he sank into a state of complete unconsciousness, passing to that bourne from whence no traveler returns, in the presence of his devoted wife and dearest friend. After life's fitful fever, he slept well."

Arthur B. Moss, in the Secular Review, challenges Mr. Whittmore to debate four propositions, suggested by the tract, which Mr. Moss undertakes to prove. They are, 1st. That the majority of the persons mentioned in the leaflet by initials were not in any sense "leaders" in the Freethought ranks; 2d. That George Sexton and Joseph Barker never had a settled conviction on religious subjects; that they were everything in turns and nothing long; 3d. That the Freethought party has lost nothing by the recantation of these persons; that for every Freethinker who has been converted to Christianity there are hundreds of Christians converted to Freethought; 4th. That the "real leaders" remain Freethinkers to the end. As Mr. Whittmore pretended to want a platform debate, it is hoped he will accept.

ON a slippery day a bishop and a friend were walking together, and the latter slipped. "Sinners," said the bishop sententiously, "stand in slippery places." "So I see," replied the other; "I can't."

Some Facts About Prohibition.

[The following statement of the effects of prohibition in Maine will be of interest to both our prohibition and anti-prohibition readers, and may furnish the basis of some new arguments, which, as the League has submitted to the consideration of Liberals a platform containing an anti-prohibition plank, are likely to be many and heated. Under date of Oct. 15th a Maine man writes to the Sun:]

Under the fanatics the public bars of this city were all closed in 1877, and the liquor trade, though not decreased in volume, became degraded. The Republicans, who controled the prohibition vote, had made Jerrard sheriff of Penobscot county. There were searches and seizures without number or stoppage, and men dodged in by back doors, took drinks from "bottle-carriers" and from fallen women, joined so-called clubs, the primary object of whose formation was to obtain liquor and a place to drink it, but which soon grew to be gambling dens, and formed the foundation of the faro banks which until recently cursed Bangor. Not a drop less of liquor was consumed, but the liquor that was sold got to be the vilest stuff purchasable. Jerrard's régime was a costly one for Penobscot county, and prohibition lost much.

In 1880 the Fusion or Democratic-Greenback party elected a set of county officers very unlike the Republicans, especially as regards the liquor question. There was a decided change in city affairs, and, although the police often descended upon dives and on retailers who had no federal license, bars were soon doing business openly all over town. Thus matters hav continued ever since, although the Democrats only elected their sheriff at the last election. Public sentiment seems to be decidedly against prohibition in Bangor, irrespectiv of politics. The Republicans hav played with the temperance radicals for years, and the latter seem never to hav realized the fact until the other day, when Neal Dow, in a letter to an advocate of prohibition in Massachusetts, declared that "the time has come for us to break with the Republican party."

The latest effort to enforce the law in Bangor has proved an immense failure. In fact, not a blow has been struck by those who were expected to bring about a revolution. The governor, at the request of a certain straight-backed clique, and in the face of a remonstrance by many influential citizens, appointed two constables to enforce the law of prohibition in Bangor, and then lay back, imagining that he had done his part and won the lasting sympathy of the temperance element of Penobscot county. The appointments created considerable excitement at first, but as the days passed on with no signs of war, fears were allayed, and the bars continued open. The next move was the published declination to accept the office by one of the appointees, Capt. William Flowers. As there is no likelihood that the other man will accept the post, this will probably end the matter, and the men of Bangor will walk up manfully as usual and take their drinks.

It is estimated that there are 200 open bars in the city of Bangor, some of them finely fitted up. One small one, lately opened, cost $1,500 for interior fittings. During the Eastern Maine Fair, one bar sold $500 worth of drinks in one day. The hotels all hav bars, two of these being finely fitted up. The hour for closing all bars is fixed by the city at 10 o'clock P.M. As every restaurant has a bar, and as when the bar closes the whole establishment closes, and as the hotels are all on the American plan, it will be seen that a hungry man reaching Bangor at one minute past 10 o'clock P.M. stands a good chance of remaining hungry until next morning. The hotels keep their bars open until 10 o'clock for the public generally, and drinks are served to guests as late as midnight and on Sundays, but there are no bars open on Sunday. One noticeable feature of the trade in Bangor is the great extent to which beer and ale hav taken the place of whisky and other hard liquors. There is less drunkenness in Bangor to-day than there used to be in prohibition times, and the business of the police court is not half what it used to be, because the liquors are of a better quality, and they are drunk more moderately and more regularly. These are facts supported by figures. Bangor is to-day the most orderly of Maine's cities.

Everybody seems satisfied with the present state of things, and three-quarters of the population would be pleased to hav the prohibitionists get down and out for good. The mayor of Bangor is a temperance man, but not a prohibitionist. He was asked by the governor of the state what assistance he would require to stop the selling of liquor in Bangor, and replied, "Forty extra policemen and $50,000." The mayor was asked by your correspondent if he thought this assistance would be sufficient, and he replied that he was uncertain as to that. When asked if he favored prohibition he said "No" very decidedly.

Elsewhere in Maine, however, the situation is very different, although it is next to impossible to find a settlement in which a drink cannot be procured by some means. In Portland, for instance, the largest and the most stagnant city in the state, public sentiment tolerates a continuance of the war on the liquor trade, and yet liquor is sold there. It is to be found in cellars, hotel basements, and cheap groggeries, in club rooms, and in houses of ill repute, to which places people sneak with guilty step as though it were a crime to drink. On last Fourth of July the annual celebration was attended by all of Portland and considerable delegations from other cities, and one-half at least of the men in this multitude drank more or less, and got all they wanted. Some got more than they should hav drunk. Instead of walking up to an open bar and taking their drinks, though. they entered houses through the back doors, and sought the seclusion of hotel basements, where wretched stuff was easily obtained. The effect of the prohibitory law was that poor rum in a basement was substituted for a fair quality at an open bar.

In Lewiston, a manufacturing city on the Androscoggin river, the radicals hav things their own way, also, and imagin that they prevent the selling of beer to the factory operativs. But it is the same old story as in Portland. There are no decent bars, but a multitude of dives, in which gambling and other criminal practices are combined with beer selling. The Dexter people hav discovered a brilliant scheme for overreaching the liquor constables and obtaining all they want of the ardent. They import it in quantities from New Brunswick to Bangor, where it is allowed to lay in bond at the custom house. The importers sell the packages, which are small, to individual purchasers, and when these packages are brought to Dexter directed to private citizens the constables cannot seize the stuff.

Our London Letter.

The black-coated gentry hav mustered in strong force at Reading to attend a church congress being held there, and bishops are as plentiful as blackberries. After speaking a few hours each day in senseless drivel, these meek and poverty-stricken individuals, in strict imitation of the humble Nazarene, retire to the residence of the richest inhabitants of the place, and so far from contenting themselvs, like that pattern for all true believers, Lazarus, with the crumbs, take care to get a good seat at the table of Dives, and fare sumptuously every day. When good living is to be had, they are willing to risk the chance of making a bed hereafter of Abraham's bosom.

The archbishop of Canterbury assured his hearers that for the church "nothing was secular but what was sinful, and whatever a good man could do the church could do or help him to do better." If this refers to plundering defenseless individuals I quite believe it, as the church was always ready to help any one at that game if it could share the spoil. The bishop of Oxford must be a man of keen observation, for he has discovered that the great body of university students are prayerful individuals, which probably accounts for the fact that a university town is about as moral a place as a garrison town. He also took occasion to defend the action of himself and brother obstructivs in throwing out the marriage with a deceased wife's sister bill, and congratulates his party in so manfully stepping into the breach, and saving the country from total ruin, as it seems that were this bill passed the purity of English homes would immediately be broken up, and the vengeance of his God would fall heavily on the nation.

A series of papers hav been read on science in its relation to the Christian faith, and most of the speakers hav given their opinion that the doctrin of evolution is all right, and you can find it plainly stated in the Bible if you only know where to look for it; but as they appear to hav forgotten to giv references to that scientific work, I fear it would be time lost to endeavor to find it out. Scientists must feel considerably easier in their minds now the church has kindly consented to admit that perhaps they may not be so wrong after all. The clergy knew about it all along, but as they never do and never hav interfered in matter outside religious questions, they did not do so in this case. One or two of the speakers, however, who were not quite so smart as the others, but more honest, stuck out for the old-fashioned creation theory, but they were soon set upon, and were no doubt hauled over the coals in private for interfering.

One learned bishop used that most unanswerable argument, If evolution was once in force it must still be going on; and as he couldn't see any of it, what proof was there of the existence of such a law? He was greatly cheered, but as those who fully admitted the doctrin received an equal ovation, not much satisfaction could be gained by such applause. It seems the custom at these gatherings to cheer everybody who speaks, no matter what he says; but an average orthodox audience, though large in number, is small in brains, and if a man with a handle to his name talks any rubbish for half an hour or so, his hearers, though they cannot make anything out of it, think it must be very clever and deep and learned, and so they can't be far wrong if they turn on the applause and pretend they know all about it.

It seems there is a great dearth of lay helpers in the church, and although there are plenty of parsons, they hav too much to do, and visiting the poor and outcast encroaches too much on their valuable time, which can be much better employed in dining out and looking after the welfare of the more wealthy female sheep; so it would be a glorious thing to get a plentiful supply of humbler individuals to do the dirty work cheaply, or, as was suggested, they would get a better reward hereafter if they charged nothing here. It was enjoined upon those who were eager for the job that they would not interfere with the spiritual prerogativs of the parson of the parish, and must not mind being snubbed occasionally by that dignitary, and on the other hand the clergy were recommended to be patient with their helpers. I suppose that means, if the parson loses his temper, he is not to kick his assistant too hard or too often. Doubtless with such splendid inducements held out, there will be a rush for places, and all the vacancies will soon be filled up.

A parson from Wales suggested that the church wardens should look after the cash, and the clergy hav nothing to do with the collections. This man certainly had a sense of humor, and his remark must hav made a few of his brothers feel rather small. The listeners, however, being naturally dense, failed to appreciate the joke, which ought to hav brought down the house.

One individual thought that employers of labor might do much for their work-people, not by paying them better wages, or giving them a share in the profits, but in the way of distributing tracts, and impressing on them the blessings of poverty and humility; but this advice was scarcely needed, as Christian manufacturers practice that game all their lives, and hav not much to learn in that respect.

Yours fraternally, J. D.

London, Oct. 1, 1883.

Science vs. Theology.

To the Editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel: Your report of the Rev. Geo. H. Ide's sermon, last Sunday, on the Liberal League Congress, has interested many who may like to see how "religion" looks from the secular, unclerical point of view. Your readers will see the whole story at a glance, if they will but look at that splendid picture now in the Art Gallery of the Milwaukee Exposition called "St. Helena's Dedication of the Infant Constantine." There the Christian science, or theory of the world or cosmogony, is given to the eye as a three-story world tenement. The autocrat of this world which he created for his own glory resides with angels and saints in the heaven or upper story. The pope, apostles, and their ministers occupy the earth, which is the middle story, devoted to the propagation of human souls and their training for heaven, or for the lower story, called the purgatory and hell, where the devil reigns. In the picture referred to St. Michael is using his sword vigorously on the devils there who would otherwise upset the foundations of the whole "firmament" of earth and heaven. Now, to the Liberal (emancipated) eye, Christianity is no stronger than the science and cosmogony of this picture, which is simply a slice of St. Augustine's "City of God," put in beautiful form and color. We say no stronger, because all there is of Christianity is contained in it and is simply a deduction from it. For its God was the creator of this world and of Father Adam, whose children are, therefore, his creatures and lawful subjects. To show his power and, therefore, to increase his glory, he could drown them all out, or finally hand all but a few redeemed ones to the hells. The fall of man and, therefore, also his redemption by Christ are parts of this story, and meaningless without its cosmogony of a creation and the fall of man and government of this God. This story, in a word, is Christian theology or "religion," which our orthodox clergy are insisting shall continue to be the foundation of our practical lives and duties.

The important question of the age is: Is this creation and fall story true? The answer of science, by its astronomy, geology, and ethnology, is decisiv that it is not. And the equally important fact, we may say, but for its evil consequences, the joke of the matter, is that nearly everybody has found this out except the poor fellows chained to their pulpits. If our reverend critic will, for instance, propound this theological theory of the world to any honest German he may happen to meet in your city, the reply will be: "Mein freund, das ist ausgespielt," (that is all played out), and over "zwei lager" he may learn from his Teutonic friend that the world in which we are actually living is not that of Moses, Joshua, Jonah, or Christ, or "the pope," but the new world made known by Copernicus, Bruno, Galileo, Newton, Laplace, Goethe, Darwin, Haeckel, and Spencer. Now, in view of this tremendous change of base of the world, which has in fact given to man a new heaven and a new earth, and the fact that even the common people hav found it out, how idle is it for Mr. Ide to hide his head in the sand, like a pursued ostrich, and pretend that nothing is the matter. The conflict between this old theology and science is irrepressible. They cannot both be true explanations of the same thing, viz., of the world in which we liv. Of course the scientific theory of the world and of man, and of his lot and fate, will prevail. It follows that the religion of man will change its base from theology to science, just as every art and interest of man has already done from agriculture and commerce to law and education. The use of the word "religion," too, in this sense, is correct enough, Mr. Ide to the contrary notwithstanding. He uses the word as synonymous with the Christian religion, which he seems to think the only one in this country. But in science and in fact there are necessarily just as many religions in the world as there are theories of the world. In our favored land we hav Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Mormons, and Indian Fetichists and many smaller "religions," all of them to the Liberal eye superstitions, that is, as the etymology of that words means, they hav been left behind by the progress of science in bringing to light the new and true theory of the world. Mr. Ide seems to claim all these as one religion and that his; but if he takes them all to heaven with him Liberals would suggest that St. Michael be transferred thither from hell also, for he may, judging from theological history, find something to cut and slash besides devils.

Taking religion in this true ethnic and scientific sense, it is the sum of man's relations to the world and his fellows, and his and their future. Science is the true exponent of these relations, and, therefore, science is the only true basis of religion and the very essence of it, and upon that basis now all social, industrial, and political duties of man must necesarily rest. The platform of the Liberal League Congress is one of the last efforts to further this result. We defy any one who reads it to say that it is not true, and that if it could be carried out it would not bring a practical heaven on earth, instead of that flimsy, theological, third-story one which Galileo's telescope swept out of existence three hundred years ago.

If Mr. Ide has any true religion of the nineteenth century in him, let him take his text from that platform, next Sunday, as the last of the true gospels which hav come to him. There lies his best chance to work for the true millennium. But our reverend critic is full of word chopping to show that "scientists" are not opposed to his theological religion. On this point he can deceive no one, not even himself, however much he might be pleased to do so. That science is exactly the theory of the world opposit to theology, we hav shown above. That the Christians so knew and now know, is proved by their church's persecution of every light-bearer of science they could reach, from the burning of Bruno for proclaiming the motion of the earth and the infinity of space and of worlds, down to this very sermon by the reverend gentleman himself in opposition to our Liberal Congress and its announcement of "the Republic of Man" and how to realize it, instead of "the City of God." The notion that the special scientists, who may possibly be a majority of the American Science Association, settle the drift of science as the great philosophy of the world, is simply absurd, in view of the general conduct and tendency of the churches and of science for three hundred years. These specialists are largely theologians or metaphysicians, studying science, or rather playing at it. But the materials which they bring to light will be used by some philosophic scientist or generalizer, like Comte, Spencer, Fiske, or Ward, who uses science in its largest and general sense, to make still more complete the new world and its new life, as against the old.

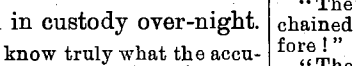
T. B. WAKEMAN.

Paul's Trial at Jerusalem.

The chiliarch retained Paul in custody over-night.

"And the next day he wished to know truly what the accusation was which the Jews brought against him. And he unbound him, and commanded the chief priests and the whole company of their head men [Gr. sunedrion, "sanhedrin"] to assemble, and he took Paul, and brought him down and placed him among them. And when Paul had looked on the assembly [sanhedrin] of them he said: Men, my brethren, I hav lived in all good conscience before God up to this day. And Ananias the priest commanded those who stood by his side to smite Paul on the mouth" (xxii, 30: xxiii, 1, 2).

The Greek codices hav "high priest." Ananias was high priest A.D. 48 to 50, and possibly till 55; then came Jonathan II., who was succeeded by Ismael, A.D. 56–62. Very few authorities date Paul's trial at Jerusalem prior to A.D. 56; we note only four, to wit, the Paschal Chronicle, A.D. 53 or 54; Bengel, 53; Helvecus, 55; and Petavius, 55. All the rest put it from 56 to 63, except Wise, who says 63, and emphatically denies that Ananias could hav been high priest at the time indicated in Acts. The exact year when Ananias was superseded by Jonathan cannot be determined. Wise thinks it was about A.D. 51; we allow 55 as the latest limit; but the reasonable supposition is that it was several years earlier, for Josephus tells us that "he [Jonathan] it was who had desired Cæsar to send him [Felix] as procurator of Judea" (Ant. xx, 8, §5). This would imply that Jonathan was high priest before Felix came to Judea, but Jonathan might hav been subordinate to Ananias at that time. The conduct of Jonathan displeased Felix, and Josephus says that the governor procured the death of the high priest by hiring the leader of a band of robbers to kill him (Ibid). After this event the Egyptian false prophet appeared, and some time after him the writer of Acts (or the interpolator) pretends that Paul came to Jerusalem.



There is no conceivable way of having Ananias preside at the trial of Paul before the sanhedrin but by supposing he was yet living, and though deposed by Roman authority, was high priest de facto, while Ismael was only a de jure figure-head from A.D. 56 to 60 or 62.

But let us resume the narrativ:

"And Paul said to him: God is hereafter to smite thee, thou whited wall. For sittest thou judging me agreeably to law, while thou transgressest the laws and commandest to smite me? And those standing by said to him, Dost thou reproach the priest [Gr. "high priest"] of God? Paul said to them, I was not aware, my brethren, that he was the priest [Gr. high priest]; for it is written, Thou shalt not curse the ruler of thy people." [xxiii, 3–5).

The Biblical quotations in the New Testament generally agree with the Septuagint, but not always. The Arameans had a translation of the Old Testament, made directly from the Hebrew, and it is supposed to be as old as the New Testament Syriac (Murdock's Syr. N. T., app. 2). We hav never looked at this Old Testament Peshito until now. We find that, while the Greek of Acts xxiii, 5 ("Thou shalt not curse the ruler of thy people") agrees literally with a part of Exodus xxii, 28, in the Septuagint, there is just as literal an agreement in the Syriac words of the two Peshitos.

The Syriac, like the Hebrew, was written from right to left, thus:

Literally and consecutivly translated this passage reads "The ruler | of thy people | not | shalt thou curse."

How could it be possible that Paul was unaware of the presence of the high priest who presided over the sanhedrin? Various explanations of this mistake are attempted. But all futil. Paul had been in Jerusalem seven days, and was in the temple the day before with other Jews. And when he was permitted to address the crowd on the stairs of the castle, he said, "The high priest is my witness."

And here we subjoin some criticisms by the learned Rabbi Wise (Orig. of Chris. chap. xiii):

"Paul could not hav entered the temple before his seven days of purification were over." (See Acts xxi, 26.)

"In a city governed by Mosaic laws, and by a system of police regulation, a row like the one described by Luke is utterly impossible."

"The evangelical accounts in regard to Jesus and his disciples, as well as in regard to Paul, hav been falsified with the special intention of flattering the Romans."

"In the evangelical writings only, the Jews rage against their own sons and brothers, and the Romans defend them. . . . History suddenly belies itself, and a people turns treacherous to itself. The thing is impossible; a child almost can see it."

"Every Jew we meet in the Acts, Gamaliel excepted, is a perfect devil."

"The Roman captain could not hav suspected Paul to be the Egyptian whose avowed intention it was to free Jerusalem from her Roman usurpers."

"Either the populace was not as excited as Luke says, or they were not silenced so easily. Either Paul was not beaten by the populace, or he made no speech."

"Luke says they were gratified to hear him speak in the Hebrew tongue. Knowing that he was a Jew speaking to Jews, how could they expect him to speak otherwise than in their own dialect? . . . This notice was evidently put in by one who, unacquainted with the precise state of things, thought the Greek was spoken in Jerusalem as frequently as the peculiar dialect of the country, only that the populace preferred the latter."

"I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest; so he did not know him who was to be his witness!"

"The captain was alarmed that he had arrested and chained a Roman citizen, as if that had never happened before!"

"The captain of the castle, an officer of inferior rank, commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear; among them, of course, the high priest, who was politically the most important personage in the land."

"This council is not the regular Sanhedrin; it is the council of priests, as in the case of Stephen."

(The Greek version has sunedrion in both cases).

"The barbarian of a high priest . . . commands somebody to smite Paul on the mouth . . . John, in his gospel (xviii, 19), copied this entire scene into the trial of Jesus."

"Luke had no more knowledge of a high priest and his court than of the man in the moon."

There are many more points that we might quote from the learned rabbi with edification. Some of them, of course, would not apply to a period a hundred years prior, as he will readily see. But he is right in the main, and proves that the writer of Acts was an ignorant gentile.

"And as Paul knew that a part of the people were of the Sadducees, and a part of the Pharisees, he cried out in the assembly: Men, my brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; and for the hope of the resurrection of the dead and judged" (6).

Canon Farrar, who excuses Paul's sudden vehemence in calling the high priest a whitened wall, by supposing that the apostle's eye-sight was defectiv, is staggered at the point where he says, "I am a Pharisee." Conscious that this was a false issue, the canon can only say in the apostle's defense:

"Let us make every possible deduction and allowance for a venial infirmity; for a sudden and momentary 'æconomy,' far less serious than that into which his great brother apostle had swerved at Antioch" (St. Paul, 542).

Rabbi Wise is more emphatic on this point. He says,

"Luke's moral conception was rather poor, as we hav seen on former occasions; but to make a liar of Paul is a little too bad" (Orig. of Chris., 490).

But the false issue had precisely the effect that the writer of Acts conceived and designed.

"And when he had said this, the Pharisees and Sadducees fell upon one another, and the people were divided" (7).

The original accusation was, preaching against the law and bringing a gentile (Aramean) into the temple. But now Paul says he is accused of a Pharisaic heresy.

"For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, nor angels, nor a spirit, but the Pharisees confess all these" (8).

Mr. Wise alleges that the belief of the Sadducees on this question is unknown to this day; and maintains with plausibility that on the doctrin of the resurrection Paul was an orthodox Pharisee (Orig. of Chris., 370). But as our Paul lived a hundred and twenty-five after Mr. Wise's Paul (i. e., Acher) it is quite possible that our Paul was a pioneer in preaching to Jews the doctrin of the resurrection.

"And there was great vociferation. And some scribes of the party of the Pharisees rose up and contended with them, and said, We hav found nothing evil in this man; for if a spirit or an angel hath conversed with him, what is there in that?" (9).

King James's version has, "Let us not fight against God," but the revision of 1881 omits these words.

"And as there was great commotion among them, the chiliarch was afraid lest they should tear Paul in pieces. And he sent the Romans [Gr. soldiers] to go and pluck him from their midst and bring him into the castle" (10).

Every allegation in Acts about attempts by the constituted authorities to kill Paul is discredited by Mr. Wise, who says:

"All known sources, be they Jewish or gentile, of fifteen centuries, from Joshua to Hadrian (A.D. 117) make no mention of the execution of a single person on account of his religious or political opinions, expressed in this or that way. Once, and once only, we are informed of the persecution of witches by King Saul, and once in the time of a Maccabean ruler" (Orig. of Chris., 481).

This, of course, negativs the gospel account of the crucifixion of Christ; but Paul's messiah was stoned and hanged for alleged sorcery (Talmud and Toldoth Jeshu).

"And when night came our Lord appeared to Paul and said to him, Be strong, for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so art thou to testify at Rome. And when it was morning several of the Jews assembled together and bound themselvs by imprecations, that they would neither eat nor drink until they had slain Paul. And they who had established this compact by oath were more than forty persons. And they went to the priests and elders and said: We hav bound ourselvs by imprecations that we will taste nothing until we hav slain Paul. And now do ye and the chiefs of the congregation [Gr. sanhedrin] request the chiliarch that he would bring him unto you as if ye were desirous to investigate truly his conduct; and we are prepared to slay him ere he shall come to you. And the son of Paul's sister heard of this plot; and he went into the castle and informed Paul" (11–16).

So Paul had a relativ in Jerusalem who was so kind as to try to save his uncle's life, to the great discomfiture of the forty Jews, who, if they kept their oath, must all hav died of starvation within forty days.

Having learned so much, Paul called a centurion to conduct his nephew to the chiliarch. And when the chiliarch heard the young man's story, he said, "Let no man know that thou hast showed me these things." Then the officer ordered out two hundred Romans, and seventy horsemen, and two hundred javelin-men, to escort Paul to Cæsarea. They started at nine o'clock that same evening, and provided a "saddle-beast" (Gr. beasts) for the prisoner. And the chiliarch dispatched to Governor Felix the following letter:

"Claudius Lysias, to the excellent governor Felix, greeting. The Jews seized this man in order to kill him; but I came with the Romans [Gr. the soldiers] and rescued him when I learned that he was a Roman. And as I wished to know the offense for which they criminated him, I brought him to their assembly. And I found that it was about questions of their law they accused him, and that an offense worthy of bonds or of death was not upon him. And when the wiles of a plot formed by the Jews against him came to my knowledge, I forthwith sent him to thee. And I hav directed his accusers to go and contend with him before thee. Farewell." (26–30).

We conceive it not impossible that a dispatch of this sort might hav been sent from an officer at Jerusalem to his superior at Cesarea, between 22 and 12 B.C. But the name Felix is false. Governor Felix never knew Paul, and of such a person as Claudius Lysias we know nothing.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH comes to the front once more. He has notified Sir Stafford Northcote that he shall again demand the seat to which he is entitled when the House reassembles, and charges the latter with making all the trouble in his case. Now, as Bradlaugh was never known to plead the baby act, Sir Stafford has good reason for wishing that things had panned out differently. Should Bradlaugh get into the House he will make it exceedingly uncomfortable for several members.—New York Star.

A CATALOG of Truth Seeker Publications will be sent free upon application to this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - OCTOBER 27, 1883.

Ecclesiastical Masquerading.

What a lot of useless expense and childish claptrap and mummery is entailed upon the country by ecclesiastical organizations! A few weeks ago H. C. Potter was elected bishop of the Episcopal church, and last Saturday he was "consecrated," or sworn into office. Grace church, where the ceremony was performed, is but a short way from THE TRUTH SEEKER office. This "setting apart to the service of God" of Mr. Potter (who is personally a gentleman, scholar, and more Liberal in his theological views than many of his brethren) must hav cost about ten thousand dollars for visible expenses, and how much more the visiting clergy dropped at bunko games and kindred vices is not for the ungodly to know. In front of the reredos (a screen behind the altar) in the church were several hundred dollars' worth of flowers.

About a hundred and fifty clergymen from out of town were in attendance; as many more from neighboring churches in the city, and a hundred students from the theological seminary, dressed in black robes. Forty-six bishops were in procession, wearing the white "rochet" or under gown, and above it a black habit with puffed lace sleeves. These gowns are of different pattern from the raiment Christ wore, and from this circumstance it has been asserted that that gentleman was not an Episcopalian. The common clergymen wore what a wicked reporter calls white dusters.

The services were in keeping with the silly decoration. The choir sang "Holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty," the Nicene Creed was chanted, and the commandments, given by Buddha some six hundred years before the Christian era, were read. Then the duties expected of a bishop were set forth by a Connecticut bishop. He did not say that religious duties in his state appeared to consist in impounding women in a barnyard in the rain, or in slandering a neighbor accused of crime. Allusion to these benefits of Christianity was discreetly omitted. The presiding bishop then placed his hands on Mr. Potter's head and said:

"Receive the holy ghost for the office and work of a bishop in the church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands. In the name of the father, and of the son, and of the holy ghost, amen. And remember that thou stir up the grace of God, which is given thee by this imposition of our hands."

If any one can see any improvement in this ritualism over the ceremonies of the pagan priests so often and vigorously denounced by Christians, it would be well to hav it pointed out. What is the holy ghost which the newly-fledged bishop is supposed to hav received? If the Episcopal be the church of God, what are all the other churches? If by laying on of hands the old bishop can impart the grace of God, why not giv it to the sinful laymen, and thus make their salvation sure. If the grace of God is a good thing, it should not be monopolized exclusivly by bishops.

But seriously, are not such farcical and empty shows a disgrace to the century? Does any one suppose that Mr. Potter is any different now from what he was before he received the holy ghost, or is unlike the common mortal? In the nursery days of the race such harlequinry might pass for seriousness. To children a rattle and a ribbon are more than playthings. But they outgrow the conceit with the mumps and measles. To the common-sense onlooker the scene enacted at Grace church is as ridiculous as a nursery circus. The childish imagination that converts a chair into a horse, or fills a doll with life, is no more foolish than the passing of the holy ghost from a senile bishop to a young one. It is empty mouthing and excites disgust.

Robbing the Taxpayers.

Last week we called attention to the un-American spirit and dangerous growth of the Catholic church. The pope's Irish, as the Argonaut designates the loud-talking, whisky-swilling, and fighting stream of immigration turned toward our shores by the degradation to which Catholicism has reduced Ireland, cannot be true citizens of America or any other secular country so long as they giv their highest allegiance to a king in Rome. By their traditions, their teachings, by the very nature of their religion, they are opposed to popular government. We now giv some facts illustrativ of their capacity to force a state, county, and city, of which a majority of citizens are non-Catholics, to contribute not only to their support, but to actually pay the expenses of conversions to their faith. The different New York sectarian institutions for the support of orphans receive from the state or county a per capita allowance. The larger the number supported, the more dollars wrung from the state treasury. In Brooklyn some striking facts relating to the method of increasing this sum hav been brought to light. Kings county, in which Brooklyn is located, is governed mostly by Catholic officers. The first step taken by the county officials to benefit the church institutions was to transfer from the County Nursery two hundred and twenty-two children to "Saint Malachi's Home," "Saint Mark's Maternity," "Saint Joseph's Orphan Asylum," and others of that sort. This was in 1875. By the first of August, 1879, the county was supporting one thousand four hundred and twenty-four orphans and half orphans, and the cost had been increased, says the Brooklyn Union, from $22,000 to $130,000. Not content with this increase, these institutions kept these children long after the age when children of the average hard-working families are compelled to go to work. In addition to this, the county commissioners hav placed four-fifths of the county wards in asylums conducted by Roman Catholics. While the population of Brooklyn has only increased twenty-five per cent in the last eight years, the apparent increase of these orphans has been five hundred and seventy per cent. The law declaring that no schools shall be aided by the state in which the distinctiv tenets or doctrins of any sect is taught, has been repeatedly violated by the sectarian officials. Many schools receiving aid are taught by Dominican sisters, who inculcate Roman Catholic ideas and use Roman Catholic books not authorized by the board. At this very time about eighty-five per cent of the county wards are under Catholic tuition. To giv an idea of the partisan legislation which characterizes the management in that city, it is stated "that three years ago Mr. Ripley Ropes found that, of the one thousand five hundred children then supported by the county, seven hundred and twenty had both parents living, and only one hundred and sixty were orphans. Of seven hundred in one asylum, the parents of two-thirds had a known, recognized habitation."

These facts show two things: first, that the taxpayers are supporting a large number of children who ought not to be so supported, because their retention in the asylums draws a large sum of money annually from the state; and, second, that the money raised from the general public by taxation is being spent to maintain sectarian schools and convert the scholars to Catholicism. The idleness of looking to Catholic schools for the improvement of children's morals and usefulness, is shown by statistics of New York city, in which, for the five years previous to 1880, the commissioners of charities and corrections cared for ninety-eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven Catholic paupers. The inferiority of the schools was conclusivly shown by Mr. D. A. Hawkins, some two years ago, who collected the figures which substantiated the statement that "a child trained up in the Roman Catholic parochial school is so much inferior intellectually to one trained up in the public school that he is three and a half times as likely to become a pauper as he would be if he attended the free public schools of the city. And a child trained in the parochial school of the Roman Catholic church is more than three and a quarter times as likely to get into jail as the child trained in the free public school."

With these facts, which hav not been disputed, before the people, the announcement that the Catholic church intends to build more parochial schools is to be viewed with alarm. In such an event the state will be obliged to build more jails and almshouses.

Another outcome of the pastoral letter to the Catholic churches, is the attempt of the Rev. Dr. Hopkins, of Auburn Theological Seminary, in the Presbyterian Synod now in session in this city, to indorse the Romish church, looking to a closer affiliation with her of the Presbyterians. This indicates the approach of that which we hav several times predicted, namely, the alliance of the strictly orthodox Protestants with Rome, the more effectually to combat Rationalism. Although the resolution was not adopted, the committee to which it was referred being specially packed against it, as its author affirms, it nevertheless is a very large straw showing the way theological breezes are blowing. Another straw comes just now also from California. At Nordhoff the Protestants and Catholics united to build a church, to be used by turns, and though they are having hard luck with it, the unification of the sects is of considerable significance. A union of Catholicism and all of Protestantism will never take place; a complete and working union of the retrogressiv wing of the Protestants will not occur for years, perhaps, but its ultimate accomplishment is looked for by the far seeing of all parties, Catholic, Protestant and Rationalist alike. That the secular press begins to see it is evidenced by this editorial in last Sunday's Sun:

"The respectful treatment of the late Roman Catholic Pastoral Letter by the members of the Presbyterian Synod of New York suggests that all believers in the authority of divine revelation may yet feel the necessity of uniting, where they can unite, to resist the inroads of modern Infidelity, and to oppose Socialistic doctrins which threaten the sway of religion.

"The strong ground against divorce taken in that letter, its proclamation of the sanctity of marriage, and other of its declarations concerning social questions now uppermost in the public thought, command the approval of conservativ religious sentiment generally. The expressions of the letter concerning divorce and temperance, said Dr. Hopkins in the Presbyterian Synod on Thursday, 'would do honor to any church. It is coming to be the glory of that church,' he added, 'that it stands out alone against divorce.' And when he read extracts from the pastoral letter to enforce his remarks, they were received with general applause.

"The opposition of modern Infidelity is unmistakably bringing orthodox Protestants and Catholics nearer together. They hav a bond of union in their common belief in revelation, which the contemporary Infidelity assails at its very foundation.

"The modern civilized world is beginning to be sharply divided into two great classes, those who believe in the authority of the Bible and its divine origin, and those who utterly reject the whole theory of inspiration and revelation as an absurdity and an impossibility. On the one side are the Christians, and on the other the Agnostics, who believe nothing that is not satisfactorily demonstrated to their reason.

"Modern Infidelity is not directed against any particular system of theology, but against all theology and all supernaturalism. It may therefore tend to the consolidation of the now scattered hosts of belief, not ecclesiastically, perhaps, but in an alliance offensiv and defensiv. Before the strong and arrogant common enemy, intestin quarrels may cease in the camp of faith."

Religion keeps the advocate of liberty constantly on the watch, and Christianity, in both its forms, is one of his most dreaded enemies. Without a foundation in fact; with not a real solid peg on which to hang its pretensions, Christianity has exercised squatter sovereignty in the world, and refuses to vacate until forced by law. It has retreated from the house to the fence, from the fence to the ditch, and there it proposes to fight, joining forces with all the lawless population of the neighborhood.

Another Mistaken Presbyterian.

The ignorance of the Presbyterian ministers of this country must be immense, if we can judge by the lack of knowledge displayed by the one referred to in the following letter:

HIGHLANDS, N. C., Oct. 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please tell me where I can get a copy of the Presbyterian "Confession of Faith," referred to in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 13th, and the price. The Presbyterian minister here denounced as an infamous lie—at a funeral here—that their church teaches or believes in such doctrin, etc. They refuse to believe that your quotations are correct. We hav a small band of Freethinkers here that the church is trying to suppress. Yours respectfully, JAMES RIDEOUT.

It is quite in keeping with Presbyterian morals to charge upon us incorrect quotation, but we advise the clerical to procure a copy of the "Confession of Faith," and look it over and see what he really does believe and to what he subscribed when he was ordained. He is woefully ignorant. We will go over to the Bible House and hav a copy sent to him if he will forward the 75 cents which the pious booksellers charge for it.

Fanaticism Killing a Woman.

The harm that religious fanaticism does is again made plain in Massachusetts, the old puritan state that raised Freeman, the Pocasset murderer, and tans at Tewksbury the hides of pauper women. This last craze is the "faith cure," and by it one woman will lose her life. She is dying now. This is the story.

Some of the Methodist people of Pittsfield from reading the Bible hav become convinced of the efficacy of prayer as a remedy for physical as well as mental ailments. They call their belief psychopathy, and its premises are that all manner of disease may be cured by faith in God. The principle is, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." The members of the band must hav unwavering belief in the power of faith, and in order to insure a cure the sick person must believe in the efficiency of the method, praying for himself. A long catalog of "directions" are closely observed. The initiation of the lunacy was brought about by the efforts of a colored woman who visited the town several years ago, praying with sick people. Remarkable cures are alleged to hav taken place, although no one can now find the patients. But the Methodists of the town appear to hav been more than ordinarily superstitious, and two of the most prominent young ladies of the local church succeeded in organizing a "Faith Cure Band." Believers, among a people ignorant and superstitious, were not hard to find, and soon the band was flourishing. For several months it has had meetings, and it is now announced that during the winter it will meet every Thursday evening.

The band stoutly maintain that by their prayers they deprived one old man of asthma and one young man of a nervous disease caused by tobacco, but these considered cures are doubtful. The case that calls for indignant interference, however, is one with which the band is still wrestling. Among the firmest believers and members were Mr. and Mrs. John H. Musgrove. Mrs. Musgrove fell sick with a cancer, and the band began to labor with her. For several months she has sunk slowly, and all the treatment she receives or has received is prayer. The members of the band believed that they could cure her, and she had equal faith. For fear that she would "fight against God," she has received no other treatment, and she would not permit an operation by the surgeon. She has refused to take both anodynes and stimulants, and so, suffering agony, she has wasted away, until now her death is daily expected. Her case has been the subject of much criticism by the townspeople, and some of the more common sense persons express righteous indignation over it.

In Waterbury, Conn., a whole family were sentenced to imprisonment for neglecting to provide medical attendance for a married daughter who died in childbirth, and their offense was due mainly to ignorance, an excuse which cannot be pleaded in this case.

It is murder and suicide that the band and the patient are committing, but as it is done in the name of "holy religion," the crime goes without comment by the secular press or action by the legal authorities. If there only were a righteous God to sit in judgment on the sins of the world, his anger would be oftenest excited by the outrages committed in his name.

The Most Feasible Way of Honoring Mr. Bennett.

We received last week two letters in relation to the monument about to be erected to the memory of Mr. Bennett. The first is from Silas Ralls, of Idaho, directed to Mrs. Bennett, and reads:

BELLEVUE, Oct. 14, 1883.

MY DEAR MADAM: Don't you believe that the amount subscribed for the monument could be made better use of than for that purpose? If the amount was spent in building a Bennett Hall and a home for the paper he founded, would it not be better? It would be impossible to honor Brother Bennett more even if millions were spent on a monument. Let us cherish the memory of D. M. Bennett, but direct our attention to the living present, and put our time and money where it will do the most good.

Yours in the cause of truth, SILAS RALLS.

The second is from Janet Spenser, and is in the form of an open letter to Mrs. Slenker. She says:

DEAR MRS. SLENKER: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 30th I notice an appeal for contributions to the support of the old Radical, Jeremiah Hacker, which is a yearly occurrence, for he is, according to your statement, in sore need; and you suggest that all Liberals should assist him in his old age, which is all proper. But in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 6th there is the report of the "Monument Fund," which is being collected for the purpose of erecting a marble shaft over the remains of Mr. Bennett. Now, what I am looking for is the superiority of practice of Liberals over Christians. Any one can hav a marble shaft, with an inscription to tell of his virtues, but would not such a monument as a home for aged and needy Liberals be one which would tell more eloquently of the purpose and principles of a man of Mr. Bennett's ideas? While a man like Mr. Hacker needs assistance, would a man like Mr. Bennett accept of a marble shaft? Call his monument the "Bennett Home for Aged Liberals." I am sure if Mr. Bennett was alive he would throw his soul into the effort to take away the reproach cast upon the Liberals that they do nothing for their poor. Nearly all the different religious sects hav comfortable and even handsome institutions where their aged and worthy members may upon the payment of a reasonable fee find a certain home for the remainder of their days, and be sure of a decent burial. How much more dignified is such a situation than that of Jeremiah Hacker! People who hav led good and useful lives deserve rest and independence when they are old and past work, and what is more comforting than to feel that they are established among contemporaries until they are done with the things peculiar to this phase of existence? I know a number of Liberals, men and women, who are wondering where they shall find a congenial resting-place to spend their age in, and are confronted by the appalling prospect of being obliged to join the church in order to obtain it. Works of art, such as are to be found in cemeteries, are beautiful, but while some are cold, and hungry, and homeless, is it consistent with advanced views to erect shafts instead of homes?

Yours truly, JANET SPENSER.

These philanthropic ideas do credit to the hearts of the writers, and hav THE TRUTH SEEKER'S cordial and enthusiastic approval. Whenever a home for aged Freethinkers is begun by responsible parties we shall do everything in our power for its success. And Mr. Ralls can rest assured that if we saw the way clear to the erection of a home for THE TRUTH SEEKER we should begin at once.

Mr. Bennett's labors for Freethought certainly call for some public expression of appreciation from the Freethinkers of the country, and those who from their positions ought to know what can best be done, decided that a monument is the most feasible thing. It is a good deal better to erect a monument for a comparativly small sum, and pay for it, than to begin a large building and fail. A suitable hall would cost not less than $150,000. And to whom can we look for this immense sum? We confess we do not know. Undoubtedly a few thousand dollars could be raised, but then the work would drag, and not even the ground be paid for. This would be disrespectful to the memory of Mr. Bennett and a reproach to the cause for which he labored so grandly. We feel that something must be done to show the world that he has friends who will see that he is remembered until such time as the people of this country shall of their own accord place him high in the temple of fame for what he did in resisting tyrannical laws, and breaking the power of the church. A public monument will do this, and it can be put up and paid for. And while we hav not given up the project of a hall, it must be the work of time, and will not be affected by the amount used for the monument.

Editorial Notes.

GEORGE O. BARNES, the Kentucky revivalist, is now in England. At one of his meetings he roared out, "You are a good fellow after all, God!" Why is he not prosecuted for blasphemy?

THE London Freethinker, whose editor is in prison for blasphemy much less mild than that of many religious papers, is obliged by the tax-collector to pay a rate of one-half pence in the pound toward the maintenance of a vicar.

HEBER NEWTON says that his church is more respectable than religious; in its creed there is nothing said about the inspiration of the Bible; an article describing future punishment was written but omitted; and that its work has nothing to do with narrow theology. Perhaps Mr. Newton is correct as to his own church, but if so it is an exception to the general run of Episcopalian organizations.

J. B. PITTS & SON hav succeeded G. H. Walser as editors and proprietors of the Liberal. The name has been changed to the Advance Liberalist, and the number of columns added to and lengthened. The price has been raised to $1.50 per year, and the issues are weekly. It giv us pleasure to congratulate our contemporary on these evidences of prosperity. We hope its circulation will share also in the general raise.

OUR friend S. B. Lyons, of Naples, N. Y., has the thanks of all in THE TRUTH SEEKER office for the fine basket of grapes sent by him through the courtesy of W. H. Peck, commission merchant at 222 Washington street, this city. Both Mr. Lyons and Mr. Peck are old-time Freethinkers and friends of Mr. Bennett's. Mr. Lyons's vinyards are well worked if the generous bunches of Catawba, Delaware, Salem, Concord, and Rebecca grapes sent us are specimens. Our "devil," who got a large bunch of particularly luscious fruit, says he will be easy on both the gentlemen if they should ever come within his dominions.

WE hav the great speech of Mr. Remsburg at Rochester, now in neat pamphlet form, and hope to see thousands of them circulated by Liberals. We hav put the price very low by the dozens, to enable this to be done. There is no question but that this is one of the best and most effectiv Freethought speeches ever uttered in this country. Every copy circulated ought to add a recruit to our ranks. Send 75 cents for a dozen and distribute them around the neighborhood.

BIGOTRY is not confined to England, says the Freethinker. In Melbourne, Mr. Walker, a Freethought lecturer, attending a public meeting on the opening of museums and libraries on Sunday, was assaulted. On his bringing an action against his assailant, Dr. Madden, counsel for the defense, tried to prejudice the jury by urging that witnesses who affirm are discreditable, and insinuated that an ordinary secular "naming" of a child was a dedication of it to the devil. The jury refused to be misled by this, and found for the plaintiff.

THE difference between the Christian reformer and the Infidel reformer, was never better shown than in the attitudes taken by Mr. Parnell and Mr. Bradlaugh, regarding "testimonials." Mr. Parnell, as is well known, is the land reformer of Ireland, and has been made the recipient of some fifty thousand dollars subscribed by his followers who could ill afford the shillings asked. Mr. Parnell has not succeeded yet in his fight. Some Cardiff (South Wales) friends proposed to raise a testimonial to mark their esteem for and giv substantial aid to Mr. Bradlaugh, but he declined to receive it, remarking that his parliamentary struggle was not yet over, its course was uncertain, and he could not therefore be properly a recipient of the testimonial. The subscriptions were therefore returned.

ANNIE BESANT scores the House of Lords in these words: "Who shall say that the lords are not powerful? They hav decided that pigeon-torture shall go on for another year; that men shall be allowed to 'prepare' the birds for their noble patrons by sticking pins into them, by gouging out one eye, and by inflicting the various other forms of agony necessary for this delectable sport; that betting and cruelty and brutality shall hav full swing for another year. Thank God we hav a House of Lords! The range of their activity is wide. They will neither protect young girls from outrage, nor pigeons from torture. The 'amusements' of their order must not be curtailed by such petty limits as decency or humanity. The Earl of Redesdale led the opposition to the bill. This is the noble peer who desired to impose a theistic test on members of Parliament. Like the majority of very pious people, he is very zealous for God, and very indifferent to cruelty and barbarity. Not a single bishop voted for mercy to 'God's dumb creatures.' They apparently said scornfully with Paul, 'Doth God take care for' pigeons? It is only another instance of that complete divorce between Christianity and morality to which I am constantly drawing attention."

JOHN SWINTON, who once publicly described himself as a man who received five thousand dollars a year for suppressing the truth, has begun the issue of a weekly paper which has in two numbers made its impress upon this city. Swinton has for years been an editorial writer upon the Sun, and it is easy now to see whence that paper obtained its pungency. Mr. Swinton's paper is to the Socialists what Benjamin Tucker's Liberty is to the anarchists, and is an endeavor to unite the scattered forces of the discontented, and band the different trades unions and labor organizations together to effect a political revolution. But we notice that although Mr. Swinton has renounced the five thousand a year which he received from the Sun for suppressing the truth, he has not decided to tell all the truth he knows. He is silent about the injustice of forcing the workingmen to pay taxes on fifty million dollars' worth of churches in this city which they never enter, and of contributing to the support of a pampered and licentious priesthood, among which there is scarcely one who ever pays the laborer the compliment of a thought beyond a benediction at the marriage and a funeral sermon at his death, two services for which the poor laborer and his family pay mighty dear. John Swinton is an able man, and John Swinton's Paper is an able sheet, but he has made one serious mistake—he does not go far enough, or he goes too far.

WE are so often forced to reprove the Christian Advocate and denounce the tyrannies of the church, that it givs us pleasure to be able to quote in a commendatory way the two following extracts from the Advocate's columns. The first is in rebuke of Mr. Talmage:

"It is ranting to talk about sending General Sheridan out to exterminate the Mormons. In this republic a man may believe what he pleases, or nothing at all. He may follow the pope, Andrew Jackson Davis, Ann Lee, or John Taylor. But he must behave. Civil processes—unless the Mormons resort to arms—and moral and social influences are our only legitimate means of defense against them."

The second is in relation to a recent army court-martial:

"Lieutenant James F. Simpson, of the Third Cavalry, United States Army, has been tried on the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in having married a woman who had been his mistress. The court found him guilty, and sentenced him to dismissal from the army, and the sentence awaits the approval of the president. It does not appear that the officer in question was ever threatened with a trial for 'conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman' in keeping a mistress, though that description would well apply to such conduct. This previous illegal and illicit relation does not appear to hav subjected him to question, but when he proposes to enter into a legitimate relation, the sensitivness of his brother officers as to the honor of the army is suddenly and powerfully aroused. It would hav been more to their credit if it had an earlier awakening, and if the seal of their condemnation had been placed on his violation of God's law of chastity when he was holding illegitimate relations with the woman he afterward married."

We fail to see, however, why chastity is "God's" law, unless the Advocate means some other deity than the Jewish Jehovah, for all his saints and chosen ones, the men after his own heart, were notoriously profligate, keeping from one to three hundred mistresses. It must be that Dr. Buckley is running after strange gods, and has found one who is virtuous. Where is he, doctor?

Is an Index Expurgatorius Legal in Canada?

AND HAV THE FREETHINKERS OF THAT COUNTRY ANY RIGHTS THE CHRISTIANS ARE BOUND TO RESPECT?—A BIGOTED CUSTOM COLLECTOR SUED FOR DETAINING FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

Last year we sent some books to Canada which were seized by Mr. Patton, collector of Toronto, and confiscated. They included some of Col. Ingersoll's works. Later, one C. R. Sings, a collector at Meaford, confiscated Col. Ingersoll's "Interviews on Talmage," sent from this office. The seizures were all made under authority of a customs regulation that declares contraband "indecent and immoral literature coming into Canada."

Last December, Mr. W. C. Lawrence, of Montreal, ordered from our Boston friends a package of books, including Paine's "Age of Reason," and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary," which Mr. M. P. Ryan, the collector of that place, taking the actions of Patton and Sings as precedents, refused to deliver. Mr. Lawrence brought an action for damages against him. The case came to trial before Justice Johnson on the 11th, the Minister of Customs taking up the side of Mr. Ryan, and absurdly pleading that the works, being "immoral and obscene," were rightfully detained. Mr. Joseph Doutre, Mr. J. O. Joseph, and Mr. W. S. Walker, were counsel for Mr. Lawrence, and Mr. Harry Abbot argued the Christian side of the case.

From the Montreal papers we take the following report of the trial:

James A. Lawrence, manager of the Montreal Printing Company, and no relativ of the plaintiff, testified that plaintiff is now in Europe. He went with Mr. Lawrence on 10th of February last, and offered to pay the duty, which was refused by Mr. Ryan, who said the book had been seized for above, and that the wisest plan for Lawrence to pursue was to get other copies in from Boston "in some way or other without having them pass through the customs; that would be the wisest and least expensiv way."

George Faulkner, appraiser, and other customs officers testified as to the manner in which the books were seized. The officers thought they were a package of "old books" until the package was opened.

W. S. Walker, advocate, said he had copies of the proscribed books in his library. Had seen them and many other works of that description in the Parliamentary library at Ottawa last spring, and examined them in common with several members of Parliament.

Cross-examined—By other works of that description witness meant the writings of Bishop Colenso, Darwin, Huxley, etc. Thought the work was entirely in keeping with the times in which it was written.

John H. R. Molson, merchant.—I own Paine's "Age of Reason." I hav read a good deal of it at times. It is generally known as a philosophical work. Its author looks into things and tries to find out a reason for everything. Could not say from recollection that there was anything in it debasing or immoral. Do not think there is any more in it than in Shakspere or others. I own also Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary." Saw nothing of a debasing nature in it.

Cross-examined—I do not remember reading the "Age of Reason" through. Did not read that part referring to the incarnation of our savior, Jesus Christ. I do not think that a reasoning man or a person of mature age could be offended by Paine's style, still the language is a little strong.

Re-examined—Indecent and immoral passages from the Bible are frequently commented upon. There are many things in the Bible that will not bear reading in the presence of young persons and women.

Re-cross-examination—Q. Are you a believer in revealed religion? A. Well, I do not exactly know what you mean.

Q. Are you a believer in the Bible as being the revealed word of God? A. Do you mean all of it?

Q. Do you believe it contains the revealed word of God? A. Well, do I understand that you ask me if I believe that the whale swallowed Jonah? If so, I do not believe it.

Q. Then you do not believe in the Bible? A. I believe that the Bible was made by man, put together by man, collected by man. It is certainly according to the judgment of man in times past that these collections hav been made.

Geo. Martin, gentleman, examined:

Q. Did you ever read Tom Paine's "Age of Reason?" A. I read it a number of years ago, and again within the past two years.

Q. From your recollection of that work, could it be in a sense called debasing or immoral? A. I regard it as a controversial work, entirely within the limits of respectable and respectful argument from the author's standpoint, within the limits of decent discussion?

Q. I believe you are familiar with the Bible. A. I may say in general that I am.

Q. Well, if you were called upon to make a parallel or comparison between Paine's "Age of Reason" and the Bible as regards the moral character or the books, which do you think would be the most objectionable? A. Well, taking especially the Old Testament, I would say there is a hundredfold more immorality and indecency in the Bible than can be found or pointed to in anything that can be construed into indecency in Paine's "Age of Reason."

Q. Do you know any publication which has selected passages from the Old Testament to show in that respect the immoral character of the book? A. There was a small work published in Toronto a short time ago called "Biblical Anthology," containing extracts from the Bible—its most objectionable passages—which I think clearly establishes the truth of the assertion that it contains a great deal of impurity and immorality. I produce and file said book. Witness considered that to be published in all the papers as attempting to import "immoral and indecent works," even though the statement might be coupled with the statement that said books were the works of Voltaire and Paine, would very much damage the character of any man.

Cross-examined—Q. From the remarks that you hav made, I presume that you do not believe that the Bible contains the word of God as revealed by him to man? A. Well if everything has come from God, of course that has come from him, but only in a sense that I do not suppose is held by the popular mind. The will of God may be revealed to man through Herbert Spencer, Shakspere, Tyndall, Huxley, and other great and learned men.

Q. Then, in your opinion, there has been no more revelation from God to the authors of the Bible than there has been to writers such as Shakspere and Herbert Spencer? A. There are many very excellent things in the Bible, I must admit, but there are portions which, instead of being revelations from God, I would rather surmise came from the other quarter. (Laughter.)

Q. Then you do not believe that this book, the Bible, contains the word of God? A. I hav not said that.

Q. Do you believe it or do you not, sir, that is the question? A. I hav expressed my meaning in the sense in which you or any one else can take it to be the word of God.

Q. That is to say not more than any other work? A. No. I look upon it as a human compilation, compiled in times of ignorance, times of barbarity, and carrying with it all the marks of the channel through which it has passed.

Q. Then you do not think it is inspired? A. I hav read the beautiful poems of Job; and some of the psalms are also very beautiful.

Q. Do you think it is any more inspired than Milton or Shakspere? A. I am not a gauger of inspiration, and therefore cannot say.

Q. Do you believe the histories recounted in the Bible are true? A. They may be.

Q. I suppose you hav some opinion about it? A. Well, I hav read Colenso. He shows pretty clearly that a great many things in the Old Testament are erroneous.

Q. Then you don't believe that some things are correct? A. Well, I hardly believe that the sun stood still at the command of Joshua, in order to giv him a chance to slaughter his fellow-creatures.

Q. Do you consider an oath taken on the Bible binding on the conscience? A. Yes.

Q. Why? How do you reconcile that with your previous statements? A. Because I am here to tell the truth.

Q. That is all? A. That is all.

Q. And not on account of your belief in the Bible? A. Not at all.

Mr. Abbot here raised an objection to the Court's receiving the evidence of the witness on the ground that he was a disbeliever in the Bible.

The witness—I did not say I was a disbeliever in the Bible. It is a verity; some of your most advanced Christians of the present day believe as I do.

Mr. Abbot recorded the objection that the witness's belief prevented him from being a competent witness.

Witness considered the works in question fairly within the bounds of free and legitimate discussion, and admitted that certain portions of the "Age of Reason" quoted might hav been written in less offensiv terms.

Albert G. B. Claxton, aged seventeen, a law student, testified that there were seventy-five volumes of Voltaire in McGill College Library, but none of Tom Paine's. Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" was there; it was presented by Dr. Sterry Hunt.

Robert C. Adams, merchant, had looked over Voltaire's philosophical works; had read Paine's "Age of Reason" repeatedly and attentivly; considers the whole purport of the book to be on the side of morality.

Cross-examined—Do you believe in the revealed nature of the Bible? A. In a certain sense I do.

Q. What sense? A. In a sense that all that is true may be said to be revealed, wherever it is to be found.

Q. You consider that what is contained in the Bible is true? A. I consider that very much of it is true, but not the whole of it.

Q. Do you believe in any of the Old Testament? A. Certainly I do—a great deal of it.

Q. How much of it? A. It is impossible to say. I hav no information.

Q. Do you believe in future rewards and punishment? A. As long as existence lasts I believe that good deeds will be rewarded and evil ones punished.

Q. And how long do you believe that existence will last? A. I hav no idea. (Laughter).

Q. Do you believe in an existence after death? A. I hav no information on the subject.

Q. Consequently you hav no belief on the subject? A. No.

Q. And you hav no belief as to the existence that follows death? A. I hav no knowledge, and, consequently, no definit belief. I may hav my opinion, but belief is founded on absolute knowledge.

Charles Stevens testified that the works of Tom Paine, in his opinion, were highly moral.

His honor remarked that he thought the law was meant to cover obscene and licentious books which would tend to debauch the young, but was not intended to interfere with controversial works, even if they did question whether there was a deity or not, so long as they were couched in respectful and decent terms. All the court had to do was to decide on a point of law as to whether these books were so bad as not to be permitted to enter Canadian homes, or whether they were, as represented by the plaintiff, sound moral works. He would carefully examin every authority, and decide accordingly.

Only one witness was called on the defendant's side, namely, Mr. W. J. O'Hara, pro-collector of customs, whose evidence went to establish the seizure of the books. The fact of the collector, Mr. Ryan, having been officially called upon by the examining officer, or appraiser, to decide whether the books were to be admitted to entry, or whether they were to be ruled out as prohibited under schedule D of the Tariff act, the collector's detection of them and subsequent seizure made after examination of the books, which action was based upon the merits as well as on the precedent established at Toronto and maintained by the authorities at Ottawa.

Mr. O'Hara's evidence also established that the plaintiff had never sought the legal delivery of the two books; that is, he had never presented a bill of entry, accompanied by an invoice, and a legal tender of the amount of duties payable, as required by law (which was quoted by the witness). Further, that after the books were seized, the plaintiff made no claim, nor gave any notice of claim, as required by the statute. The witness cited the schedule of the Tariff act, and the section of the same requiring the action of the collector, which action, in his discretion, was taken up on what he believed to be the intention of the legislature of this country, legislating for a Christian community.

In cross-examination by Mr. Doutre, Q.C., the witness was asked: "Would it hav made any difference if Mr. Lawrence had tendered the duties according to the formalities?" The answer was: "No, but the fact remains that he did not do so."

Mr. O'Hara was asked if there would hav been any written record in the Montreal custom house of this case if it had not been for this suit. He replied, "No; it was a matter of ordinary administration of an item in the custom tariff, and no special record was necessary."

This closed the evidence for the whole case. Mr. Doutre, Q.C., then made his argument for Mr. Lawrence, which occupied about twenty minutes. He said:

In this case as well as in every case where great principles were at issue, we were sure to find the party who impleads another for a breach of some great principle, attempting to shirk the issue by bringing forward some petty question of procedure. In this instance the defendant, before entering into a justification of his acts, raised the question as to whether the books in question could not be seized for the want of an irregular entry. Mr. O'Hara, the collector's assistant and secretary, however, seems to remove this objection by stating that even if a regular entry had been made the result would hav been the same. In fact, the package in which these two volumes were entered contained two other volumes, and if the entry was sufficiently good for the delivery of these two other volumes to the plaintiff, assuredly it should be good for the two volumes detained. On the merits the defendant had failed to indicate in his pleadings what kind of immorality or indecency he attached to these books. The plaintiff had demurred to that in a general way, qualifying the books seized, but without success, and the defendant had not been more particular in his evidence with the exception that he indicated a portion of the "Age of Reason," concerning the incarnation of Jesus Christ, which he thought deserved the qualification of being "immoral" and "indecent." The passage had been read to the Court, who could see that that part of the Christian system could hardly be discussed in a more proper manner than Paine had discussed it. Of course, if the whole of the discussion of the basis of Christianity is of necessity an immoral thing itself or an indecency, then it is no use putting on any nicety as to the style of this author; but the plaintiff submits that what the law had in view to proscribe and exclude from the country were evidently books, pictures, pamphlets, or engravings of a dissolute character. Nothing could better show the untenable position assumed by the collector of customs than the following three grand historical facts: Socrates had expressed in very dignified language that he believed only in one God, and he was put to death; Galileo, in contradicting the biblical notions of his times, was nearly treated in the same way for stating that the world was round, and revolved; but the greatest of the three facts is one which should dictate a different course of conduct on the part of those in authority; it is the one on which the whole of the Christian system is founded, viz.: Jesus Christ was put to death for preaching doctrins which were not in accordance with the prevailing religious convictions of his times, and those who contend that it is a crime to say or publish anything contrary to the religious convictions of our day, under pretense that it may disturb these convictions, are justifying the Jews in the treatment to which they submitted Christ. The principle will always be the same in all ages.

All Christian countries, and Canada in particular, are spending enormous sums of money to teach people how to read, and after men hav learned how to read it would seem they are to be told by the collector of customs that they may not read this or that book. Not because it contains immoralities or indecencies, but because it discusses the basis of the prevalent religious faith. Having placed the question in this light, it would be enough to state the enormity of the contentions of the defendant, and leave them to be dealt with by the court.

Paine had been taught the ethics of the faith of his country, England; being the son of a Quaker of the town of Thetford, in the county of Suffolk. His mother professed the faith of the church of England. He was born in 1737. He remained at school until the age of thirteen, and after that improved his opportunities by assiduous reading, whenever he could find opportunity. He emigrated to this continent, where he contributed materially by his pen to the success of the revolution which severed the American colonies from the mother country. He went to France, became a member of the National Assembly, and was imprisoned under Robespierre. It was in prison, and deprived of the assistance of any book, that he began to write the "Age of Reason." His system of study consisted in applying his reasoning powers to everything, and he rejected all that his reason would not approve of.

As to Voltaire, he had preceded Paine as a writer, and the Jesuits boasted of having given him his education. He died in 1778.

These two men had therefore taken their start in life under the most favorable auspices—one under the guardianship of Christian parents, the other under the wing of the church. If they could hav brought their reason to accept in their mature years what had been taught to them in youth—but they could not do so, and they expressed their views; if they expressed their views honestly and sincerely—as it is impossible to doubt they did, during half a century spent in writing and publishing their views; who could question their right, or the right of anybody, to use their mind as their nature and their very education taught them to do? They could not speak of matters known in history, or which were incorporated in the religious belief of their own and other countries, without inserting in their writings matters of an immoral character, if this character could not be separated from the subject of their writings. The only question which could be raised is whether they hav indulged in a style incompatible with pure morality, when speaking of things essentially immoral by themselvs. If they do they are liable to the objection raised to the circulation of other books. On the other hand, if short passages of an objectionable character may be found here and there in books embracing great studies, should the whole works be proscribed for that reason? If so, the public and private libraries of the country and the world would be reduced to a contemptible minimum. It is in evidence that the men who framed the law—in fact, the actual defendants in this case—the representativs of the people in the Dominion parliament—hav placed the complete works of Voltaire and Paine in the Parliament library at Ottawa. He asked in the fullest confidence judgment for the plaintiff.

He was followed by Mr. Harry Abbot with the argument for the defendant, which occupied the court until the time for adjournment. Mr. Abbot's argument was resumed the next morning before Mr. Justice Johnson, in the Practice Court, and altogether occupied nearly three hours in its delivery.

It was exceedingly one-sided, and included the usual lies about Paine's and Voltaire's lives and deaths—slanders too oft refuted to need notice now. Among the mass of absurd and untrue statements he made was:

There was no desire on the part of the defense to condemn or suppress freedom of thought or speech, provided it were expressed decorously, or set forth in books of science composed in such language that it could not shock or offend their readers—which did not cast ridicule, contempt, or abuse on what the majority of the public had, from their youth, been taught to regard as sacred. Were the works in question in this cause indecent and immoral, and therefore within the scope of the law? The definition of the words "indecent" and "immoral," given by the most eminent lexicographical authorities, especially by Webster, placed this point beyond a doubt. The works in question in this cause are "indecent," for they contained on almost every page passages in revolting language, repulsiv and most offensiv to the mass of the people, and more than this, contained impure and obscene words and ideas, and unnecessary references to the writings of authors who were, if possible, more licentious still. They were "immoral," for their main and even avowed object was the depravation of the morals of youth in particular, and they contained attacks in a strain of coarse ridicule and ribaldry on the Christian religion, and every other religious system, as well as the holy scriptures, on which the foundation of the moral laws of this country is laid. He then proceeded to argue that Christianity was part of the law of the land, or at any rate so interwoven with it that attacks upon it written as these works are, must be held by this court to be indecent and immoral. A vivid instance of the interdependence of Christianity and the law, and of the full recognition of the former by the latter, is to be seen in the fact that all officials from the queen downward are sworn on the holy scriptures. He cited many authorities and judgments rendered in England condemning the works of Paine and similar other works. Referring especially to Lord Erskine's speech on the prosecution of the printer who had published the second part of the "Age of Reason," he pointed to the fact that it was Erskine who had previously defended Paine himself when prosecuted for publishing the "Rights of Man," a purely political work. He cited the reasons given by Erskine for a distinction between the two cases; a distinction which the collector of customs had made here, for while allowing the "Rights of Man" to pass, that official had detained the "Age of Reason." He then adverted to the immorality of Voltaire's life as well as his precepts, and also to Paine's, showing that the latter, after burying his first wife, married again, and lived with another man's wife in the lifetime of his second wife. Mr. Doutre did not venture to assert that these works did not fall into the category of the books forbidden by the law. If the Bible were to be reviled and turned into contempt, the people of this country would hav no other moral guide on rule of conduct left than positiv law. Those who are disposed to commit crime see that nature does not forbid her children to rob each other, and murderers see innumerable instances where murder goes unpunished. Society could not exist if every man were to be a law unto himself in his moral life, except in so far he might be checked by the prohibitions of positiv law. Religion givs us the only real laws by which morality is to be guided, and these works which scoff at religion sap the very foundation of law, morality, and society.

The justice took the case to deliberate on, and, says the Daily Star, from remarks made by him, it "promises to tax his abilities as a jurisprudent."

A judge who, after reading Paine's and Voltaire's works, could hav his mind taxed to decide whether they were obscene and immoral, must be in a pitiful condition as regards his brain power. When he has rendered his decision, which will be some time in November, we will lay it before our readers. Our friends in Montreal feel confident it will be in favor of liberty.

Science in Public Schools.

Science, in the broad sense of the term, says the Philadelphia Record, is knowledge; but in its technical sense it includes artistic and literary knowledge of all descriptions, while arithmetic, algebra, pure geometry, and other abstract sciences, are but so many instruments with some one or more of which the worker in science must become familiar. Thus divested of its surroundings, science becomes synonymous with the natural sciences; that is, with the knowledge of the universe, of the world as a part of the universe, and of our own bodies and minds as a part of the world. All the advancement of the present age—the loom, the steam engin, the locomotiv, the telegraph, the telephone, the electric motor—are due to the knowledge of nature, acquired in the first instance by those who from sheer love of nature hav studied its wonders and found out its mysteries, careless of the hootings of the mob and the sneers of the cultured, and, in most instances, applied by the inventor and manufacturer, who for their labor hav, as a rule, won the applause of millions and filled their pockets with untold gold. It is mere quibbling on words to say that discoveries in science are due to chance. A hundred men ignorant of minerals may pass a mountain of cinnabar without a dream of its value; but the first practical miner who sees it, though he may be prospecting for gold, knows the value of the mercurial ore. In a sense, the immediate finding of anything is chance. Twenty may look and but one find. Often he who looks for one thing finds another. But in all cases the inquiring, observant spirit and the necessary knowledge to turn the discovery to account must be present, otherwise the pearl of great price is thrown away as a useless pebble.

The advancement of science has not been limited to the mastery over materials and powers outside of ourselvs. The knowledge of what life is, of the nature of our bodies, of the structure of the organ in which the mind resides, of the forces which act and the processes which go on with us, has advanced greatly; and the only reason that such knowledge has not bettered the condition of the human race to a greater extent than it has, is to be found in the fact that the application of this knowledge has to be made by the individual himself, and that the education given to the individual has taught him to take more care of an inanimate machine of human manufacture than of that wondrous result of the long evolution of ages which he calls his body, and which contains all that he can call himself. It is for lack of necessary knowledge in this respect that we find the great majority of mankind ready to sacrifice character, health, and happiness in this world at the shrine of Mammon.

Were science once properly taught in our schools, a check could be given to some of the forces which seem to be disintegrating society. Wealth, with the power and position accompanying it, is now sought for so anxiously that not only the rights of others, but those of the individual, are ignored in the struggle to obtain it. Were men taught from infancy the certainty that punishment will in this life surely follow a sin against nature, and that an outraged society will, in various ways, revenge an injury done to its members; were these things taught with the same persistency with which the doctrins of hell and the devil, and how to cheat the devil, are inculcated, the millennium would soon commence.

Letters from Friends.

NEW HOLSTEIN, WIS., Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3, of which apply $2.50 as my subscription to your very valuable journal, and fifty cents to help erect a monument for our esteemed dead friend, D. M. Bennett.

Yours very truly, GUSTAV HOBERG.

MOULTON, IOWA, Sept. 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am now eighty-three years old, very infirm, alone in the world, without kith or kin, a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER since 1878. I am going shortly to find my much-loved preceptor, D. M. Bennett. I had rather meet him in a respectable hades than in a heaven crammed with such sky-pilots as are around here. Respectfully,

JOSH MURPHY.

MOUNT UNION, O., Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3—40 cents for "Age of Reason and Examination of the Prophecies;" 10 cts. for "An Hour With the Devil," and $2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER to a new subscriber. I am doing all I can to get THE TRUTH SEEKER read, and where I can get people to read it I can get them to take it, for they soon find it the best paper in the world. It is my Bible. JOSEPH FITZPATRICK.

MCSOUTH, KANSAS, Sept. 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed your will find twelve months subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I should hav written you at an earlier date, but hav been ill. I was not aware that my three months trial had expired. THE TRUTH SEEKER interested me deeply, the subjects discussed in its pages having been studied by me (in silence and in solitude) from a very early age. Wishing your paper success, I need add only,

I am yours sincerely, M. A. T. STEEPER.

MOUNT MORIAH, MO., Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1.25, to be applied on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish to contribute $1 to the Monument Fund. I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for about three years, and wish to be considered a life subscriber.

Yours for the truth, JOHN H. SHIPLEY.

[Subscriptions for the monument will be thankfully received until the whole amount is raised, which we hope will be soon.—ED. T. S.]

BURTON, TEXAS, Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I think your paper is well deserving of the name it bears. It improves, if possible, every week. I esteem it too highly to think of missing a copy. I hope to procure some new subscribers soon.

I trust Mr. Remsburg will not giv up his contemplated visit to this state, which he spoke of recently. Much good, in my opinion, would result to our cause here by giving the people a chance to be enlightened in the manner that this talented gentleman is capable of doing. H. B. JONES.

NEW HARTFORD, IOWA, Oct. 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: T. Winter's "pleasant remarks" to Mrs. E. Heddon in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 6th were quite interesting to me; and for fear Mrs. Heddon will not quite swallow all he said, I write to impress it upon the mind that when T. Winter says, "Death is final," he knows whereof he speaks. Mrs. Heddon, allow me to inform you that T. Winter has reached the end of knowledge. Some people may be fools enough to think that not one-half of the forces of nature hav been found out; but of course they are all wrong. This is the only life, and surely this life completes nature's most glorious fizzle. Hoping you will always believe all that Materialists tell you, I am yours for a dead halt,

MRS. J. PIERCE.

MR. WINTER SETS FORTH HIS OWN CHARACTER.

MR. EDITOR: It is some time since I employed my pen to place before you a few lines for insertion. I hope, in common with others, that I shall enjoy the right to express my honest thoughts, or opinions, through the columns of the impartial New York TRUTH SEEKER. Some of your able correspondents hav been led to form incorrect views of my real character, and made large mistakes. They hav supposed that simply because T. Winter is, and has been, an unchangeable and unflinching Materialist for sixty years, I must be a sour, quarrelsome man, and an intolerant bigot. All such ideas are most erroneous, inasmuch as all who know me best can testify that a more mild and friendly character does not exist than T. Winter. For many years I hav in every conceivable manner investigated nature in all its varied forms and forces, and up to this present moment of time I can find nothing spiritual or immaterial; all, from my standpoint, is material. Everywhere I look is land, air, or water. I behold nothing but organic or inorganic matter, and none can go outside, or at the back of nature, for no such locality exists. Therefore the solid truth must fasten itself on the unprejudiced mind that what is known as Materialism is simply another name for nature's grand laws, and a Materialist is a son of nature, and loves that nature as his mother. His philosophical and scientific evidence and faith is founded thereon, and requires no technical or hair-splitting arguments to establish its claim to incontrovertible truth. I find, in all views and systems, much that is very perplexing and hard to understand, and still harder to believe, and this is to be accounted for by reason of the anti-natural phase assumed by various religous sects, who are entirely guided by self-interested parties, and are really the passiv clay in the hands of the crafty potter, and until mankind strike for unshackled freedom of thought, and stand out boldly from all sects of religionists of every phase, they cannot enjoy in full that liberty of conscience which constitutes the highest order of philosophical and scientific Materialism. And I know by experience that all those who become firmly convinced of nature's greatest truth derive a thousand times more happiness than those who hold to future existences and other worlds. It is a toy illusion, and a positiv delusion, and that's honest. Yours fraternally,

T. WINTER, Materialist.

BUFFALO, WYOMING TER., Sept. 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: A long time has elapsed since I hav heard from you or communicated with you through these columns; but, having located in a new field among strangers, and having a little leisure now and then on my hands, I could not do without my old companion, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

For upwards of a month I hav been constantly on the go with a cattle outfit over the plains of Wyoming, gathering beef cattle for a rich English company. At present I am resting quietly at one of their numerous ranches before starting on a tour through the Big Horn Mountains with a party of English sportsmen of title. The English are rapidly gaining a foothold in this beautiful country. The company by whom I hav been employed hav managed to secure a number of the most desirable locations in this section. They employ parties to locate and secure a deed to the lands, which for a consideration are turned over to them, whilst not one of these landed aristocrats is a bona fide resident of this country. You can scarcely imagin the inordinate greed of these invaders of the rights of those best entitled to the American soil. They are extremely jealous of the emigrant in search of a home, and various are the devices resorted to by them and their hench slaves to direct the attention of new comers to other sections. And it is at the risk of their displeasure for a man to locate on lands which they covet for their large herds. The company for whom I worked are said to be the owners of 45,000 head of cattle, which may truthfully be said to "roam o'er a thousand hills." I cannot but view with serious alarm the encroachments of foreign capital into the Western states and territories, and unless the laboring classes of the United States awake to their interests and those of their children, there are those now living who will witness the arrogance of land-robbers and the suffering of a peasantry such as to-day curse Ireland. Think not, kind friends, that I overdraw the picture or that I am a false alarmist. If you could be, as I am and hav been, an eye-witness to the inroads that are being made on our fair and rich Western domains, you could not but consider some of the reforms for which Liberals are doing battle as of minor importance to that of the land question. I shall endeavor, if possible, to locate a spot here before it is too late, that I may call home. I fear, however, that the freeze-out system employed by these foreigners (of which I will speak more at length some other time) will operate to prevent this much wished for event.

When it is known that foreign capital and capitalists employ at least two-thirds of the wage labor in a large section of country, here you hav the key to the difficulty of a poor man's chances of establishing himself here.

I will write again soon, and tell you something of English neighbors, etc.

Fraternally, J. ALLEN EVANS.

WITCHES AND HORSESHOES.

BERLIN, N. J., Oct. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: About sixty years ago I was teaching a school on the Atlantic shore, where the people had held religious meetings and had plenty of preaching, such as it was, for two hundred years or more. It was the custom then for the teacher to "board around" in all the families of the district, from one to two or more days in each family, according to the number of children they sent to school.

While boarding with an old deacon who had a face as long as a "summer day," but looking as cold and forbidding as the northern sky in January when the thermometer is twenty degrees below zero, and who prayed in his family every morning and evening, and "asked a blessing and returned thanks" for the food his own hands had earned, every time he ate. While boarding there, the deacon told me one evening that Captain D. had been to the city, and bought his winter supplies of flour, tea, coffee, sugar, and other groceries; and on his way home the witches ran off with his boat and all his supplies, and left him destitute of food. "But," said the deacon, "he has nailed a horseshoe to his other boat, and the witches won't take that. If he had only been wise enough to hav nailed a horseshoe to the one he went to the city in he would hav saved the boat and all his stores."

I tell you, Brother Eugene, I was astonished to hear such talk from a deacon 65 years of age, who had always sat in a front pew, directly under the "drippings of the pulpit."

When I went to Capt. D.'s to board he got to telling me about his loss. I told him the deacon had related the story to me, and told me he had nailed a horseshoe to the other boat. "But," said I, "I told the deacon that I could not believe a man of your age, a master mariner and customs officer, too, could be foolish enough to believe in the existence of witches, or that horseshoes could frighten them if they did exist." The captain sprang from his chair and turned to me, his eyes flashing fire, and cried out: "Well, I was fool enough to believe and to nail the horseshoe to the boat, and if you don't believe it you may go down to the boat and see for yourself." The next morning I went to the boat, and sure enough there was the horseshoe. On the way home he went on board a neighbor's schooner, tying his boat to the stern, and the sea being rough and the rope old, it broke in the night and let the boat loose; and all the witchcraft in the matter came from the ministers who had bewitched these men into their foolish belief. And now every day of my life I meet with more or less people who are as badly bewitched by priests into error and falsehood as these men were. Oh, for a Liberal paper in every house and a Liberal Club in every town.

J. HACKER.

P. S.—I forgot to say that wanting to be near the shore I applied for the same school the next fall, but could not hav it because I did not believe in witches. That was the only objection, and it came from the deacon who was trustee of the school. But I obtained a much better school. J. H.

TO BE, OR NOT TO BE.

DOWAGIAC, MICH., Oct. 10, 1883.

TO OTTO WETTSTEIN: The desire for immortality and the horror of "falling into naught" are instincts which are deeply imbedded in the human mind, and I freely admit that I share in the universal "selfish and egotistical" desire to liv forever. Having experienced much happiness in existence, I object decidedly to an adjournment, and believe I hav a right to protest against a fate toward which nature itself has set my whole being in revolt.

But so far from this desire to liv on being the cause or foundation of my faith, it works directly the other way, suggesting doubts and prompting me to search thoroughly the grounds of my hope. You always examin carefully the title deed of a piece of land on which you propose to build your home; and I hav eagerly sought to make myself acquainted with, and to weigh without prejudice, every argument which the "death-ends all" theory presents; and while I perceive some plausibility in its reasonings, a deeper glance (excuse the egotism) into the foundation principles of nature has confirmed my faith in the indestructibility of the "I am."

In my last letter I used the word Materialism in its current sense, as meaning simply a denial of a future life, and did not refer to that "august science which includes the whole philosophy of nature," for in that sense we are all Materialists. And by the term spiritual I do not mean immaterial, or without substance, but a finer, more ethereal substance than can be made apparent to our senses in this life; and I insist that we hav just as good grounds for inferring the existence of such a substance as you hav for assuming the existence of force, which is known only by its effects.

In the play of the mental faculties, in the longings of the soul for something higher, purer, grander than anything this world affords; in its ability to conceive of something which cannot be symbolized in words, we see the proof of a spiritual element in man; and the fact that sudden joy or grief can almost instantly destroy the body proves the superiority of the spiritual over the coarser material.

That you should find the mystery of spirit "so overwhelming, so baffling to reason," is indeed strange, for are you not yourself this moment a spirit? Do you not possess consciousness, identity, intelligence, and will? and these are not attributes of matter, for you deny intelligence to the atoms, and I deny that any commingling of any number of atoms, all destitute of intelligence, can result in the production of an intelligent entity. Such a proposition is "utterly unthinkable, undefinable, and out of the reach of the senses or understanding."

But assuming the existence of a spiritual element in nature, in which inhere the principles of intelligence and will, which causes all the transformations of visible matter, while it is itself indestructible, appears to me the most simple and easy solution of the question. It is indeed exchanging one mystery for another, but not, as you said, "adding another to the original problem."

You hav admitted that we hav no absolute knowledge of the true relations of matter and force. Why then so incredulous about the possibility of spirit existence? Our material existence is a mystery which baffles the profoundest thought of all the scientists and philosophers on earth; and matter as constituted of atoms which contain all the forces of nature and all the potential elements in the universe, is itself a problem so inexplicable that reason reels and retires dismayed at the utter fatuity of the attempt to comprehend it.

You asserted that "wishes and aspirations furnish the secret motiv and cause for the popular spiritual belief; but this charge of egotism and selfishness as a factor in fashioning his belief cannot be preferred against the Materialist." How does this agree with a statement which you make a little further on? "My existence would be miserable indeed—verging to madness—if I believed that in the future my fate might possibly be immortality." Here is selfishness arrayed against the doctrin of endless life, with a vehemence which might slightly bias your logic. Your intense desire for annihilation and your horror of being "forced into an eternal existence" is probably the secret motiv and cause why you so earnestly and ardently cherish and advocate the theory of future nonentity.

But let us see if this aversion to an endless life is founded on any rational wherefore.

As you can easily step out of existence at any time, yet do not do so, but rather employ all known means to prolong life, it is a reasonable inference that you consider this little piece of immortality which you now enjoy as quite precious, and you do not desire to exchange it for ever so much of "Nirvana."

If you do not consider existence a blessing per se, you and all "death-ends-all" Materialists ought (to be consistent with your creed) to avail yourselvs of your privilege of retiring from this scene and go immediately into that delightful realm of nothingness which is so much better. But if you admit that any term of life here is a real blessing, you hav conceded the ground that an eternal existence may be desirable. If an eternal existence would be a curse, then a brief existence is a curse, and I hav no faith in that unselfish martyrdom which makes the good of others the excuse for staying.

The best good for the whole race would be an immediate retreat into that abyss of nowhere, from whence we came; and the greatest act of benevolence which the scientist could perform would be to discover some method by which to arrest and put an end to this ceaseless flow of ephemeral and objectless existences called human life.

As for the God that you hav so thoroughly demolished I hav nothing to say in his defense, for I am sure he does not exist in any civilized brain. I never believed in a god "whose existence was based on a book," who "came from nothing," or who creates. But I believe that nature has a conscious soul, which is a constituent part of itself, and if this belief is a mistake it will not do any harm. It givs a glow and significance to all visible things, and seems to satisfy that longing of the soul for something "higher than I."

In the closing paragraph of your letter you hav asked some unanswerable questions, and demanded what you deem impossible demonstrations; but please remember that many of the accepted propositions of science are entirely undemonstrable, and if called upon for "absolute proof" you could only point to "indications." MRS. E. HEDDON.

NORDHOFF, Oct. 9, 1883.

MR. E. M. MACDONALD: The Christians are in a majority in this town, but they are a curious mixture; belong to a half dozen different factions. Besides the Catholics and Protestants hav all clubbed together and are building a church; and since they started it their minister has died. He was, formerly, a missionary to the Sandwich Islands, and had exhausted his vitality by an excess of labor with the nativ sisters, and there is no probability that they will agree on another. And to make things more complicated, a section of the Salvation Army are here raising h—l. Our postmaster is a Republican and also a Mason; and, do you know, the Masons are the most powerful band of highwaymen in this country. All secret orders are a menace to liberty.

I am going to hustle round and try to get more subscribers. Yours truly, FRED. ROBINSON.

TOMBSTONE, ARIZONA, Sept. 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a Spiritualist who is willing to work with all who are working for universal mental liberty, and I highly prize the true liberality of your fearless paper. Yours for humanity,

J. A. HENCK.

WESTFIELD, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I will try and make sure this time. Inclosed find postal order for renewal of subscription. Please allow me to ask those who deny a continued existence, after leaving this old shell, why a condition of being to us invisible is not as necessary to our existence as the butterfly is to the grub, or the top to the roots of the vegetable? When Spiritualists are ready to substitute interchange between these two conditions for incarnation of unchangeable germs, and Materialists that this dual condition of being is as necessary to the existence of all higher as to lower grades of being, will not the problem of existence be in a fair way of solution? J. TINNEY.

Awakening the Emotion of a Good Old Sinner.

Bright lights flashed in Mulkittle's church, and a plaintiv hymn, urging sinners to come to repentance, arose. People tip-toed down the carpeted aisles to get a better view of the mourners, and the old sexton sat at the rear end of the house and softly snored. Mr. Mulkittle's face wore an expression of deep joy, and he thanked the Lord when he looked at the mourners—thanked the Lord that his eloquence had brought them to repentance. Old man Capwell stood near the altar and sang, lifting himself on his toes and letting himself down on his heels, keeping time with the music. Occasionally his mind would drift away to his brickyard, and he wonld sometimes lose the motion while calculating the expense of a certain kiln, but, recovering himself, he would fall back into the proper rock and sing with renewed vigor.

Young Mulkittle, who, just before leaving home, had been slapped by his father for dropping jam on his trousers, sat near the "mourners' bench." He was not in a repentant frame of mind, for as the spoiling of his trousers had been purely accidental, he regarded the punishment as a piece of cruelty. He had often heard his father tell poor people to send their children to Sunday-school even if they had not good clothes, and he did not see why he should hav been slapped merely on account of a little jam. Old man Capwell, seeing the boy's mind so deeply concerned, thought that the spirit was moving him, and not knowing that he was the preacher's son, approached him and said:

"My little man, whom do you love?"

"Nobody now."

"Don't you want to go to heaven?"

"Do you?"

"Yes, my dear little fellow."

"Why don't you go then?"

"I'm not ready yet, my dear little fellow," and for a moment the old gentleman's mind dwelled on his brickyard.

"Why don't you get ready?"

"I am getting ready."

"Will all the boys that go up there an' kneel down go to heaven?"

"Yes."

"How do you know?"

"God says so."

"When did he say so?"

"Thousands of years ago."

"Does the Bible say kneel at the bench an' you can go to heaven?"

"Not exactly that, but you know the savior wanted little children to come unto him."

"An' they went, didn't they?"

"Oh, yes, they went.

"But he didn't tell em' to go to the bench after they had been slapped. Did you ever kneel at the bench?"

"Oh, yes!

"An' did it make you good?"

"Yes."

"An' you don't do anything bad?"

"Well, we are all sinners," the old fellow replied, as he thought of the bad bricks he had sold.

"Are you a sinner?"

"Yes, I am a sinner."

"Then why don't you kneel down?"

"But the Lord has forgiven my sins."

"When the Lord forgivs anybody's sins he's good then, ain't he?"

"Yes, child."

"Then why are you a sinner? Wait," he added as the old fellow was moving away. "If people are good after they've kneeled down an' cried, an' if you went there, why are you bad now?" but the old fellow pulled away from him. Approaching Mr. Mulkittle, he said:

"I wish you would go and talk to that little fellow yonder," pointing. "He's the toughest little cuss I ever came across."

"Let us sing the doxology," said the Rev. Mr. Mulkittle.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A CATALOG of Truth Seeker Publications will be sent free upon application to this office.

Poetry.

Speak Out.

BY EVA A. H. BARNES.

Speak out whatever word of truth
Thrills deepest in your being,
Nor wait for sympathetic praise
Or popular agreeing.
But whatsoe'er the music waked
Within your soul's deep measure,
Stand bravely forth before the world
As witness of your treasure.

Seek humbly at the shrine of Truth
For token of her favor,
Accepting with a thankful heart
Her gifts, whate'er their savor;
Then fearless speak the given word—
Proclaim the light that's breaking,
And it may prove the signal-note
For freedom's grand awaking.

It matters not the harvesting,
Or time of its appearing;
Thine but the task of sowing seed
With faithfulness unfearing.
And when the magic word has gone
On its God-given* mission,
Lo! myriad hearts in glad refrain
Catch up the chords elysian.

Then whatsoe'er shall come to bless
Your spirit in that telling,
Speak out, my friend, with glad impulse,
And keep the anthem swelling.
Till over all this broad domain
Mankind shall liv as brothers,
And Truth assert her royal sway
In loyal work for others.

*God never gave anybody or anything a mission. Man is the highest being we know anything about. —ED. T. S.

MR. MCELRONE, in the Catholic Review, advances this cheerful surmise as to the locality of hades: Materialists are apt to deride hell, because they fear it on account of its intangible, spiritual nature. It is a dream of enthusiasts, say they. It has nowhere a possible existence in the universe. Let them listen to what geologists hav to tell us. Geologists say that the easth is like an egg. The thin shell represents the ground or crust on which we walk; while, inside, the contents of the egg represent a mass of burning, fiery, molten matter, ever rolling and seething in the depths, and occasionally bursting up through the mountainous cones and undulations erected by it into steaming, all-destroying volcanoes of lava and brimstone. The recent horror of Ischia is an instance. Sometimes these red-hot floods of ashes destroy thousands, overrunning towns and villages by the score. What if hell be here? There is room a plenty in the hollow of the rotten earth for all the wretch-shams of men who ever trod upon the surface. And there, perhaps, in undreamed-of torments, the spirits of the lost languish now, awaiting that day when a lower hell and more agonizing pain shall swallow them, body and soul. But, oh, what a thought, to think that while we lie in some sweet covert or bower of summer verdure, and look out over the waving green of the pastoral fields, the white and yellow cottages of the husbandmen hid in vines and leaves, the singing brook below with the white pebbles in it, the azure of the sky overhead, the sun playing hide-and-seek behind huge billows of fleecy clouds, all the while, beneath us, separated only by a thin crust of earth, the dwelling of the damned, the home of impurity and curses, the wretch-abode of everlasting despair and fire and the worm that dieth not! What a thought, what a thought!

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movements; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker,

Founded by D. M. Bennett.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE,
NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It gives all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and gives everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winsted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

TERMS FOR BALANCE OF YEAR:

To all who will settle all arrearages and pay for the year 1884 in advance, we will allow the price for 1884 to be the same as for 1883—$2.50.

To all who renew for one year from next January, or thereafter, before January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To all new subscribers who send in their subscriptions previous to January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

TERMS FOR 1884:

Single subscription, - - -	$3 00
One subscription two years, -	5 00
Two new subscribers, - -	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance, -	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance, -	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance, -	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, -	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3), will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other Liberal paper. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York City.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS EINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiratiou: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents

Poetry.

Weaving the Web.

"This morn I will weave my wed," she said,
As she stood by the loom in the rosy light,
And her young eyes, hopefully glad and clear,
Followed afar the swallow's flight.
"As soon as the day's first tasks are done,
While yet I am fresh and strong," said she,
"I will hasten to weave the beautiful web
Whose pattern is known to none but me.

"I will weave it fine, I will weave it fair,
And ah! how the colors will glow!" she said;
"So fadeless and strong will I weave my web
That perhaps it will liv after I am dead."
But the morning hours sped on apace;
The air grew sweet with the breath of June,
The young Love, hid by the waiting loom,
Tangled the threads as he hummed a tune.

"Ah! life is so rich and full!" she cried,
"And morn is so short, though the days are long!
This noon I will weave my beautiful web—
I will weave it carefully, fine and strong."
But the sun rode high in the cloudless sky;
The burden and heat of the day she bore;
And hither and thither she came and went,
While the loom stood still as it stood before.

"Ah! life is too busy at noon," she said;
"My web must wait till the even-tide,
Till the common work of the day is done,
And my heart grows calm in the silence wide!"
So, one by one, the hours passed on
Till the creeping shadows had longer grown;
Till the house was still and the breezes slept,
And her singing birds to their nests had flown.

"And now I will weave my web," she said,
As she turned to her loom ere set of sun,
And laid her hands on the shining threads
To set them in order, one by one.
But hand was tired and heart was weak,
"I am not as strong as I was," sighed she,
"But the pattern is blurred, and the colors rare
Are not so bright or so fair to see!

"I must wait, I think, till another morn;
I must go to my rest with my work undone;
It is growing too dark to weave," she cried,
As lower and lower sank the sun.
She dropped the shuttle, the loom stood still;
The weaver slept in the twilight gray.
Dear heart! Will she weave her beautiful web
In the golden light of a longer day?

An Interesting Dialog.

The following is part of a conversation which occurred a few days since between the Rev. P. P. Easter and myself. The Reverend Easter is a fair sample of Oregon parsons; for argument in close quarters they resort to the convincing and demonstrativ argument—slander. They hav become so used to it in the pulpit that in an every-day conversation it is easy to utilize that Christian acquirement. Mr. Easter and I were discussing the relativ merits of Ingersoll and Beecher. Easter asserted that Ingersoll was very superficial, unreasonable, and unargumentativ.

Clow: Will you be kind enough to point out some of his superficial and unargumentativ arguments?

Easter: Yes; some of his poor reasoning can be found in his discussion with Black, where he asserts that this earth always existed in its present form.

C.: You misrepresent Ingersoll; he makes no such claim. He says that the matter of which the earth is a part always existed; that the earth has undergone innumerable changes.

E.: Well, he shows his ignorance when he claims that this world came into existence without the help of God.

C.: Can you disprove the claim by adducing evidence to prove that God created the earth?

E.: Yes, sir. Every cause has an effect; this earth is an effect; therefore, this earth had a cause.

C.: Very well; giv some evidence that that cause was the Bible God, an anthropomorphic being.

E.: That cause was an intelligent cause as is manifest by the intelligent effect. The earth manifests a design; therefore there was a designer.

C.: Well, let us apply the same argumen to the cause of the existence of God. As he is an effect, and as there can be no effect without a cause, what was that cause?

E.: God had no cause; he always existed.

C.: Did you not assert a few minutes since that every effect had a cause? You claimed that this earth was an intelligent effect; therefore it had an intelligent cause. You claim your God is an intelligent being; therefore, according to your logic, he must hav had an intelligent creator. You cannot dodge your own logic. God, with his personalities and attributes, manifests design; therefore he must hav had a designer. Your argument proves too much. Ingersoll can demonstrate the fact that the earth is in existence; that matter is indestructible; that something cannot be produced from nothing; hence matter always existed. You cannot demonstrate the existence of God. He is the creature of the imagination, a relic of barbarism. It would be equally logical to claim that because water runs down hill there is a God, as to claim that there must be a God because this world is in existence. The only way to see design in nature is to look at it through theological spectacles, dimmed by faith and superstition. For every effect that you will point out that manifests design, I will point out a dozen that will contradict it.

E.: Well, it is an old saying and a true one that the fool hath said in his heart, there is no God.

C.: Yes, I admit that is an antiquated Christian evidence to prove the existence of a God; but even that proves too much, as fools always tell the truth; hence the fool is right when he says there is no God.

E.: Ingersoll is a fool.

C.: You are the first man or woman that I hav heard of who ever called him a fool.

E.: Well, he is a fool, and I can prove it. Anyone who doubts is a fool.

C.: Do you ever doubt?

E.: I meant to say who doubts revealed religion.

C.: Do you doubt the religion of the Mohammedans as revealed to them through the Koran?

E.: Yes, because it is a false religion.

C.: Would a Mohammedan be justified in calling you a fool for doubting Mohammedanism?

E.: No.

C.: You are inconsistent. Religious belief is an accident of birth. You are a Christian simply because you were born among Christians, and because of the Christian teachings inculcated into your mind in childhood. If you had been born in Turkey and had had the Mohammedan religion instilled into your mind, you would in all probability hav been a Mohammedan, and would be calling Ingersoll a fool for not believing the inspiration of the Koran and in the Mohammedan religion.

E.: Well, I hold to and can prove my position.

C.: All right; from your position, if Mr. Ingersoll is right, if what he teaches is true, then he is a wise man; if what he teaches is false, then he is a fool, which you must admit. Very well; let us apply that test to you and see if it will not demonstrate and prove too much. If what you teach is true, you are wise; but if what you teach is false, you are a fool; which you must admit. According to you, such men as Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Haeckel, and other great scientific men are fools; also the great statesmen, Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Lincoln. It won't do.

E.: Do you not know that Ingersoll is afraid to meet an educated Christian in debate? O. A. Burgess once challenged him to debate, and instead of accepting the challenge he sneaked off on the first train, glad to escape a castigation at the hands of Burgess. Another eminent Christian, D. B. Dungan, also caused Ingersoll to back down. Ingersoll is very brave when he can discuss with stragglers.

C.: In regard to Burgess and Dungan, I know nothing of the reasons why Ingersoll refused to discuss; he may hav had good grounds for not noticing them. Because he refuses to occupy his time discussing with every parson who may see fit to challenge him, it does not signify that he is either cowardly or incompetent. Whenever Christianity wishes to appoint a learned Christian representativ to discuss with Ingersoll, I presume he will be willing to meet him. You are the first preacher who has claimed Jere Black and Professor Fisher to be stragglers.

E.: Ingersoll preaches Infidelity for the money there is in it. It is the money he is after; he is not sincere.

C.: If Ingersoll were to preach for money, he could become a millionaire. If he would renounce his belief, accept Christianity, and become a follower of the mythical Jesus, the church would rejoice and shower wealth upon him. Then he would be "the Honorable Robert G. Ingersoll," instead of the pet name in which Christians delight, "Infidel Bob." Your assertion is disproved by the facts of the case. He is a man whom the church can neither buy nor intimidate.

E.: Do you think it right to teach that stealing and lying are justifiable?

C.: No, certainly not. Who teaches thus?

E.: Ingersoll does.

C.: My friend, you hav now uttered what you know to be an absolute falsehood, and it is unpardonable.

E.: Well, I can prove it. In a book entitled "Modern Thinkers" he teaches that doctrin.

C.: You are mistaken; the author of "Modern Thinkers" is Van Buren Denslow.

E.: Well, Ingersoll indorsed the book.

C.: You hav become so used to contorting the meaning of your Bible that when reading Infidel works it is easy for you to co the meaning of them. Pleace quote the passage, word for word, which you claim contains such teachings.

After "hemming and hawing" a moment, he blurted out, "I cannot recollect the exact words, but they are in that book."

C.: No; you are mistaken. You hav got names and books rather mixed. Instead of Ingersoll and the book, "Modern Thinkers," you should hav said St. Paul and the New Testament. You hav been reading in your testament where St. Paul excuses himself for lying on the ground that it was right to lie for the glory of God, and he has disciples who pattern after him in these modern times.

E.: I tell you those teachings are in that book, and Ingersoll indorses it. I will bring it to you and prove it. Ingersoll's teachings are filling our jails; our morality is in danger.

C.: Hav you any evidence to justify and support that assertion?

E.: Yes, I hav the statistics of Iowa. Most of the inmates of the jails are drunkards.

C.: Well, show proof that they are Infidels.

E.: Drunkards are not Christians.

C.: Giv me the definition of Christian.

E.: No definition is necessary.

C.: Well, I will giv you the definition. A Christian is one who believes in the divinity of Christ and the divine origin of Christianity. A man may get drunk as often as he pleases; that does not lessen his belief.

E.: Oh, well, those who do not practice what they believe are not Christians.

C.: If a man does not believe in Christianity and the Bible, and gets drunk, what would you call him?

E.: A drunken Infidel.

C.: And if a man who believes in Jesus's religion and the Bible gets drunk, what do you call him?

E.: A fool.

C.: You are wrong; he is but an example of the many drunken Christians that fill our jails. It is incumbent on you to show that the inmates are Infidels. I will guarantee for every Infidel you will show who is an inmate of prison to giv you the names of twenty-five preachers in prison.

The Reverend Easter left me in a Christian rage. Easter is a physician besides being a preacher. His doctoring is like his preaching—very poor. He relies more on prayer than medicin to cure his patients (which are few). Prayer is so much cheaper than drugs, you know. His head contains more superstition than intelligence. Bigotry and unfairness find a resting-place therein. W. C. Clow.

Hillsboro, Or.

"It is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call."—Editor Truth Seeker.

God and the State.

BY

MICHAEL BAKOUNINE

Founder of Nihilism and Apostle of Anarchy.

WITH A PREFACE BY

CARLO CAFIERO AND ELISEE RECLUS.

Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker,

(Editor of Liberty.)

52 pages, octavo. Price 15 cents. Address,

THE TRUTH SEEKER,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man

Price 10 cents. Address,

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

To My Friends:

No God, no heaven, no hell,
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents. "John's Way," 15 cents. "Clergyman's Victims," 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances. "Studying the Bible," 75 cents. "Godly Women," showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. "Private Physiology for Girls," worth $5 to any woman if she heeds health, $1. Photos, card, 15 cents; imperial, 20 cents. "Crimes of Preachers," 25 cents. "Leaves of Grass," a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2. "Infidel School Teacher," 25 cents. "Little Lessons for Children," 50 cents.

DIANA.

A Startling Book. Original in theory, unobjectionable in language, scientific in treatment. None should marry without consulting "DIANA." Price, 25 cents. "Sexual Physiology for the Young," cloth, 50 cents. "Science in Story," a comic, amusing, scientific, and sensible story, cloth, illustrated, $2. "Plain Home Talk," the cheapest book in the world, and full of hygienic information, 1,000 illustrations, $1.50. "Health Hints," 25 cents. These four are by Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York. "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism," $1.50. "Vindication of Gibbon," a valuable work crowded with thought and truth, $2. Specimens of Herald of Health, Health Monthly, Herald of Industry, Alpha, THE TRUTH SEEKER, Iconoclast, Thinker, Queen Bee, Liberal, Investigator, Blade, and Matrimonial Review, 6 cents each. "Six Tracts," 6 cents each. And any other Liberal book you may want, at publisher's price. Address,

ELMINA D. SLENKER,

4t40 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

James Ashman, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. Burr, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. Keeler, Park City, Utah.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. Stevens, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.
D. Woolf, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. Mansfield, Tucson, Arizona.
A. Berenz, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton, Mass.
Chas. S. Coburn, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. Thomas, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. Wright, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
Tho's Foreman, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. Moore, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. Rowley, Jackson, Mich.
Joseph L. Andrews, Corning, Iowa.
E. Keith, Animas City, Col.
Charles Watts & Co., London, England.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

HAV YOU READ IT?

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL.

THE DANISH CURE EXPLAINED

BY WILHELMINE D. SCHOTT,

Practitioner of the Danish Cure.

WITH PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; large type, widely spaced; extra cloth, black and gold side and back stamps; 12mo., 319 pp.; $1.50.

A VERY APPROPRIATE GIFT BOOK.

It tells you what physicians should tell their patients, but do not: How to avoid contracting "doctors' bills;" how to hav good health without taking medicins. Hints on every subject pertaining to the health of women and children.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to giv a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick. She considers Animal Electricity, used as directed in this book, a very important curativ agent.

Although written primarily for women, this book will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, Nature will remove the difficulty without other aid.

Send to THE TRUTH SEEKER for circular and contents.

Photographs of T. Winter,

The Great Western Materialist, now on sale at 265 West Eighth street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Card size, 50 cents; cabinet size, $1. Mailed to address on prepayment. 4t43

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR

OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,

STYLED

Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

WETTSTEIN'S JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF ME ICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT STREET, and

286 FULTON STREET,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

WILLIAM WILSON'S ELECTRO-CHEMICO VAPORIZER.

THE CULMINATION OF OPTICAL PHYSICS DEMONSTRATED IN "ACTINA."

"ACTINA,"

THE GREAT EYE-RESTORER.

"Actina has an instantaneous action on the various and mysteriously complicated organs of vision, the nerves, the blood vessels, the muscular coats and complex membranes which make up that marvelous mechanism of nature, the eye. Whether in the human being, the insect, or brute, all diseases of the eye result from an irregularity of the secretions. This may be brought about in a variety of ways—overwork, anxiety, breathing impure atmosphere, straining the eyes over intricate mechanism, etc., etc.; while hundreds of thousands hav ruined their sight by the use of powerful drugs taken with a view of curing other forms of disease. But all these cases can be met successfully by the regular use of "Actina."

"Actina" will relieve colds in the head, inflammation in the eyes, headache, catarrh, neuralgia, sore eyelids, and humors of all kinds.

☞NOTE.—"Actina" is not a medicin or lotion, but a self-generating vapor, easily applied at all hours, times, and places, can be carried in the pocket, and used by any member of the family with perfect safety, from infancy to old age.

TRIAL FREE OF CHARGE.

By calling at our several stores you may try the remedy, free of charge; but be particular not to use any vaporizer unless it bears the signature of William Wilson, who will state positivly if relief and cure be possible.

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN

ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN.

W. WILSON, President.

D. J. COTTER, Secretary.

[All checks, post-office order, and drafts payable to the Anglo-American Electric Association.]

CAUTION:

Beware of cheap imitations of our goods. Read your back copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four years, and note our thousands of testimonials.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

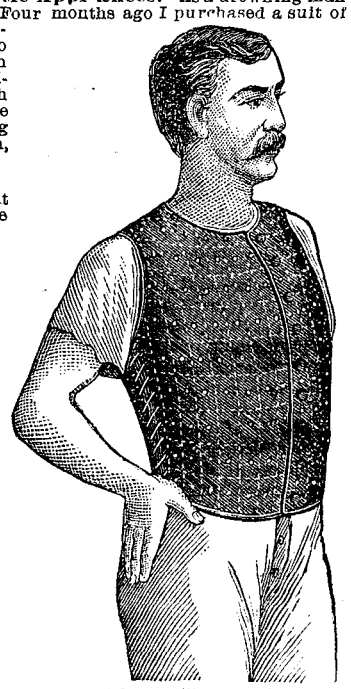
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us your stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney, 324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6@15

DR. FELLOWS

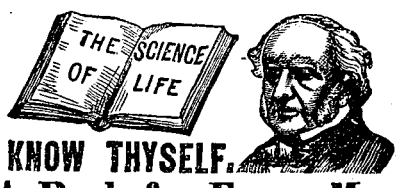
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

80 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

G. A. Lomas, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

THE world itself is too large a miracle that we should be taken up with any village miracles.—Emerson.

THE object of our lives should be to make this world as beautiful, and ourselvs and our fellows as happy, as is in our power. If we do this we need never hav a fear of death, or of what is to come after it.—D. M. Bennett.

TO reconcile the indifference and contingency of human actions with the prescience of God, or to defend absolute decrees, and yet free the deity from being the author of sin, has been found hitherto to exceed all the power of philosophy. Happy if she be thence sensible of her temerity, when she pries into these sublime mysteries, and, leaving a scene so full of obscurities and perplexities, return, with suitable modesty, to her true and proper province, the examination of common life; where she will find difficulties enough to employ her inquiries, without launching into so boundless an ocean of doubt, uncertainty, and contradiction.—Hume's Liberty and Necessity.

BOOKS are now placed within reach of all. Works, once too costly except for the opulent, are now to be found on the laborer's shelf. Genius sends its light into cottages. The great names of literature are become "household words" among the crowd. Every party, religious or political, scatters its sheets on all the winds. We may lament—and, too, justly—the small comparativ benefit as yet accomplished by this agency; but this ought not to surprise or discourage us. In our present state of improvement books of little worth, deficient in taste and judgment, and ministering to men's prejudices and passions, will almost certainly be circulated too freely. Men are never very wise and select in the exercise of a new power. Mistake, error, is the disciplin to which we advance.—Dr. Channing's Present Age.

FOR anglers, in spring, it is always unlucky to see single magpies, but two may always be regarded as a favorable omen; and the reason is that in cold and stormy weather one magpie alone leaves the nest in search of food, the other remaining sitting upon the eggs or the young ones; but when the two go out together, it is only when the weather is warm and mild and favorable for fishing.—Sir Humphrey Davy's Salmonia.

THE Arminian doctrin aims to condition or limit the absolute character of the divine act in redemption in some way or another; the Calvinistic doctrin, on the other hand, aims to giv this act the most arbitrary and irresponsible character. The one, while not absolutely repudiating a doctrin of election, yet givs such prominence to the human conditions of the electiv purpose, as [in the view of Calvinists] to destroy it altogether; the other maintains not only a doctrin of election or predestination, but also the correlativ doctrin of reprobation. In the view of the Arminian, salvation is within the choice of the human will; in the view of the Calvinist, the human will is of little or no account—the decree of God is everything; and this decree, which Calvin himself admitted to be a decretum horribila [a horrible decree], absolutely determins some to everlasting life and some to everlasting death. The separation has its source in the will of God, and not in the moral conditions of mankind.—Chambers's Encyclopedia.

FEAR is the natural ally of ignorance and superstition. It is born of mental darkness. It belongs to the night-time of the human intellect, when things are seen dimly, out of their true proportions, and the imagination conjures up baleful mysteries. The daylight of knowledge comes, the reality is seen, and the fear vanishes. But reverence may consist with reality. This is the lesson which nineteenth century knowledge is teaching us. . . . It is truth that properly excites the emotion of reverence—truth in all its vast and wonderful actuality, as it comes within the domain of man's existing knowledge, and truth in all the infinit immensity of its possibilities, as unfolded within the universe yet beyond man's knowledge.—Wm. J. Potter.

LIFE'S autumn past, I stand on winter's verge,
And daily lose what I desire to keep!
Yet rather would I instantly decline
To the traditionary sympathies
Of a most rustic ignorance, and take
A fearful apprehension from the owl
Or death-watch—and as readily rejoice
If two auspicious magpies crossed my way;
To this would rather bend than see and hear
The repetitions wearisome of sense,
When soul is dead and feeling hath no place.
—Wordsworth's Excursion.

RIGHT and duty are not of God's manufacture. They do not ask his leave to be; and it is not his power or prerogativ to change their essential nature and form. They rule him, instead of being ruled by him. The judge of all the earth must do right, if there is such a judge. If there is not, still right is not annihilated. It remains as the dictator of all who can conceive the motiv of obligation—that is, of all intelligence.—W. J. Gill.

EXPERIENCED fact was to Carlyle revelation, and the only true revelation. In revelation, technically so called—revelation confirmed by historical miracles—he was unable to believe; he felt himself forbidden to believe by the light that was in him. In other ages men had seen miracles when there were none, and had related them in perfect good faith, in their eagerness to realize the divine presence in the world. They did not know enough of nature to be on their guard against alleged suspensions of its unvarying order. To Carlyle the universe was itself a miracle, and all its phenomena were equally incomprehensible in themselvs.—Froude's Life of Carlyle.

O DEATH! the poor man's dearest friend,
The kindest and the best!
Welcome the hour my aged limbs
Are laid with thee at rest.
The great, the wealthy, fear thy blow,
From pomp and pleasure torn;
But oh, a blest relief to those
That weary-laden mourn.
—Burns's Man Was Made to Mourn.

Odds and Ends.

CAN the policeman who chases and catches a Chinese criminal be said to be the Asiatic collarer?

IT is amusing to watch a cross-eyed minister read the old hymn, "I will guide thee with mine eye."

COFFEE-TINTED lace is the latest. The ladies wear it to the theater. It matches their escorts' breath.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher: "Now, little boy, who was Moses?" Little boy: "The feller what married the fat girl."

EVERY man has three characters—that which he exhibits, that which he has, and that which he thinks he has.

AN exchange has an elaborate article for amateur vocalists—"How to begin to sing." How to get them to quit is still an unsolved problem.

A VERMONT editor, in publishing one of Byron's poems, changed the words "O gods!" to "Oh, gosh!" because the former was too profane for his readers.

A BOSTON man claims that the human body, minus the legs, would float like a duck's. Try and remember this some day when you are drowning; whip out your knife and cut your legs off, and your life will be saved.

AN article in an exchange is headed "Religious Umbrellas." A religious umbrella, we should say, is one that doesn't leave the church fifteen minutes before its owner, and send a twenty-five-cent substitute to take its place.

THERE was a young girl named Maria,
Who tried to sing high C still higher,
But the confounded note stuck crosswise in her throat,
And they bounced her right out of the choir.

THE buckwheat-cake season will soon be upon us, and therefore it is well to advise all housekeepers that the cakes this year should be made light and full of small holes. The nearer you get them to resemble a porous plaster the more fashionable they will be.

A YOUNG lady who recently started out as a fashion writer has determined to quit journalism. She mentioned in an article on ladies' fashions that "skirts are worn very much shorter this year than usual." The young lady is certainly justified in being angry with the careless compositor who changed the k in skirts to an h.

A COUPLE of pickpockets followed a gentleman for some blocks with a view of availing themselvs of the first opportunity to relieve him of his purse. He suddenly turned into a lawyer's office. "What shall we do now?" asked one. "Wait for the lawyer," said the other.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago a Brooklyn young lady had a singular dream. She consulted a dream-book and found that she would hav four husbands before she reached the age of thirty. This made her rather independent, and she is now an old maid of forty-two and has never had a beau. Some dream-books are not as reliable as they might be.

"I WISH I was a star," he said, smiling at his own poetic fancy. "I would rather you were a comet," she said, dreamily. His heart beat tumultuously. "And why?" he said tenderly, at the same time taking her unresisting little hands in his own. "And why?" he repeated, imperiously. "Oh," she said, with a brooding earnestness that fell freezingly upon his soul, "because then you would come round only once every fifteen hundred years!"

IT is alleged that a man in Georgia has a rooster that "strikes the hour." He crows twelve times every night at twelve o'clock, and is sure not to vary a second from the correct time. Let us see. The apostle Peter had something to do with a night-crowing rooster some years since. His rooster crew thrice, while the Georgia man's crows twelve times. According to this, it is calculated that the Georgia man can prevaricate four times to Peter's once. Tally one for Georgia.

"THE tobacco habit," wrote the editor, while the entered apprentice stood by the sanctum desk waiting for copy, "the tobacco habit is an evil that the press of the country should bring its united powers against. It is an insidious foe to health. It lessens mental vigor, shatters the nervous system, and destroys the vital forces of the digestiv organs. The rapid increase of this habit, ruinous to body and mind, and taxing to our purses, is enough, indeed, to fill the minds of deep thinkers of our age with the darkest forebodings for the future of the nation." And then the editor handed the copy to the entered apprentice, filled his briarwood with "Old Virginia," and scraped a red-headed match upon the wall; and as the blue smoke curled upward in graceful wreaths that formed a halo about the editor's head, he leaned back in his easy-chair, closed his eyes, and wondered what in the course of human events he should write about next.

WHEN Esau back from hunting came,
All weary, hungry, stiff, and lame,
And found within his cottage
No signs of supper, in a pout
He sold his precious birthright out
For one hot mess of pottage.

To Isaac's bedside Jacob slid,
Pretending he was t'other kid—
The blessing was awarded!
Thus by his cuteness, all the same,
He played the very first "skin" game
That history has recorded.

When Lot and wife from Sodom fled,
He straight o'er hill and valley sped,
But she in her course did waver.
That she got "left" was not his fault;
He reasoned thus: "'Tis only salt
That possibly can save her."

As she turned salt, he turned away
And "soured on her," as they say.
This was his first impression:
"I'll yield her only with my life.
But then you're most too salt a wife—
I guess I'll get a fresh un!" —Puck.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 44. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 3, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

"LEARN to pray," said a dying merchant to his sons; "but, boys, don't trust."

"HE was a kind friend and a numerous husband," is the epitaph popular in Utah.

AN order to vaccinate all of the pupils in the public schools of France has revived opposition to that mode of preventing small-pox.

DEVOUT Moslems say that the world will come to an end this year on November 8th. It is alarming to see this growing disposition to set the date earlier every season.

HINDOO coffee suppers are fashionable in the church circles of Fort Wayne. The girls act as waitresses, in Hindoo costume, as to the style of which a clergyman has felt constrained to remonstrate.

"PAP, who made God?" "Nobody, son; God made himself." "How could he make himself, when he wasn't made himself yit?" "That's something we mustn't study into. Say your prayers and go to bed."

MESSRS. GREWETT and Foster, pillars of the Baptist church in Floresville, Texas, disputed over a Biblical question until they lost their temper, and then they fought with their fists until other members of their church separated them.

IN Warsaw a ladies' school, which is under the patronage of the empress, has been searched by the police, and one Russian teacher and eight pupils were arrested on the charge of having helped to propagate Nihilist writings.

IT is said that every other Mormon is a liar by force of habit, every third one a horse-thief, every fourth a murderer, every fifth a polygamist, and every millionth an honest man. Mormons are much like the rest of the religious sects after all.

THREE Kentucky brothers were married on the same day two years ago, and they came as near to simultaneously getting divorces as the courts would permit, the three suits being instituted at one time, and the decrees being granted within a week of each other.

THE antiquity of magnifying-glasses is indicated by the following passage from the writings of Confucius, the great Chinese philosopher, who died 478 years B.C.: "As we use a glass to examin the forms of things, so must we study antiquity to understand the present."

ABOUT this time the attendance on the Sunday-schools begins to increase and continues to grow until after all the Christmas presents are given out. It is really distressing to see the amount of piety some of these Christmas scholars manage to load themselvs down with.

MISS ANNIE WEST, a charming young graduate of Vassar, has sailed away from these shores to do missionary work. Now, if there is one thing that the cannibals dote on, it is a young, tender, and charming little Vassar-girl on toast. Good-bye, Anna, we shall meet on that beautiful shore.—Siftings.

A TEMPERANCE man orating at a soldier's banquet out West had occasion to repeat the couplet, "Their bones are moldering in the dust, their spirits are in heaven, we trust;" but instead of "spirits" he used the word "stimulants" as being less offensiv to some good church-members whom he saw present.

AT the last General Convention of the Episcopal church previous to the triennial-centennial convention just closed at Philadelphia, a resolution was introduced to raise $1,000,000 for the purpose of building new churches and helping poor congregations. Thus far the contributions to this fund amount to a comparativly trifling sum. It was hoped and expected that this last convention would take measures to push to completion this enterprise. But the scheme was not revitalized, and it is now probably dead beyond hope of revival. So the "two churches a day" that Protestants are building are not helped by the Episcopalians.

A CERTAIN country clergyman used to tell a good story of his going to a new parish and asking a parishioner what his occupation was. "I am the village rat-catcher," the man replied; "and what are you?" The clergyman answered that he was the village parson, whereupon the rat-catcher was good enough to observe that he supposed "we must all get a living somehow."

ONE Chicago minister preached a sermon on the text, "The hand of the diligent maketh a man rich," and he advised the young men to be diligent. Another minister, that same evening, delivered a sermon on the text "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," and the Chicago young men are considerably broke up as to whether it is best to be diligent and get rich, and be barred out of heaven. It is the opinion of Mr. Peck, of the Milwaukee Sun, that the ministers ought to hav an understanding about their texts.

THE motiv for the latest anti-Jewish riot in the province of Ekaterinoslav was this: An old church had been robbed of its sacred plate, and great excitement followed. Suddenly a rumor spread that the plate had been discovered in a Jewish pawn shop. A furious riot then broke out, but the Jews escaped with their lives, while the rioters lost a score in dead and a hundred in wounded. Thereupon the Jews mocked at the Christian peasants, saying: "We hav lost our feathers, and you hav lost your lives." What great blessings Judaism and Christianity hav been to the world!

IN Ireland the national journals are calling for the prosecution of the aristocratic rowdies who organized the Orange mobs at the meeting in Monaghan. Ten thousand Orangemen were mustered by means of excursion trains and free tickets, and all were armed. The resolutions were passed to the accompaniment of pistol shots, and at one period during the meeting, a fusilade from thousands of revolvers lasted for several minutes, and was heard for miles around. Miss Ford, of the Irish World, has distributed in Dublin sums of about a thousand dollars each to the families of the men hanged for the Phœnix Park murders.

WILLIAM MACCALL writes to the London Republican that, "Of all priests since the beginning of the world the Anglican priests are the greediest. Indeed, their insatiate cupidity is their chief characteristic. Lately Archibald Boyd, Dean of Exeter, died, leaving a fortune of nearly a hundred and forty thousand pounds. Dean Boyd belonged to the low church party, and was charitable enough to say that hell was in store for all Roman Catholics. Dante, who was a good Catholic, allotted the hottest place in hell to the covetous. At all events, such monsters of avarice as Dean Boyd deserve the eternal execration of mankind."

I EXCHANGED some words with the Hon. Robert Ingersoll on the way to Washington last Thursday morning. Speaking of a funeral that was to be held that day, the colonel said, "If I could not make a world without death in it, I would go out of the business. Think," said he, "of starting railroad trains every day, or every hour of the day, and wrecking every one of them? What kind of an engineer would that man be? Yet every life that is launched is doomed to terminate in pain and misery." Said I, "What is your cure for it?" "There is none," said he, "and that is the worst of all." "Don't you think, colonel, that death in a large number of cases is rather a grateful solution of life? Raleigh addresses death as the last and noblest friend of man?" "Oh!" said the colonel, "I suppose that a poor, pursued, hunted fellow like that could see some advantages in death. Men of his time were a good deal worse than they are now. They did not care much in those days about administering poison to each other to get rid of a rival. Raleigh," said the colonel, "was a very slippery customer, especially after he got over to Ireland."—Tribune's Broadway Lounger.

THE Nihilists, according to a London correspondent of the New York Sun, are in a bad way in Russia. The czar has been able to lay the foundation of a chapel on the spot where his father was assassinated amid signs of universal popularity, though sixty-three members of a revolution society hav been just condemned to Siberia. Chapels and prisons go together in a country where church and state are united. Meantime Russian officialism daily makes blunders and daily grows more hateful. Correspondence which, unlike telegrams, has escaped the censorship, givs curious accounts of the gigantic success of Tourguenieff's funeral, and of shameless attempts to degrade it by the official classes.

THE Marietta, Ohio, News reports Joe Cook's lecture in that town on the 22d ult., as follows: "A large, pussy gentleman, named Cook, lectured at the City Hall on Monday evening, on 'The Seven Wonders of the World.' We will wager a next year's watermelon that he now has eight on his list, as he rode over the jerkwater from here to Parkersburg the next day. He succeeded in getting himself greatly disliked at the National House, where the proprietor and others refused to put up with his domineering ways. He was given to understand that in the future when visiting here he would hav to find accommodations elsewhere. A just and righteous conclusion."

La Presse Medicale Belge says that a mysterious personage recently installed himself as a doctor in the most frequented part of the Faubourg Montmartre, Paris, to whose presence admission could only be gained after infinit questionings. His assumed name was foreign, and his servants were bound over to secrecy. This difficulty of access and air of mystery acted as a tremendous advertisment, and his consultation room was soon so besieged that the attention of the police was attracted. A Commissaire demanded an inspection of his diploma. To his surprise the doctor showed perfectly authentic documents. "And now that you hav assured yourself, M. Commissaire," said the doctor, "do not betray me; for if my patients come to know that I am a mere doctor of the medical faculty of Paris, I shall see no more of them."

As a specimen of the grotesque absurdities in which adulterated Buddhism has indulged may be taken, says the British Quarterly Review, the story of the ascetic named—from the peculiarity of his origin—Gazelle Horn. This self-denying hermit was walking along one day, with a jug is his hand, when a local divinity allowed a torrent of rain to descend upon him. Ascetics, we are told, "are very quickly moved to wrath." So Gazelle Horn cursed that deity and ordered him not to rain any more for twelve years. The consequence of the drought was a famin. The king of the country sent for his diviners, who told him what had happened, and added that unless the ascetic could be disturbed in his penances no rain could be expected. Being brought to the palace, the ascetic fell in love with one of the king's daughters, who did her best to please him, and her father gave her to him in marriage. Thereupon, his penances having come to an untimely end, his magic power vanished. Straightway "the deity rejoicing in rain called the clouds together from every side, and sent down copious showers, the consequence of which was an abundant harvest." For some time the ex-ascetic lived peaceably with his royal spouse, but after a time her good-humor became deteriorated by jealousy, and "one day she hit him a blow on the head with a shoe. Then he said to himself: 'I, who used not to allow power to the thunder or the cloud, must now, being fettered by love-bonds, allow myself to be set at naught by a woman!' Thereupon he again devoted himself to ascetic exertion, and once more became possessed of the five kinds of higher knowledge."

News of the Week.

RUSSIA and Germany are fortifying their frontiers.

THE Mormons report a membership in the Sandwich Islands of 3,600.

A THEATER in this city raised $1,000 by a concert last Sunday for the proposed monument to Peter Cooper.

THERE has been a riot at Valenca-do-Minho in Spain on account of the burial of a woman in a church contrary to law.

SULLIVAN and Slade, the pugilists, gave boxing exhibitions in Cincinnati last Sunday without interference from the police.

THE Paris Times says it is rumored that the king of Portugal, being worried by the Liberal agitation in his country, thinks of abdicating the throne.

IT is asserted that the pope will declare the Partheon at Rome a pagan temple if a monument to the late King Victor Emanuel of Italy is erected in its center, as is intended by King Humbert.

A MAN named Banks was, last week, convicted of belonging to the Ku-Klux-Klan of Georgia, and participating in outrages on negro voters. It is the first conviction of a Ku-Klux in that state.

A CONFLICT is expected between Irish Orangemen and the Nationalists who are soon to hold a meeting at Belleck, Ireland. Two thousand Orangemen hav been armed with revolvers.

INVESTIGATIONS of the marshal's offices at Rochester, N. Y., and for the middle and southern districts of Alabama, reveal the fact that the management in both places has been characterized by fraud.

THE body of Mrs. Peter Offenbacker, who died 34 years ago, and was buried at St. Pars, Ohio, on being disinterred last week was found in a state of perfect petrifaction, and the features as natural as life.

PETER'S pence were collected at the Catholic churches last Sunday. By representing the pope as in great distress, the priests succeeded in securing large contributions, some from those who had more money than brains, and some from those who had not much of either.

SUICIDES are numerous these days. Monday morning's papers mention Caleb Pratt, of Boston, aged 72, who shot himself; Mabel Stone, of Boston, who shot herself; Charles Reinherr, of Brooklyn, who shot himself; and the bishop of Pruchna, in Austria, who hanged himself.

THE latest Nihilist proclamation, which is being extensivly circulated, demands that the czar summon the representativs of the Russian people, and ask for full amnesty, freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and the right to hold public meetings as the only means of preventing a revolution. Pitiless vengence is threatened if the demands of the Nihilists are disregarded.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has issued a Thanksgiving proclamation to the effect that on the 29th of November next, the people of this nation are expected to assemble at their accustomed place of worship and thank God for whatsoever blessings they may believe he has vouchsafed them during the past year; it is also considered necessary to request the deity to continue the same until further notice.

THE Spiritualists of the South, after a fortnight's session, consisting of daily lectures, seances, etc., held a general convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the 26th ult., and completed a permanent organization by the election of Samuel Watson, D.D., of Memphis, president. Chattanooga is made the southern headquarters of the church, and its literature will be distributed broadcast throughout the South from that city. A Southern camp-meeting association will also be organized.

Communications.

The Model Saints of the Old Testament.

CANONIZED BY THE APOSTLE PAUL IN THE ELEVENTH CHAPTER OF HIS EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

The neuter noun "morals" is of Latin derivation, and means the customs, the manners, that prevail among a people in any given age or country. Thus the gladiatorial shows were in fashion at Rome, and continued so for many generations, and gave delight to thousands of spectators who gazed upon the bloody scenes. They would not now be tolerated anywhere, for the custom has changed, and it would be deemed barbarous. The Spanish people of the highest rank spend the best part of their Sundays in the pleasing avocation of witnessing bull baits. But although cities are justly said to be sores upon the body politic, reeking with all kinds of corruption, there is no city in the world, outside of Spain and her colonies, where bull baiting would be considered moral. The code of morals in our state of Louisiana allows dealing in lotteries, and persons of the utmost respectability are engaged in the business. In Pennsylvania, such an occupation would be a transgression of the law, and those who were guilty of it would be punished with fine and imprisonment. Thus we see that popular ideas of what is right and moral, and what is wrong and immoral, hav been subject to the same law of change that modifies all things else. In contemplating this universal mental confusion on the all-important question of right, and of duty, a thoughtful person asks, with deep emotion, whether, for the self-government of man, in all the various relations of life, there is no steady, infallible standard, suitable for all ages, and binding upon all people; or whether we are destined to be forever tossed about, like a ship at sea, without compass or chart, uncertain as to the duties we owe to ourselvs or others. Mr. Buckle, in his "History of Civilization," discusses this question at length, and arrives at the conclusion, which commands the assent of all men, that any and every thing is right and allowable which injures neither one's self nor any other person or thing; and that any and every thing is wrong, and forbidden by the law of nature, which does injure either one's self or any other person or sensitiv thing. We hav an indisputable right, either in our proximate or ultimate search after happiness, to enjoy everything that is enjoyable, intellectually, bodily, or affectionately, provided we observe the rule just laid down, and thus enjoy in moderation. The moment we go beyond that, the greatest blessing is transformed into a curse, because it injures either ourselvs or others, or both. No man has a right to inflict upon himself an injury which incapacitates him for performing his duties, and for enjoying those pleasures which constitute his birthright as a human being. And what he has no right to inflict upon himself, he has no right to inflict upon another. This rule of morals is so plain, so just, and so easily comprehended by the most illiterate, that it requires no priesthood to expound it to the people. It is the morality inculcated by nature and common sense, which, if it had not been trampled down by superstition, would hav given the world, long ago, freedom, health, and happiness.

Instead of this code by which nature, our mother, designed that each of her children should regulate himself in all the relations of life, the church teaches the doctrin that a thing is right and ought to be done because God commands it or allows it in the Bible, and that another thing is wrong because the Bible forbids it, taking for granted what the overwhelming majority of the human family deny, that the Bible is, or even claims to be, an infallible revelation from heaven, prescribing every dogma we are to believe concerning God, and every duty which God requires of man. The Catholic church, which is older than the New Testament, models the characters of its members by the "lives of the saints," who, during many centuries, hav been canonized for their churchly virtues. The Protestants, on the contrary, confine themselvs to the models whose names and doings are immortalized in the scriptures. Paul, in the 11th, chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, after giving a most unintelligible definition of faith as the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen, begins with Abel, the son of Adam, and givs a list of the Old Testament worthies whom he holds up as model saints and exemplars to the Christian church. And I propose, on this occasion, to show that almost all of them, thus indorsed by Paul, were so faulty in character that, if living now, either in England or in this country, they would either be sent to the penitentiary as the worst criminals, or to the insane asylums as ths most irresponsible and dangerous of crazy human beings. And after stating the cases seriatim, I will submit to you as jurors, sworn to giv a verdict according to the evidence, whether the church, by blotting out the distinction between right and wrong, is not responsible for that large and increasing class of people, who, encouraged and prompted by the example of the saints of God, feel at liberty to indulge in all kinds of vices and crimes.

1. I begin with Abraham, "the father of the faithful" and the "friend of God." He fancied that he heard God say to him, in an audible voice:

"Take now thy son, thy only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering on one of the mountains which I will tell thee of."

Mistaking his fancy for a fact, he accordingly took his son, and in the very act of slaying him with a knife, before burning his flesh with fire upon the altar, as a sacrifice of sweet savor unto the Lord, he was arrested by an angel. Paul, in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, believing that the intention qualifies and completes the character of an act, declares that—

"By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said that in Isaac shall thy seed be called, accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure."

This is the brightest instance of faith on record, with but one exception, and givs Abraham his name and fame as the father of all those who believe. But let us examin the subject carefully.

Faith, as an exercise of the intellect, is the trust or credence we giv, on the testimony of competent witnesses, to the truth of a thing, the witnesses having been first examined and cross-examined by counsel, before a judge learned in the law and in the rules of evidence. It is a forcible assent to a truth proved to be such, and therefore is not a voluntary, but an involuntary, act. This definition of faith holds good in scientific investigation. When the truth of a proposition is examined, pro and con, inductivly and deductivly, the mind is compelled to accept the result, whether it goes against the grain of our feelings and prejudices or not. Hence there is neither merit nor demerit in faith, since the mind can do no otherwise than believe according to the amount of evidence before it. If all the evidence in a given case is produced, the verdict of the mind will be just. But, as is often the case, if all the evidence is not present, but only a part, the mind may giv a false judgment, and believe what is not true. We hav cases of men, innocent of murder, who hav been put to death for that crime. After execution new evidence has come out which, if the jury had had it in time, would hav made their verdict one of acquittal.

But Bible faith is a misty, blind, unwarrantable, and dangerous feeling or impression on the mind of a person, that he ought to believe some dogma and compel other people to believe it, or to do some one thing which has been revealed to him as a duty. In the early days of the Puritans in Massachusetts, the Quakers, believing that the popular religion was not true, felt that it was their duty to protest against it as empty and false. Deborah Wilson's faith on this point was so deep and impulsiv that she, in imitation of the prophet Isaiah, stripped off her garments and went stark naked through the streets of Salem, testifying against what she called the religious nakedness of the land. Surely nothing but the awfullest sense of duty could hav induced a modest and virtuous woman, as she was, to do such a thing as that. Then the Puritans, following the same blind guide as Deborah Wilson did, felt it their duty to whip such transgressors at the cart's-tail, and if that did not cure them, to imprison them or put them to death. But if Abraham is to be justified in an act of homicide simply because he felt it his duty to commit it, how can we condemn the proceeding of Deborah Wilson, and the other similar doings of the Quakers in their protests against the religious worship of the Puritans? And how can we blame the Puritans in their bloody proceedings? The natural law of morals is that we hav no right to injure others, no matter how deep the feeling is that we ought to do so.

Two cases of deliberate killing by professing Christians hav occurred in our day which confirm and illustrate what I hav just said. I refer to the Second Adventist Freeman of Massachusetts, and that distinguished member of Mr. Beecher's church, and member of the Young Men's Christian Association, Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield. Freeman, ignorant of Nature's simple code of morals, and ignorant because he got his training in the church, felt it to be his duty to obey Paul by imitating and illustrating the faith of Abraham, and so rebuke this wicked and unbelieving generation of Christians, who had never seen an example of what faith could do. Without one particle of evidence beyond his mere feeling that he was doing right; regardless altogether of his victim's right to life, and of the death agony he was about to inflict, he took the knife, like his great exemplar, and thrust it into the heart of his own daughter, accounting, as Abraham did in the case of his child, that God would raise her from the dead and thus confirm his faith and rebuke the infidelity of the church. Freeman was never executed for this cold-blooded act of slaughter. The Christian people of Massachusetts, knowing that he had more religion and more Abrahamic faith than any or all of them put together, did not dare, with the Bible in their hands, and Paul's indorsement of Abraham's conduct before their minds, to put him to death, but placed him under the restraints of an insane asylum to prevent him from repeating the act. If, however, he had intelligence enough to learn, and they would send him to school to Ingersoll for a quarter, to become an infidel to his old religion, he would probably be as safe a member of society as any of us. Guiteau was another man-slayer—I do not call him a murderer any more than Freeman, because neither was actuated by malice in the act he committed. But both were, like their illustrious predecessor, Ravaillac, the natural spawn of the religion of the church, which makes the bloody saints and heroes of the Bible, with their hallucinations and impressions, models for us to imitate, instead of having us obey that natural rule of morals, so plain and so safe, that we hav no right to inflict injury either on ourselvs or others.

Before dismissing the case of Abraham, it is proper to ask why, if he so trusted God in the matter of his son, he did not trust him in the matter of his wife Sarah. During his sojourn in Gerar, as you may see in the twentieth chapter of Genesis, his cowardice and falsehood were so marked that he loaned his wife to Abimelech, who sent and took her, and would hav committed adultery with her, but "God came to Abimelech in a dream by night," and told him that Sarah was another man's wife. Whether Abimelech was a married man or not we know not, but, pagan as he was, he had higher conceptions of what was right than Abraham had, who was on such intimate terms with God. This lying and dastardly conduct in the "father of the faithful" proves that faith or confidence in God was not a settled principle of action with him, but only a blind and temporary impulse of feeling which displayed itself in offering up Isaac. As to his migrating from Ur of the Chaldees, and sojourning in the land of Canaan, and dwelling in tents, he evinced no more faith and endurance than thousands of European emigrants now do in crossing a tempestuous ocean and seeking homes in our Western wilderness.

2. The next model saint held up by Paul for our imitation in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews is Isaac. In nothing recorded of him can we find anything to justify Paul in setting him forth as an example of faith, but just the contrary; for, like his father, Abraham, in regard to his wife, so Isaac, in regard to his wife, proved himself to be both a liar and a coward, and had no trust in God whatever.

3. The third personage on Paul's roll of model saints to which I invite your attention is Jacob. The Rev. A. Langdon at the late Exeter Diocesan Conference in England, stated the case of a rector or clergyman of the church of England who held a "living" or parish worth £1,000 a year, who was, or seemed to be, very sick, and, as he was assured by his physician, had only two days to liv. A lawyer was sent for, and a client appeared with him who was anxious to get hold of the next presentation to the living. The client agreed to giv £10,000 for it, and the offer was accepted. No sooner, however, were matters settled than the sick clergyman began to recover, and actually lived many years longer. As the client had paid the £10,000, and got nothing in return, he naturally expected the clergyman, as an honest man, either to return him the money or to resign the incumbency, so that the purchaser might make the next presentation. But he declined doing either, because, as he argued, it would be "Simony," which the laws of England define as the crime of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferments, or the corrupt presentation of any one to a benefice for money or reward. It is called Simony from Simon Magus, or the magician, who, although he worked miracles himself, envied what he considered the superior power of the apostles in this line, and offered to purchase it with money. So the clergyman kept the living and the £10,000 also! Now as to the gross immorality of this trick there can be but one opinion outside of the church; for, if the clergyman's sickness was feigned, and a mere trap set for the client, to get out of him a large sum of money for nothing, he had a warrant for his sharp practice in the Bible; for this is just what Saint Jacob did when he cheated his twin brother Esau out of his birthright as the first born, as well as his father-in-law, Laban, out of his proper share in the increase of his flocks. In the history of Jacob we find not one redeeming quality in his character. He was a liar and a cheat during his whole life, and even before he was born, for the prophet Hosea (xii, 3) declares that "he took his brother by the heel in the womb" to prevent him from being born first, so as to be entitled to the birthright; and according to Genesis xxv, 26, no sooner was his brother born than again he took him by the heel to supplant him; and on this account he was named Jacob, which means a supplanter. While the Bible records the fraudulent doings of Jacob in detail, it offers no apology for them, and hence he may be regarded as the patron saint of all liars and cheats. The tricks of trade and the vice of misrepresentation are the burning shame of thousands of mercantile men in our day and country. But they can all grease their consciences with "St. Jacob's oil," and say that if Jacob could wrestle and prevail with God at the last, and hav a general jail delivery of all his sins, they, too, will put their confidence in Jacob's God, and cultivate peace of mind.

4. I now introduce to your notice David, the "sweet singer of Israel," and the "man after God's own heart;" and the Bible account, for we hav no other history of him, is my warrant for deliberately saying that he was as cruel and bloodthirsty a murderer and adulterer as is named in any history, sacred or profane. He was a liar, a dissembler, a perjurer, and a thief; in short, all the vices and crimes centered in his character, and were illustrated in his life. To be sure, he was very pious, and in the Psalms, the authorship of most of which is imputed to him, there are noble sentiments which we highly prize. But pious words and emotions are very cheap at the best, and when given the lie to by one's life are entirely worthless. The persecutors in the church who slaughtered thousands of innocent persons, were pre-eminently pious and devoted to God.

In speaking of the roguery of Jacob, I said he was thoroughly bad from top to bottom, and from the center to the circumference of his character. But I am bound to be fair, and amid the crimes and vices which conglomerated in David's character, I confess we can discern one redeeming trait, recorded in 2 Samuel, xxiii, 14–17. When besieged by the Philistines—

"He longed and said, Oh, that one would giv me a drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate! And three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well, and brought it to David, but he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the Lord, and said, Be it far from me, O Lord, that I should do this; is not this blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? Therefore he would not drink it."

This was noble. This was the bright particular star which shone through the dark clouds of sin that surrounded his character. His polygamy, his dying imprecation of vengeance on Job, his solemn oath to Shimei that he would not put him to death, and his perjury in directing Solomon after all to "bring down his hoar head to the grave in blood," his adulteries and fornications, and all the rest of his multiplied villanies, shock the reader of his history as recorded in the Bible. But notwithstanding all this, the Bible holds him up as a model saint, and declares, and repeats the declaration in 1 Kings. xv, 5, that—

"David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from any thing he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite."

After this wholesale indorsement of David's character, and Paul's repetition of the same, what perceptible difference is there between right and wrong? What scoundrel now living cannot justify himself in any crime he commits, and in any vice he practices? If all the maids and married women who hav been seduced by clergymen would giv the history of their fall, it would be found that the seducer began the undermining process by dwelling on the amours of the licentious Old Testament saints, and showing, as he easily could, that they were either no sins at all, or mere peccadilloes in the sight of God. If David, after all of his adulteries, was indorsed, over and over again, as a perfect character with but a single blot on it, how easily could a strongly amatory woman, maid, wife, or widow, be persuaded by a wily shepherd of the sheep to believe that unchastity was more of a virtue than a vice, since God's saints, and God himself, treated it as such; for he is represented in 2 Samuel. xii, 11, as telling David that as he had taken away Uriah's wife he would "take away his wives and giv them unto his neighbor, and that his neighbor should lie with them before all Israel and the sun." Surely, since moral acts lose not their complexion by the lapse of time, polygamy and its allied vices are no sins; for if God justified them as he did by declaring David's character to be absolutely perfect with a solitary exception, he would not condemn them in any of his New Testament saints. Women who are inclined to be godly, and strive to square their characters with the Bible worthies, and who hav been taught to hav entire confidence in their preachers as God's embassadors, and authorized expounders of his will, unless they are naturally and constitutionally as chaste as Diana, and as faithful as Penelope, how could they be expected to stand firm in their virtue against an argument like this when wielded by an artful and unscrupulous clergyman who has winning manners and fine personal magnetism? For, as the great poet of nature says,

"How easy it is for the proper false
In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!"

It is the amours of the scurvy Old Testament saints, indorsed by the Apostle Paul, which hav sapped the morals of church-members in all ages. To such reading is mainly due the creation of a taste for what is called "yellow-backed literature," which fascinates the weak-minded, destroys the power of seeing the difference between right and wrong, and makes woman an easy prey to the seducer. And yet when the church, by the licentious literature of her sacred books, has been, during all her past history, not only the seed-bed of sexual vices, but the hot-bed to stimulate them into life and growth, and when she is spotted with the foulest corruption, and has so large a representation in the criminal courts and penitentiaries of the country, she keeps up her ancient reputation for brazen-faced hypocrisy given to her by her own prophets, by charging the Liberalists with being the patrons of obscene literature! In other words, she has no scrnple in finding Abel guilty of the murder of Cain.

5. I must now introduce to your notice a woman of the Old Testament economy, whose character as a saint is held up by Paul for the daughters of Christian fathers and mothers to copy after. It is Jael, and her history is recorded in the fourth chapter of the book of Judges. After Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, was defeated by the Jewish General Barak, he fled, weary and faint, toward the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, whom, being an ally of the Canaanites, he thought he could trust for protection and hospitality.

"And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn into me; fear not. And when he turned in unto her she covered him with a mantle."

And when he was sound asleep, after the exhaustion of the battle, this treacherous "saint" illustrated her faith and became immortalized in both Testaments by taking a tent pin in one hand, and a hammer in the other, and smiting the nail through the temples of her sleeping guest, and fastening it into the ground! Then Deborah the prophetess, and Barak, her general, composed a song of triumph over this bloody and atrocious deed of perfidy and murder, and thus sang:

"Blessed above women shall Jael the wife of Heber be! blessed shall she be above women in the tent. She put forth her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workman's hammer, and with the hammer she smote Sisera; she smote off his head when she had pierced and stricken through the temples."

Now, what act is baser than treachery, especially treachery to a confiding guest? Mankind has shuddered through the generations of two hundred years at the deed of Macbeth, who took the life of Duncan, when he accepted the hospitality of Macbeth's castle. By common consent such conduct is damnable, and calls unceasingly for retributiv justice. Yet Jael has been held up to the Christian world for 1800 years as a model saint by the apostle Paul. As to the thing called faith, how did Jael show it in this bloody piece of work? Sisera had faith in Jael's hospitality, but the only faith Jael had was in the hammer, and in the strength of her own right arm. Benedict Arnold and all the traitors who lived before or after his day could justify their treason by this act of Jael, indorsed by Paul, if they were shrewd enough to know how to use the argument.

6. The next specimen of the household of "faith" who is held up as a model saint, is a lady of the name of Rahab, and her occupation is given both in the Old Testament and in the New as that of a harlot. Now, the sentiment of love in all its manifestations toward its object is the holiest, most refining, and most Godlike thing on earth; and therefore a woman who makes it a matter of merchandise to every comer is called by the opprobrius name of harlot. While the natural sacredness of a woman's person is enhanced by the touch of love, it is desecrated and polluted by harlotry, and she becomes in the eyes of the world, and in her own esteem, a fallen angel. In the history of Rahab, besides her lying, her treason to her own country, and her vocation, there is nothing recorded. How she exemplified faith it is impossible to see, even with a microscope, although the Old Testament and the New glorify her as a saint by a detail of facts and incidents. The theologians hav done their best in trying to make out the case that Saint Rahab was not a woman who sold her charms promiscuously for money, but that she simply kept a boarding-house in the city of Jericho, and had faith in God's chosen people, and so entertained the Jewish spies when they came on their dangerous errand. I hav seen a shark at sea harpooned in the back and made fast to the ship's side by a rope, surging and agonizing to get loose, and making the water red with his life's blood. But the struggle was not more desperate and hopeless than that which the clergy now make to prove that Rahab was not at the head of a house devoted to prostitution, but a respectable woman who only made an honest living by keeping boarders at so much a week, as hundreds of respectable women now do. But this is a fraudulent attempt to deceive the ignorant and confiding. For in the second chapter of Joshua the "inspired" writer describes Rahab as a common harlot. And surely Paul, who was a Jew, and understood Hebrew, would know whether or not the word translated "harlot" was a mistake and ought to hav been rendered the keeper of a hotel or boarding-house. Surely, if he thought that prostitution was a damnable blemish in the character of a female saint, while keeping a boarding-house is a meritorious way of making a living, he would not hav handed down to future generations the name of Rahab as a harlot. It seems a plain inference from the facts of the case that whatever the law might hav been, the inspired historians did not regard practical harlotry a vice or crime any more than murder and polygamy, provided it was practiced by a "saint." All through the Bible, what is called piety or saintship seems to cover a multitude of sins, if it does not transform them into virtues. The apostle Peter's swearing and cursing, and his treachery to Christ, are dwarfed into mere trifles because they were committed by "Saint" Peter, whereas similar faults in the character of Judas Iscariot hav made his ignominy immortal. But if it be not saintship that changes vice into virtue, could not the whole frail sisterhood in Europe and America, where whoredom bids defiance to all law, successfully defend themselvs and their vocation against the denunciations of society by showing that both the Old and New Testaments hold up as a model saint a woman of their class? Character never loses its attributes of good or evil in the sight of God, but, like him, is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and if a harlot can practice her vocation all through life, and when she dies go to heaven, and then be immortalized by the church as a model saint, what squeamishness it is in us to protest against prostitution, and all the literature, and all those ways that lead to it. Whoever reads scripture biography will observe with astonishment that rape, seduction, promiscuous intercourse, adultery, concubinage, polygamy, treason, robbery, murder in cold or hot blood, perjury, lying, fraud, and slavery were all practiced by the saints of God, whose names are glorified in the Bible, and whose characters are held up for our imitation as models! No wonder that the clergy are so zealous and so successful in urging people to join the church, when saintship, like a mantle, can be made to cover over all the crimes forbiddon by the moral law.

7. The next illustrious example of faith and piety enjoined upon us for imitation by the apostle is Jephthah, and the reason of his canonization is given in the eleventh chapter of the book of Judges, from the thirty-fourth to the fortieth verse. To understand the case, it is important to say that Jehovah gave a law unto the children of Israel on the subject of vows. It is recorded in Numbers xxx, 2, and is in these words:

"If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word; he shall do all that proceedeth out of his mouth."

This being a custom in Israel, we are told by divine authority that—

"The spirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah, and he vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou shalt, without fail, deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it shall be that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering."

This was his vow, and a more stupid and unwarrantable promis was never made, before nor since. But the Lord agreed to the bargain, and gave the Ammonites into his hand. Then, when Jephthah returned to his house from the slaughter, who should meet him at the door, with timbrels and with dances, but his own and only child, his daughter! His heart broke, of course; but he felt that he had made a vow unto the Lord, and was bound to keep it; and the narrativ goes on to say that "he did unto her according to his vow which he had vowed"—that is to say, he slaughtered his child, and offered up her mangled body as a burnt offering to the Lord.

To save God from being cursed by all the mothers of mankind as a cruel and relentless tyrant, in making such a law as he did, and then holding Jephthah to its bloody and unnatural conditions, the theologians, as in the case of Rahab the harlot, hav tried for ages all conceivable methods of criticism and special pleading to show that, after all, Jephtha did not actually kill his daughter and burn her body on the altar as a sacrifice of sweet savor unto God. The theologians are to be honored for the motiv which leads them, out of respect to the feelings of humanity, to defend the character of God in this terrible transaction, and it is an unintended tribute of loyalty to our theory of morals. But it is a pious fraud. There is the law of vows enacted by Jehovah, and there is the history of the case in the divinely inspired narrativ which I hav read to you. And there is the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, containing Paul's glorification of the deed as a religious act illustrating the saving grace of faith. The lesson it was designed to teach was that in making a rash and thoughtless vow, even to take life, the act is all right, provided the manslayer is pious, and illustrates his piety by performing his vow! What a warrant there is in this example of Jephthah, and its indorsement by the Bible, for religious assassins to nurse a feeling of revenge in their hearts until it deepens, first into an impression, like that made by a type, and then into an inspiration that, in obedience to God, they will "remove," as Guiteau termed it, by the knife or the pistol, anyone who obstructs the execution of their wild plans! To the daggers of this class of assassins who are spawned upon society by the false and dangerous religion of the church, every man of us is exposed. I would not be the least surprised to read in the morning papers of to-morrow that some other member of an evangelical church, or the Young Men's Christian Association, carrying out the suggestion made by a religious newspaper some time ago, felt himself "inspired" by the deity to remove Ingersoll from the theater of life, because he was so dangerous an enemy to the church of God. I therefore repeat, for the remembrance of those who hear me, that while our feelings may be safely trusted in the domain of the affections,

(Concluded on page 694.)

The Liberal Club.

One of the most refreshing and desirable lectures that could be conceived of was listened to by the Manhattan Liberal Club on the evening of the 26th ult. The speaker of the occasion was Mr. Clinton Furbish. He is a young man of parts. An orator, a patriot, and a Greenbacker, he is inspired with the spirit of the Fourth of July, our Revolutionary forefathers, and the Declaration of Independence.

The title of Mr. Furbish's lecture was, "A Federal Republic the Only Basis of a True Democracy." He held in effect that our Constitution was the most magnificent document of the kind ever written, that the United States was the grandest nation on the globe, and the Stars and Stripes the most gorgeous ensign that floated in the breeze of heaven. A representativ government, honestly administered, is the ideal government. If evils hav arisen in our country under the government, it is because we hav not carried out the intentions of its founders; we hav not followed the teachings of Paine, and Jefferson, and Washington. We hav one law for those who hav wealth, and another for those who hav nothing. We hav a law that will arrest a tramp for having property upon his person for which he cannot account, and that allows John Sherman to carry two millions of dollars from the United States treasury, in a few years, on an annual salary of eight thousand. "John Sherman," said the speaker impressivly, "where did you get that money?"

Mr. Furbish seemed to be heartily indorsed by the audience. The people who go to the Liberal Club recognize a grand sentiment when they hear it uttered, and good old-fashioned patriotism arouses them to enthusiasm. They believe that the United States is the home of the brave, that its flag floats over the freest nation on earth, and they hav unlimited confidence in the ultimate destiny of America. If liberty were ever to be trusted entirely to their keeping, its warmest friends can rest assured that it would be safe.

Following Mr. Furbish came the Great Unclassified Professor Vaughn, of Virginia, who rushed across the stage in a blaze of illuminated oratory, like a flaming meteor athwart the midnight sky. His eloquence is something immense, yet he can at will assume the lighter vein of speech and move an audience to mirth. He is a rare student of ancient literature, as some of his jokes attest. He has trod Southern soil, and has gazed undaunted into the muzzle of the threatening musket. It would not be proper, in this connection, to say that two bores met about that time, though the thought might suggest itself to those of flippant speech. Professor Vaughn would hav the downtrodden masses seek the co-operation of the firearm in their struggle with the oppressor. If the rich man would not giv his wealth to the poor man, the poor man should take it away from him.

Mr. Cohen said that a representativ government was a failure. The English government was superior to that of the United States. If England had our resources, it would be infinitly more prosperous. A government of the people, for the people, by the people, would be realized when every man could vote directly for the law instead of delegating somebody else to do the voting for him. Mr. Cohen indulged the hope that he might at some future time be permitted to place this subject before the club in a lecture.

Dr. Kinget divulged a scheme for selecting our law-makers from the masses by lot, as jurors are drawn in our courts. This method might hav its drawbacks, but he held it would do away with representation by proxy!

Mr. Andrews defended the representativ system. He said we could not get rid of it. Political evils, said he, are not the worst evils. Commercial and social ones are back of them. This country is better governed than any other, and a republican form of government is the best. England is not a representativ monarchy. If you would see an ideal monarchy, look at Turkey or Russia. Mr. Cohen was therefore wrong in comparing the United States with England as a monarchy. Mr. Andrews is a patriot. He is prepared to defend the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States against all comers, and believes that each generation requires to be indoctrinated with the spirit of liberty which inspired those immortal instruments.

Mr. Rosevelt said that a pig breaking into the garden of a Connecticut agriculturist made Jackson president of the United States. In explanation of this startling proposition he related how the intruding porker had kept a voter from going to the polls. Thus the pig, untied at the flood in the affairs of men, led on a fortune for Mr. Jackson, and disaster for Mr. Adams.

Mr. Henry Stone said if he had three wishes granted him, the first, second, and third would be for the education of the people, that they might think for themselvs, and put their thought into action. If they were to win their rights, as had been recommended, by the bullet, they must be united; and if united they could win by the ballot. Therefore there was no necessity for violence.

The discussion was closed by Mr. Furbish, in a wholly effectiv reply to his critics. He could not see how fifty millions of people could vote for a law, as advocated by Mr. Cohen, without some representativ to frame it, to count the ballots, and to declare the result. Proxies were indispensable and useful, Dr. Kinget to the contrary notwithstanding. If he were to be hung, he would like to be hung by proxy. If he were to take Dr. Kinget's medicin, even, he would prefer to take it by proxy. The Constitution must stand. We may add to it, but we may not displace it. Such improvements at our increasing enlightenment suggests made be made, but the hand of the vandal must not remove one stone from the original edifice.

This meeting was a memorable one for the club, and but for the marked and generally regretted absence of Mr. Shook, the cup of satisfaction had been full. This talented gentleman constitutes the link between the Christian and Freethinking constituency of the organization, and it can but awaken anxiety that he is so often a missing one.

The Boston Liberal Club.

As stated last week, the subject of Mr. McKenzie's lecture of the previous Sunday was continued in discussion on October 28th. The wording of the question was somewhat changed, and in the form of "Is Democracy in America a failure?" was opened by Mr. Horace Seaver, editor of the Boston Investigator. Mr. Seaver took the negativ view of the matter, but his remarks were rather applicable to the question of whether the democratic form of government was or was not a failure, than whether the application of the form, as exemplified in American institutions, had proved a success or not. He certainly was in favor of government in some form, and thought that of all the systems that could be named, the democratic was the only one that could be worked in the interests of the people.

Mr. J. Storer Cobb followed and assumed the very modest attitude of a pupil, who, desiring knowledge from the savants who had assembled to enlighten the club upon this important question, propounded a few questions to which he hoped that answers might be obtained. He would like to know whether, when two or more men are associated together, any one can commit an action, of which the risk and cost would be confined wholly and entirely to the actor. One other question amounted in substance to whether a society, or any portion of a society, can possess any right which is not an inherent property of each member thereof, and if so, from what source is that right obtained?

Mr. B. F. Underwood, with a little sarcastic reference to the attitude assumed by the former speaker, took the ground that no man could perform an act of which the consequences could be confined to himself alone, and was certainly of opinion that an aggregation of individuals could possess rights which any one of the individuals could hav no claim to. The doctrin of individual sovereignty was merely the result of undigested and partial thought, and there could be no doubt that in America the experiment of democracy had proved anything but a failure.

Mr. McKenzie, taking up one phase of the whole subject which he had introduced a week before, undertook to show that economically, democracy, as applied in America, was an utter failure. He instanced the number of men, taken in prime of life from productiv industries to serve in the standing armies and navies of Europe, as well as the number belonging to the privileged classes, and showed that although we were spared that drain upon our labor resources, the condition of the laborer was but very little better than that of his transatlantic competitor. And this notwithstanding the difference in quality of soil and extent of land compared to number of inhabitants.

Mr. David Kirkwood thought that the failures of democracy were not due to the form of government, but to the fact that the people failed to properly apply the principles, while Mr. John S. Verity would hav nothing whatever to do with the band of fanatics who sailed under the banner of anarchy. He did not believe in any form of government, consequently the anarchistic idea was sheer nonsense and fanaticism. He believed in every man's doing just exactly as he pleased, provided society would permit him to do it.

Dr. J. H. Swain, however, objected to this, and would like to know why ten, or ten hundred, or ten million men should dictate to him what he should do. This nonsense about the will of the people was as much a superstition as the old theologic idea of a ruling personal deity.

After some remarks from Mr. Cherrington, Mr. Seaver brought the discussion to a close in such a manner that showed him clinging to the ideas which he held at the opening, notwithstanding all the efforts which had been made to convert him.

This matter being disposed of, the club in a business meeting elected Mr. Ernest Mendum to the chair for the month of November; adopted the report of the committee appointed to consider the advisability of holding a Freethinker's convention in Boston, and decided that next Sunday it would debate whether Butler or Robinson is the best man for governor of Massachusetts for the year 1884.

Col. Ingersoll's Opinions

OF BEN. BUTLER, PROHIBITION, THE NEXT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES, AND THE SUPREME COURT'S DECISION THAT HOTELS AND THEATERS CANNOT BE FORCED TO ADMIT NEGROES.

"What are Butler's chances for the Democratic presidential nomination?" queried a Chicago Inter-Ocean reporter of Col. Ingersoll.

"A great many old and respected Massachusetts people like to get revenge on men who assume too much. They resent the idea that tanning pauper hides is a Massachusetts industry. Even should Butler carry the state, he livs too far east, and if elected governor it would be no assurance of his nomination, for many of the Democrats could never forgiv him for having been a Republican so long."

"What do you think as to McDonald?"

"I think it likely that Mr. McDonald is the strongest man the Democrats can nominate. He is a man of sterling sense and integrity, and most certainly a Democrat, if there ever was one."

"What do you see of President Arthur's growing favor among the people?"

"I had not observed that he was growing in favor. Mr. Arthur is regarded as a clever man, but he has been vice president, and that's a vice the people will never forgiv. If he were the best man in the world I doubt if he could get the nomination."

"To what do you attribute the defeat in Ohio?"

"To prohibition. I think the principle of prohibition pernicious. It's no use to pass laws the community is not in favor of. But I do not think the Ohio election will hav any particular influence upon the next presidential election. In Iowa there are no large cities, but even there prohibition could not be enforced. If the Mississippi were running full of pure whisky, there would be no more drunkenness on its banks than there is now—not as much. I am opposed to the principle of prohibition, but in favor of temperance. Teetotalism is intemperate temperance."

"Who will probably be the Republican nominee for president?"

"It can't be told. There are a great many men carrying lightning-rods around in their pockets, expecting to be struck. It's hard to tell where it will strike."

"Who will probably be the next speaker of the House?"

"I am not well informed on the subject. From all I hear I think Randall's chances are probably the best."

"Will the tariff question be the great issue next year?"

"The matter is in much doubt, as there are thousands of Republicans tending toward so-called free trade, and thousands of Democrats favoring protection. It will be a little hard to get either party to draw a well and clearly defined line."

"What do you think of the recent opinion of the supreme court touching the rights of the colored man?" inquired a Washington Republican reporter of the colonel.

"I think it is all wrong. The intention of the framers of the amendment, by virtue of which the law was passed, was that no distinction should be made in inns, in hotels, in cars, nor in theaters—in short, in public places, on account of color, race, or previous condition. The object of the men who framed that amendment to the Constitution was perfectly clear, perfectly well known, perfectly understood. They intended to secure, by an amendment to the fundamental law, what had been fought for by hundreds of thousands of men. They knew that the institution of slavery had cost rebellion; they also knew that the spirit of caste was only slavery in another form. They intended to kill that spirit. Their object was that the law, like the sun, should shine upon all, and that no man keeping a hotel, no corporation running cars, nor any persons managing a theater should make any distinction on account of race or color. The amendment is above all praise. It was the result of a moral exaltation such as the world never had seen. There were years during the war, and after, when the American people were simply sublime; when their generosity was boundless; when their sense of justice was as keen as Christ's; when they were willing to endure any hardship to make this an absolutely free country.

"This decision of the supreme court puts the best people of the colored race at the mercy of the meanest portion of the white race. It allows a contemptible white man to trample upon a real good colored man. I believe in drawing a line between good and bad, between clean and unclean, but I do not believe in drawing a color line which is as cruel as the lash of slavery.

"I am willing to be on an equality in all hotels, in all cars, in all theaters, with colored people. I make no distinction of race. Those make the distinction who cannot afford not to. If nature has made no distinction between me and some others, I do not ask the aid of the legislature. I am willing to associate with all good, clean persons, irrespectiv of complexion.

"This decision virtually givs away one of the great principles for which the war was fought. It carries the doctrin of 'state rights' to the democratic extreme, and renders necessary either another amendment or a new court.

"I agree with Justice Harlan. He has taken a noble and patriotic stand. Kentucky rebukes Massachusetts! I am waiting with some impatience—impatience because I anticipate a pleasure—for his dissenting opinion. Only a little while ago Justice Harlan took a very noble stand on the Virginia coupon cases, in which was involved the right of a state to repudiate its debts. Now he has taken a stand in favor of the civil rights of the colored man; and in both instances I think he is right.

"This decision may, after all, help the Republican party. A decision of the supreme court aroused the indignation of the entire North, and I hope the present decision will hav a like effect. The good people of this country will not be satisfied until every man beneath the flag, without the slightest respect to his complexion, stands on a perfect equality before the law with every other. Any government that makes a distinction on account of color is a disgrace to the age in which we liv. The idea that a man like Frederick Douglass can be denied entrance to a car; that the doors of a hotel can be shut in his face; that he may be prevented from entering a theater—the idea that there shall be some ignominious corner into which such a man can be thrown by a decision of the supreme court! The idea is simply absurd."

"What remains to be done now, and who is going to do it?"

"For a good while people hav been saying that the Republican party had outlived its usefulness; that there was very little difference now between the parties; that there was hardly enough left to talk about. This decision opens the whole question. This decision says to the Republican party, 'Your mission is not yet ended. This is not a free country. Our flag does not yet protect the rights of a human being.' This decision is the tap of a drum. The old veterans will fall into line. This decision givs the issue for the next campaign, and it may be that the supreme court has builded wiser than it knew. This is a greater question than the tariff or free trade. It is a question of freedom of human rights, of the sacredness of humanity.

"The real Americans, the real believers in liberty, will giv three cheers for Judge Harlan.

"One word more, the government is bound to protect its citizens, not only when they are away from home, but when they are under the flag. In time of war the government has a right to draft any citizen; to put that citizen to the line of battle, and compel him to fight for the nation. If the government, when imperiled, has the right to compel a citizen, whether white or black, to defend with his blood the flag, that citizen, when imperiled, has the right to demand protection from the nation. The nation cannot then say, 'You must appeal to your state.' If the citizen must appeal to the state for redress, then the citizen should defend the state and not the general government, and the doctrin of state rights then becomes complete."

The Pantarch too Previous.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A thousand and one empty and unintelligent criticisms made upon the positions taken by me in Liberty, I pass by in silence. That in your issue of October 27th really deserves no more notice than the rest; but it comes from Stephen Pearl Andrews; and, though I do not "accept" Mr. Andrews's authority, I recognize that there are some who are inclined to accept it, and so I generally (not always) deem it worth while to attend to what he says.

I wish, however, that he had not "intervened," even "in a brief way," in my discussion with Mr. Haskell, without acquainting himself with both sides of it; for it is not impossible that an acquaintance with Mr. Haskell's position would hav put him more in sympathy with mine than the reading of my own argument has. Mr. Andrews says:

> The Integral and Pantarchal platform is contained in the following formula:
>
> 1. Liberty, reaching to and including the criticism and the free rejection or acceptance of authority, and
>
> 2. Authority, when accepted, in freedom, submitted to, and used in the service of freedom.

Mr. Andrews alleges that this is distinct from the Anarchist platform. I flatly deny it. I hav repeatedly told him that I, in common with all genuin Anarchists, fully and unreservedly subscribe to the platform above quoted. And it is precisely because Mr. Haskell enunciates and favors, as basic, numerous propositions which are antagonistic to and subversiv of this platform that I hav made my protest against his work. Mr. Andrews, to be consistent, will hav to join me in this protest after he finds out what Mr. Haskell's platform really is, unless he shall still retain a hope, as I do not, of convincing Mr. Haskell by gentler methods. That, of course, is a question of practical judgment.

Anarchy and Pantarchy, it is true, are etymologically opposits, provided we adopt one of the meanings of their common root-word and stick to it. But this root-word has two meanings. Archy, as used in An-archy, means an imposed archy, while archy, as used in Pant-archy, means a voluntarily accepted archy. Therefore, so far as the above platform is concerned, Anarchy and Pantarchy are really in harmony. My use of the word archy is as justifiable, philologically, as Mr. Andrews's use of it. I do not quarrel with his, nor will I let him quarrel with mine. But I do quarrel with Mr. Haskell, because the authority which he favors is not "accepted in freedom," or "used in the service of freedom," but imposed by tyranny and used in the service of tyranny.

Whenever I say "government," "authority," or any kindred words, Mr. Andrews persists in assuming that I refer to, and am opposing, such authority as may be voluntarily submitted to. He knows me well, reads Liberty regularly, is an intelligent man, and ought to know better. I believe he does know better, and I will not forgiv him for acting as if he did not.

Mr. Andrews says that "the one exclusiv principle adequate to the complete regulation" of affairs "is, according to the Anarchists, liberty." Yes, and because, for one thing, liberty alone givs opportunity for that voluntary acceptance of guidance and leadership which Pantarchists insist on. We at this time lay the stress on liberty because it is the means, the way, the road which the people need to know. But we see the end just as clearly as (I think more clearly than) Mr. Andrews sees it.

"Tied to a fixed position or post," says Mr. Andrews, "a man may fight desperately and with power; but it is a great disadvantage, all the same, to be tethered in that fixed way." Now, the fact is that Mr. Andrews is just as much "tied to a fixed position or post" as I am, and so is any man who has convictions as distinct and decided as ours. Nor are we at a disadvantage in this respect. Quite the contrary, provided the rope be long enough and the knots within our power to untie. It is a good thing rather than a bad to hav something to bring one up standing on occasion and remind him of the first principles from which he is straying too far. The trouble with Mr. Andrews in this case is that he has misjudged the length of my rope, and if he doesn't look out for himself, he will get a stunner between the eyes.

The word "reconcile" was what brought Mr. Andrews to the defense of Mr. Haskell, the latter pretending to be able "to reconcile the various factions of Socialists." Anyone after adherents has only to say "reconciliation" to be sure of Mr. Andrews. He will dart for the bait as instinctivly as the fish for the worm, regardless or unconscious of the hook which it conceals. Angler Haskell may succeed, therefore, in landing the Pantarch, but he will never get even a nibble from so wary a fish as Benj. R. Tucker.

Boston, Oct. 26, 1883.

A Land Reform Plank Needed.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav read the report of the National Liberal League at Milwaukee; and as the organization of a new political party was the leading question, and much was said on both sides for and against, I, as a Liberal, wish to contribute my mite, which is in favor of independent political action. Both the old parties hav had their day, made their fortune, and sold out—one to money and the church, the other to whisky and the church; in fact, the same firm has bought both, and Liberals hav no further claim to or use for either. But, as Liberals, we should step boldly to the front and make our position known, unfurl our banner, and enough of the old parties will rally around it to make success sure ere long.

I am much pleased with the proposed new platform as far as it goes, but wish to offer another plank. I want to see added to clause A, section 4, article 2, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to read as follows:

> "No person or corporation not now owning an excess of 160 acres of land, shall hereafter own an excess of that amount."

We think the ownership of land necessary, otherwise a person could not hav jurisdiction over his own dooryard or cellar. Without ownership in land, law and order would be impossible. But that any one should own more than he can utilize, and spread out over large tracts of land, to the exclusion of others, is certainly not right. They that own the land indirectly own the people occupying it.

All can see the evil of land monopoly in Ireland and elsewhere, but few seem to notice it at home. We think the question needs agitation. Will not some one that is able to do it justice say something through the columns of the dear old Truth Seeker?

Leavenworth, Oct. 3, 1883. H. H. Hutcheson.

Mr. Talmage says "there are souls in my church so small that fifty of them could dance a schottische on the point of a cambric needle and not touch each other." If a worldly man should say the same thing Talmage would say he was a scoffer at religion and a son-of-a-gun.—Peck's Sun.

Dr. J. L. York in Idaho.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: We write to inform you that the Liberal orator, Dr. J. L. York, has been with us for the past few days, and delivered a few lectures—one at Quartzburg, one at Placerville, and one at Centerville. From there he goes to Idaho, where he will deliver three lectures, and then proceed to Boise City (the capital of our territory), where he will deliver a full course of six lectures.

The towns spoken of above, with the exception of Boise City, hav but a few hundred population. Yet the Catholics hav their priests, and the Methodists hav their circuit preachers, and hav had them for several years; but Dr. J. L. York is the first Iconoclast that has ventured to throw the solid shot of truth in their midst. And there are some who cry out, Crucify him, with the same bitter feeling that the Jews displayed when they crucified Jesus. But he seems to know and sympathize with them in their deluded mental condition, and therefore feels to pity them. And he says with Col. Ingersoll, "Let the people hate, we will educate them." We cordially indorse the doctor's noble sentiments, and wish to take this occasion to thank him for his services. May the Liberals giv him a hearty reception wherever he goes. Yours respectfully,

C. E. Clark,
A. G. Phillips,
Quartzburg, Oct. 20, 1883. J. B. Church.

The New England Convention.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: At a business meeting of the Boston Liberal Club, held in Investigator Hall this morning, the committee appointed to make arrangements for holding a convention of Liberals in this city during the coming winter, reported that in its opinion it would be well to hold such convention in Paine Hall on January 27, 28, and 29, 1884, and that the details of arrangements had been placed in the hands of Mr. W. S. Bell. In view of this, I now ask those to whom Mr. Bell may write, or who may wish to correspond with him, upon this matter, to forward their communications as soon as possible. It will tend to lighten his labors, and tend to insure a much more complete success, if he can know, at an early date, upon what he can definitly rely, as material for the work that has been delegated to him. His address is No. 18 Springfield street, Boston. Faithfully yours,

Oct. 28, 1883. John Storer Cobb, Pres.

A Good Christmas or New Year's Gift.

Samuel P. Putnam's "Golden Throne" would make an appropriate gift for the holiday season inasmuch as it expresses, not merely the philosophy, but the poetry of the Liberal movement. Along with the truth we need the grace of imagination, and "Golden Throne" is an expression of the hope and glory of what lies in the unbounded future. Says Liberty, "Putnam's romance, while fascinating as a story, is also bold, broad, and powerful in its intellectual and moral teachings." For sale at this office.

"The Seventh Demand."

Three cheers for Jamieson and "Liberta." Let every Liberal in the land, who is opposed to the "seventh demand," speak out against it. The congress had no right to put forth such a demand in the name of the Liberals of America.

It might hav omitted the subject of prohibition from its manifesto; but to put the Liberal element of the whole country on the negativ of this question was unwise and unfair. The "demands of Liberalism" should be confined to matter in which Liberals generally agree. Mrs. E. Heddon.

An Adrian subscriber to the Worthington, Minn., Advance writes to that paper: "I like the Advance for daring to speak out against religious oppression. While political parties are absorbed in the prohibition, tariff, monopoly and such questions, the oppressionists are stealing a march on them and are working to connect church and state. Whenever they succeed, look out for the bloodiest picture in our American book. The Liberals will unite and fight."

It is narrated of a certain Cincinnati preacher that in his youth he was slightly rapid and liked the card table. On one occasion the boys were playing and slacked up while they talked about their future labors. Each named a favorit calling, but our rapid friend became tired, and finally broke into the conversation by saying, "D—it, stop your talking and trump that ace. I'm going to be a preacher."—Louisville Courier Journal.

Let a menagerie snake twenty-five feet long be placed in some inland lake, and let three deacons make an oath of seeing it, and not one newspaper reader in fifty would hav the least faith. The snake business has been lied to death.—Detroit Free Press.

Teacher to class of girls: "Now what do we learn from this parable of the wise and foolish virgins?" Girls, decidedly: "That we shall watch hourly, that we miss not our bridegroom when he comes."

(Concluded from page 691.)

and in those questions of casuistry which concern ourselvs alone, they never should be implicitly trusted in a question of duty which involves the rights or happiness of others. Here calm reason alone ought to decide; for mere feeling and blind conviction may originate from a dyspeptic stomach or an addled brain, and is the unsafest of all guides.

8. The last name in St. Paul's catalog of religious worthies to which I call your attention is Solomon, the son of David, by Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah the Hittite, whom he stole from her husband. He is glorified in the Old Testament for his wisdom, his riches, and his building the temple at Jerusalem. The apostle quotes him as an example of the saving grace of faith, though it is impossible to find in his history what he believed in, unless it was a multiplicity of wives and concubines, for the Bible informs us that he had seven hundred wives and three hundred quasi wives, called concubines, thus making up the round thousand. He was also an idolater, as you may see in 1 Kings xi, 4, where we are told that—

"His heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David, his father. For Solomon went after Ashtaroth, the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites."

Idolatry, by the law in the thirteenth chapter of Deuteronomy, was treason against Jehovah, and a capital offense. And Solomon not only committed the crime himself over and over again, but seduced the people into committing it, whereby they forfeited their lives. Only think of the astounding fact that a deliberate and persevering worshiper of false gods should be held up to us by Paul and the clergy as a model of faith in God! This feature of his character, however, is of little consequence to us comparativly, but the American people hav a serious account to settle with him, because his example as a polygamist added to that of the rest of the Old Testament saints has planted a cancer in the bosom of this republic, which up to this time has defied all surgery. I mean Mormonism. The government has inaugurated a struggle with the Mormans which may yet end in blood. By their industry and thrift these people hav made the country they inhabit to bud and blossom as the rose. They hold possession of Utah Territory, and bid fair to control several territories adjoining. Their only fault, politically, is that they are polygamists. Polygamy we condemn as a breach of the code of natural morals. The census tables of all nations show that the sexes are equally divided, indicating nature's design that every man should hav his own wife, and every woman her own husband. But if one man takes twenty wives, nineteen other men are injured in their rights by being compelled to lead celibate lives. Of course such a system degrades woman, and converts men who practice it into despots. This is the peculiarity of Mormonism as a religion, and this is what alarms statesmen and patriotic men who wish to make the people of the United States homogeneous both in language and institutions.

For a number of years the presidents of the United States hav called the public attention to this subject, and in their messages hav urged Congress to adopt measures for extirpating the evil. But how can this be done except by a war of extermination? The Mormons cling to polygamy as a Bible institution. It is part, and the essential part, of their religion. They intrench themselvs behind the example of the Old Testament saints, whose characters are indorsed by the Apostle Paul, and bid defiance to their opposers. They hav conquered in debate every clergyman who has had the temerity to enter the lists with them. The Christians teach the divine inspiration of the Bible. The Mormon concedes it, and makes it the bulwark of his defense as a polygamist. He takes the old argument used by the American missionaries in foreign lands to justify their policy in receiving polygamists into the mission churches, viz., that in addition to its being an Old Testament institution approved by God in the lives of his saints, it is nowhere condemned in the New Testament, except in the case of a bishop, who, Paul said, must be the husband of one wife, clearly implying that other church-members may hav more. The chaplains in the Senate and House of Representativs at Washington, wind up their daily supplications in behalf of the Congressmen by asking for them the crowning blessing, that when they finish their legislativ labors and die, they may all sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, and with David and Solomon, and all the rest of the good old polygamists who are immortalized in the Bible. The clergy in their pulpits everywhere, and on the most solemn occasions, take their texts out of the Song of Solomon the polygamist, spiritualizing the most lascivious portions of it for the edification of the old saints, but alas! playing upon the imaginations, and stimulating the amatory instincts of the young who do not profess to be saints, and who see nothing in this portion of the inspired word of God but a license to excessiv and abnormal lust. Thus sanctioned and sanctified as polygamy is by a threefold indorsement—the example of the saints, and its approval by God and by Paul—how can we expect Congress to make effectual war upon Mormonism? I say effectual, for the recent law of Congress, stringent as it is in its provisions, may be evaded, and I fear will be, as all previous laws hav been.

A handful here and there, out of the 71,000 clergymen in the country, are striving, in an imbecil way, to get up a crusade against the Mormons. But they are not men of logical minds. The weapon they use is the boomerang, and it is the peculiarity of this instrument of war that in unskilful hands it reacts, and is as likely to wound the man who uses it, as the enemy it is directed against. Every blow aimed by a clergymen at a Mormon polygamist recoils and strikes him upon his own head. It deals a fatal blow also at the doctrin of the inspiration of the Bible, which records and approves of the polygamy of the saints. The cunning old rats of the clergy do not allow themselvs to be caught in such a trap as that, for while Mormonism is bad enough of itself, they think it would be worse to accept the alternativ and deny the inspiration of the Bible.

As the advocates of the institution of slavery had to be put down by the sword when they attempted to found a new government upon it as the chief corner-stone, I see nothing else before us in regard to Mormonism, but either to let it alone entirely and let it quietly compete with the monogamic forces of our civilization, or to declare war against it as a nuisance and put its practicers and advocates to indiscriminate slaughter. Our statesmen who understand the evil are paralyzed in all their efforts to remove it by the fact that they cannot strike it a death-blow without first destroying the prestige of the church and its sacred books which glorify and indorse it. For fear of their constituents, who are to a great extent under the influence of the church, and whose eyes are as blind as bats' on the whole subject of morals, no member of Congress has the courage to rise up in his place and tell the nation the truth on this subject.

I hav now gone over the ground I intended to take in this discussion. I hav shown to you that in the list of Old Testament saints, canonized by Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews, were men and women who, if they lived in our day and country, would be deemed monsters of iniquity. I therefore submit to your judgment whether the vices and crimes committed by so many of the Christian church and clergy in our day, and in all the past centuries of the Christian era, may not be attributed, in a great measure, to the silent influence which these examples exert in the formation of character. I submit whether the taste for obscene literature which is destroying the virtue of so many people of both sexes, may not hav been created by a perusal in the days of their youth of the coarse and libidinous portions of the Bible history and biography, wherein they see no distinction at all, made in the sight of God, between virtue and vice, chastity and unchastity, provided only that the parties be "saints." I submit whether the assassins and murderers who feel themselvs "inspired by deity" to take the lives of their fellow-men, and whose numbers are increasing, are not the legitimate offspring of the church, from Ravaillac down to Freeman and Guiteau. As the church was responsible for slavery by declaring it a Bible institution, and is now responsible for every drop of blood that was shed in abolishing it by the sword, I submit whether by insisting on the unscriptural doctrin of the plenary inspiration of the Bible, it has not made itself also responsible for allowing Mormonism to establish and organize polygamy in the heart of this country under the ægis of Old Testament stereotyped morality, and Paul's indiscriminate indorsement of the same. And, taking all these things into consideration, I submit whether the church ought not to be arraigned before the bar of Public Opinion as a teacher of bad morals, a hindrance to the cause of civilization and progress, and a nuisance to be abated; not, however, by the strong arm of the law, but by the universal prevalence of free thought and criticism.

A. B. BRADFORD.

The Bible and Polygamy.

Polygamy is mentioned in the Bible, but nowhere approvingly. The church which founds its doctrins on the Bible has in all ages and everywhere condemned polygamy.—Kansas City Times.

There are two classes of people who defend the Bible—those who read it with mouths open and eyes closed, and those who never read it. The editor of the Times is evidently one of the latter.

No intelligent person can read the Bible and then candidly contend that it does not sanction polygamy. The Mosaic law provides that "if a man hav two wives, one beloved and another hated," he shall not ignore the legal rights of the hated wife's children (Deut. xxi, 15-17). This statute recognizes both the existence and the validity of this institution.

Another statute provides that if a man die, his surviving brother shall become the husband of his widow, and this regardless as to whether the brother be married or single (Deut. xxv, 5).

The first eighteen verses of the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus are devoted to what is termed "unlawful marriages." Here polygamy is recognized and regulated to the extent of prohibiting a man from marrying the sister of a living wife.

Paul ordained that a bishop should hav but one wife, plainly implying the right of others to hav more than one.

There are many crimes both sanctioned and condemned by the Bible, but polygamy is not one of them. Between the lids of the Bible there cannot be found one word in condemnation of this custom. God, prophets, priests, all sanction it. The most renowned Bible characters were polygamists. The faithful Abraham had two wives, and when he died, the Lord said: "Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws." Jacob, the father of Israel, was a polygamist; and after he had secured four wives, God blessed him, and said, "Be fruitful and multiply." Moses was evidently a bigamist, and the law-giver certainly knew what was lawful. Good old Gideon had "many wives," and it was to him an angel came and said, "The Lord is with thee." The saintly David had nearly a score of wives and concubines; and "David was a man after God's own heart," and "David did right in the eyes of the Lord." God himself says to David: "I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul, and I gave thee thy master's house and thy master's wives." "And God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart"—sufficient to hold a thousand wives and concubines.

It is true the primitiv Christians did not generally adopt polygamy? And why? Because pagan Greece had taught them better. It was to her and not to the Bible that they were indebted for the monogamic system of marriage. It is likewise true that the Roman Catholic church did not sustain polygamy. But it did sustain a system of concubinage which was certainly as bad. For centuries the keeping of concubines was almost universal among the Catholic clergy—one abbot keeping no less than seventy.

Luther and the other leaders of the Protestant Reformation, accepting the Bible as their guide, attaching to it a degree of authority which had never been attached to it before, were candid and consistent enough to admit the validity of polygamy. Referring to this subject, Sir William Hamilton, a Christian and a Protestant, says:

"As to Polygamy in particular, which not only Luther, Melancthon, and Bucer, the three leaders of the German Reformation, speculativly adopted, but to which above a dozen distinguished divines among the reformers stood formally committed" (Discussions on Philosophy and Literature).

Speaking of Luther and Melancthon, Hamilton says:

"They had both promulgated opinions in favor of polygamy, to the extent of vindicating to the spiritual minister a right of private dispensation, and to the temporal magistrate the right of establishing the practice, if he chose, by public law" (Ibid).

In accordance with these views, John of Leydon, a zealous Protestant, established polygamy in Munster, and murdered or drove from their homes in the midst of winter all who dared to oppose the odious custom. Other Protestants followed his example.

On the 19th of December, 1539, at Wittemberg, Luther and Melancthon drew up the famous "Consilium," authorizing the landgrave, Philip of Hesse, to hav a plurality of wives. This instrument was signed by Martin Luther, Philip Melancthon, Martin Bucer, Dionysius Melander, John Lening, Antony Corvinus, Adam Kraft, Justus Winther, and Balthasar Raida—nine of the leading divines of Germany. The marriage ceremony was performed in the presence of Melancthon, Bucer, and others, Bishop Melander officiating.

Of Melander, Hamilton thus writes:

"Neither shall we marvel how a Protestant bishop, superintendent, inspector, like Melander, could bestow the spiritual benediction on his master's bigamy; when aware of the still higher marvel, that Melander was at and before the time himself a trigamist—that is, to avoid all possible ambiguity, the husband of three wives at once."

Luther and Melancthon also advised Henry VIII. to adopt polygamy in his case; but by divorcing two wives and murdering two more, the founder of the English church avoided it.

The advocacy of polygamy by the chief reformers prevented Ferdinand I. from declaring for the Reformation. The Protestant princes, too, generally opposed it, and this opposition, coupled with the fact that the most licentious sects espoused it, finally caused a reaction in favor of monogamy.

The greatest of Christian poets, John Milton, was, theoretically, a polygamist, and three centuries after Luther's time, the Rev. Dr. Henke, one of Germany's most celebrated theologians, declares that "monogamy and the prohibition of extra matrimonial connections are to be viewed as the remnants of monachism and of an uninquiring faith."

The foregoing facts show how "the church which founds its doctrins on the Bible has in all ages and everywhere condemned polygamy."

And here in the glorious afternoon of the nineteenth century, in our own enlightened America, several territories are almost entirely under the control of Christian polygamists. With characteristic consistency monogamic Christians are demanding the suppression of polygamy in the territories, while at the same time they are endeavoring to hav the whole country accept as infallible authority a book which teaches the pernicious doctrin. Make the Bible the fundamental law of the land, as Christians demand, and polygamy will become, in theory at least, a national instead of a local institution. Says Dr. Denslow:

"If I were disposed to be theistic, I should think that God (not the Jehovah of the Old Testament, but such a God as the consensus of educated men could devise,) had become so disgusted with the mode in which the Christian world walks backward with eyes shut and throws the veil of reverent concealment over the iniquities of the sacred book, that he had determined to send this murrain of Mormons on purpose to show them in real life exactly what Bible living is."

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Mr. Gantz's Fallacies.

Mr. Gantz says that that he has negatived my assertion that morals are entirely without the sphere of law, with his mere denial, and that he shall not discuss the "assumption;" but as it is peculiarly my "chicken," he waits to giv me "the first picking." That a Freethinker should deny the truism that law has nothing to do with a man's morals, as such, is astonishing, as much so as though he should deny the other truism that law has nothing to do with a man's religion. I repeat that all just civil laws rest, not upon any basis of morals whatever, but upon the basis of individual rights. No matter how "immoral" a man may be, the law cannot touch him until he has invaded some right or rights of his fellow. If Mr. Gantz (and we say it in all kindness) has not learned this must primary of all lessons in ethics and law, and it seems that he has not, then he should take the primer of Freethought and natural rights and study it most diligently, for he has much, very much, to learn.

That Mr. Gantz does not yet comprehend my position is proven by the following I had written: "When a man is free only to do right, he is not free at all; he does not do right." Mr. Gantz attempts to get at my meaning, which seems to be clear enough, in the following way: "When a man is free (from the restraint of civil law) only to do right (according to the moral law) 'he is not free' (under the moral law) at all; he does not do right '(according to the moral law).'" It would seem that my meaning could not hav been mistaken by any one. Change the italicized words above to "under the civil law," and Mr. Gantz's great misapprehension becomes at once apparent. Cannot I make this so plain that even Infidel moralists can understand the self-evident truth, self-evident to all who hav seen the "blazing star."

When a man is free under the statute law to do right only according to natural law, he has no civil freedom to do right at all; he does not do right. He is simply an automaton, moved as the machinists of the state manipulate the levers and shift the pulleys and belts.

Let me say right here that Mr. Gantz's second hypothesis as to my meaning is as wild as the first.

"The subject of controversy being the equity of a law, the individual under the law is not in duress, and has an 'iota of freedom,' because he can exercise his individuality in violating the law," says Mr. Gantz. This is the sheerest sophistry, and is completely exposed by the simple unanswerable statement that you practically alienate a man's liberty when you visit upon him a penalty for exercising it. Had Mr. Gantz been a prisoner in Andersonville, he could hav made a practical application of his logic by exercising his individuality in violating the rule against crossing the dead line. The result, had he lived long enough to realize it, would probably hav convinced him that that freedom is not worth much which brings down upon its unfortunate possessor's head fines, imprisonment, and death. About the time that the bullet of the guard struck him he would hav realized that there was a little "duress" lying around loose somewhere.

It is not capable of demonstration that if an "individual's standard of right be lower than that of the civil law, the civil law will elevate his manhood and is therefore salutary." This is the doctrin of the church, that physical force conduces to the moral elevation of those upon whom it is brought to bear, but the science and education of this age both emphatically negativ the assumption, and it has been clearly proven that while the restraint of actual criminals tends, to a certain extent, to the protection of personal rights, the attempt to enforce "moral" legislation has always produced new vices and aggravated old ones, and degraded all concerned; and that even in the attempt to defend the rights of men and women by law more crime is committed than prevented. In one great war engaged in by "law-abiding" people, more men are murdered and more property destroyed or stolen in one year than all the petty murderers or thieves of the world could kill or steal in five decades. And to-day wars of conquest are engaged in by nations the more enlightened members of which abhor all such barbarities, yet these more civilized men are compelled to participate therein, either through the compulsion of physical force or unreasoning reverence for law, simply because it is law.

Mr. Gantz is entirely mistaken in his genesis of law and morals. He says that the individual standard of morality once sanctioned wars of conquest, slavery, intolerance, and the degradation of woman, and, therefore, "the standard of civil law was lowered to the plane of this individuality." But the truth is that the civil law was not lowered, for the reason that it had not been higher, and that it gave all its prestige and exercised all its power in aid of these iniquities long after the standard of individual morality had risen above them. And now, after all our fine talk, should our government again engage in a war of conquest (as it did with Mexico), Mr. Gantz and all the rest of us who are opposed to such wars would find ourselvs compelled to help pay for carrying it on, and, were we physically able, would perhaps be also compelled to participate therein, or be fined, imprisoned, and perhaps executed as "traitors," and all under the law, which has a standard of morals conflicting with our individual standard. And more than this, Mr. Gantz knows that, with all his talk concerning the ancient slavery of the wife to the husband under the "individual standard of morals," should he meet a wife fleeing from the mastership of a coarse, drunken husband, and that husband should there overtake her and snatch from her arms the child dearer to her than life, he, Mr. Gantz, would not dare to lift a hand in her behalf, because the legal owner had the "law" upon his side; or should he let his humanity get the better of his discretion and impel him to the defense of the right, he would soon learn to his cost not to set up his "individual standard of right" against that of the "law."

Mr. Gantz's illustration of the individual, and who is in the one case helped to dignity and manhood by the freely-given aid of his fellows, and in the other similarly elevated by the alienation of his rights through the action of the same "friends," calls for very little comment. I need say only that all experience has taught us that in the great majority of cases kindness and unostentatious aid will do very much toward directing weak and unbalanced men into the right path, and keeping them there; while it has never been proven that the destruction of the right of individual initiativ will, in any number of instances worth considering, do any other service for such men than to still further degrade them and lessen their power and ability to rise.

I, no more than Mr. Gantz, desire to dignify "personal right at the expense of righteousness." My contention is that righteousness is always subserved and augmented by a jealous guarding of personal right; and that you can do nothing more calculated to destroy the springs and sanctions of righteousness in man than by teaching him by precept and example to be careless of the personal rights of others, or by taking from him his right of initiativ. To sum it all up in a question, Does Mr. Gantz believe that ignorance and slavery (for they always go together) are better calculated than knowledge and liberty to purify and elevate man? The whole issue between the prohibitionists and the anti-prohibitionists is concentrated in this.

I do not think that my illustrations were "farfetched." According to the patent moralists, anything which the majority deem to be evil in its tendencies may and must rightfully be suppressed by the state. Anything which tends to impair the physical, mental, and moral vigor is certainly evil in its tendencies, as the patent moralists always maintain with reference to the liquor traffic. Now it is certain that the acts I mentioned do tend to impair physical, mental, and moral vigor, and are therefore evil in their tendencies, and should be suppressed by law, according to the major premis of the patent moralists. This being so, it follows that the acts mentioned are "in the same moral category as the liquor traffic," differing in degree only therefrom; and and my illustrations are proven to be not "farfetched."

Mr. Gantz concludes with two affirmations: 1. "There can be no personal crime, the influence of which does not extend beyond the corporal limits of the personality committing the crime." There may be and are personal vices, but that there are "personal crimes" I deny, if by that is meant acts resulting to the injury of the individual performing them. 2. "As la pure divine naturæ, there can be no mental crime, as thought or opinion cannot become criminal till crystallized by action, universal mental liberty is the personal right of all created intelligences." In reply to the inference desired by Mr. Gantz, that is, that my statement that "every argument brought forward to sustain the plea for the curtailment of man's physical liberties applies with even greater force in the domain of mental intoxication," is false and proven to be so by this second affirmation, I will say that the chief burden of the dolorous song of the prohibitionist is that of the tendency of the liquor traffic to produce crime, and it is well known that the tendency of bad thoughts is to produce bad actions. "As a man thinketh so is he." The injected-righteousness people are ranting around after "tendencies," trying to remove by law remote causes of crime, and while engaged in this work they hav no right to ignore that most potent cause of crime, bad thoughts. Thought is of little use to a man until it is "crystallized by action" and in action. Thoughts lead as inevitably to actions as one action does to another. Hence moral religionists, logical, as Infidel moralists of Mr. Gantz's school are not, hav ever sought to guide, direct, or suppress the thoughts of man, well knowing that he who thought rebellion against the heavenly king was very likely to soon act rebellion against his earthly representativ.

For the information of readers of the THE TRUTH SEEKER who may not hav paid close attention to this discussion, I will say that the article to which this is in reply appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 4th, but owing to pressure of work and illness it has been impossible for me to answer earlier. E. C. WALKER.

Pressing Considerations for Liberals.

The last TRUTH SEEKER, in its editorial on "Catholicism Against the Country," ought to show Liberals their thoughtlessness on what is most important to their success, and awaken reflections on present dangers and duties. Movements for sanitary and educational work, not only among men, but women and children, are undoubtedly delayed at the expense of future regrets. Their powerful enemies, the papists and Protestants, are ever vigilant in educating the masses in their dogmas, but neglect the general health, perhaps selfishly; for the weaker, vainer, and duller the subjects, the more easily are they won by fear, praise, and promises. So of the many monopolies; they subsist on the stupidity of the millions. But truth and liberty exist and thrive by the vigor, bravery, physical efficiency, and mental daring of the people. They require the very elements that thwart tyrannies, that investigate and accomplish for human good. Whatever and whoever rules, the state of the population is the means and characterizer of the rule. Asian stolidity and European ambition tell this no plainer than American disease. This has so generally demoralized the people as to corrupt the democracy, and prepare the fields of action for its manifold enemies. A cause exists for the ready reception and rapid spread of papal doctrins, and for the broad welcome of Protestant creeds and associations. That cause is lack of healthy poise in body and mind, and is the fruitful source and supply of speculating monopolies which, affiliating with church procedure, doubly fortify both and all, making oppression so strong and complex that a crisis like the present was inevitable.

Friends of progress and champions of liberty, look over the chart of our nation's conditions and affairs, and judge if these views are correct, and if, on the basis of things as they are, Liberals can compel these united vampires to surrender just demands and hold only their dues. The Paine and the Junius of this revolution need to appear and, gazing from first causes to last effects, direct the wholesome measures of rectification. Glorious annual mass meetings only reflect a little more luster on the enemies' varnished shield. Long unmolested customs are arranged on their plans, popular opinions are woven to accord, and compliance is the test of resultant respectability. Whatever operates on the basis of these, and by their methods redounds to their strength, bows to their supremacy, acknowledges their authority. Ambition to advance the Liberal cause in view of the approval of caste and craft is a disastrous inflation pointing to failure, and at best postponing necessary steps.

The power of reforms should be exerted in changing wrong customs, methods, and vicious tendencies; in taking practical ways to obviate depraved habits of the people generally, culturing them in bodily soundness, that mental status to see and embrace needed liberties may be possible. This course, qualifying for action our present inert women, and securing the attention of questioning children, would draw solicitude from former proclivities, and turn indifference to interest. And the knowledge that work had actually begun at the bed-rock of wrongs would inspire in men a hope that efforts for the cause would count for progress. Every iota of gain in this line will hav double weight for the Leagues and all liberty, as it will be so much taken from material now utilized by enslavers of humanity. This will properly commence true education, not to the unlearned, but to go on toward perfection till order institutes a government harmonizing with science. Woman's weakness is wielding a vast influence for superstition's sway, as both branches of the church show, and other fashionable circles, if any are out of the church. Her strength would be a mighty factor in rational thought and right action; a most needed teacher and exemplar to rising ages; besides it is the main, great want of the world, the source of all health, and should be raised from degradation for the sake of all good. As our country is now phased, weakness, fraud, and excess of many sorts are in the ascendant, and tyrannies in possession. To instate integrity and justice, Liberals must labor by their own methods and standards. As agents among the people to cultivate requisit power and qualities, they cannot be too mindful of principle, but can well be careless of praise and scandal. Character will protect reputation in the end. Endeavors being made in Michigan to prevent sect teaching in public schools should be generally imitated. May our humane friends ponder these matters on which liberty hangs, and express their views in THE TRUTH SEEKER. MARY E. TILLOTSON.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 3, 1883.

A Children's Department.

Many calls hav been made upon us recently for the establishment of a children's department in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Being strongly impressed that this need is a crying one, we hav made arrangements with Miss Susan H. Wixon, of Fall River, Mass., to conduct such a department. Miss Wixon is one of the most talented writers in the Liberal ranks. The popularity of her contributions with all our readers, and the grace and good sense which characterize her printed book for young people, "Apples of Gold," are double assurances that her efforts cannot fail to please the parents and instruct the little ones.

The demand for books of this class has been great for a long time, and it was the intention of Mr. Bennett, had he lived, to meet the call. There are hundreds of children's books in existence, but the writers hav all catered to the religious element, the desire being to get them into Sunday-school libraries, thereby insuring a large sale. That this might be accomplished, the authors literally steeped their productions in superstition. Miss Wixon, on the contrary, will teach science and morality in an easy way, omitting all reference to the unknowable. Her writings will be constructiv, forming the basis of a healthy education. Her children are not too good to liv, and will sometimes, we are afraid, go fishing on Sunday without getting drowned. The sickly sentimentalism of the Sunday-school has driven hundreds of youth to peruse yellow-covered literature as a relief, and its influence needs to be counteracted by just such healthy and stimulating stories as Miss Wixon has given us in "Apples of Gold," and will, we feel sure, giv us in the children's department of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

When sufficient material is produced to make a book, it will be gathered together, handsomely illustrated, and published at as cheap a price as possible. We hope in time to thus obtain a Youth's Liberal Library.

One Church Fading Away.

At the fiftieth annual session of the Congregational Association, held in this city recently, some unpalatable but plain truths were told. Most of the ministers present took a gloomy view of the situation. The Rev. John Cunningham stated that, while formerly New York state had six hundred Congregational churches, now it has only two hundred and sixty. The Rev. Ben Staunton stated the case even more pessimistically. "The Congregational church," he told the association, "is a corpse in New York city. There is not a breath or shadow of it along the east side of the city, and scarcely more in the cities along the Hudson river."

The reason for these lugubrious wails is found in the gradual change that has slowly been taking place in New England theology, and a substitution of more Liberal sentiments for the old hell-fire and damnation doctrins. "The most popular and distinguished of the younger generation of New England Congregational pastors," says the Sun, "hav strayed far away from the doctrins of the Cambridge and the Saybrook platforms. They are really Liberals, believing with the Unitarians in the efficacy of good works. They pay little attention to that doctrinal preaching which was the feature of the old New England Calvinism, and they openly disavow or secretly reject many of the essential doctrins. The works of Jonathan Edwards, if they ever took the trouble to read them, would fill them with horror and repugnance."

In New York it seems that Presbyterianism has proved more attractiv than Congregationalism, and those Congregationalists who hav not joined the new school of theology, which is essentially Unitarianism, and, consequently, a progressiv growth, hav gone to the theology of Talmage, McCosh, and Crosby.

The hope which Liberals can indulge from this is that, sooner or later, all the old puritanical sects will dwindle away, and there will be only two opposing intellectual forces left—the Rationalists and the Romanists. That the former will be in the majority none can doubt, and the days of imprisonment for heresy will be at an end.

Poverty and Piety.

The folly, amounting almost to criminality, of a nation spending hundreds of thousands of dollars upon religion, and neglecting to provide for the honest poor at her doors—indeed, in forcing the poor to help pay the enormous sums annually wasted in idle religious show—has lately come home to the government's notice in England. London, long indifferent, has suddenly learned that there is more poverty in its streets than in the worst part of Ireland. In squalid dens the poor herd, multiply, and die. Parliament cannot help them. The measures already passed are impotent. Philanthropy is misdirected. Societies are formed to help discharged convicts, while honest workmen are left to starve and respectable girls are turned from the doors of Magdalen asylums because they lack the necessary qualification. A pamphlet called "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" has roused the widest indignation. Lord Salisbury's article in the National Review, called "Laborers' and Artisans' Dwellings," has made the exasperation still more bitter, the Standard declaring that such a paper from such a man is worth more than a hundred party speeches. Lord Salisbury proposes state intervention, affirming that "public loans are justified by the ingenious considerations of public policy, even if all thoughts of humanity are cast aside." He thinks the working population should be transferred to places outside the town, where good houses should be built for them. Dozens of other remedies hav been proposed by other writers. The excitement is great, and very blunt language is used. The Pall Mall Gazette says that "the man who livs by letting a pestilential dwelling-house is morally on a par with the man who livs by keeping a house of evil fame." A correspondent of the same paper asks, "What is the use of dealing with the fringe of the subject? Why not go boldly to the root? That root is the insensate and reckless multiplication of the human species; as long as that goes on unchecked, all that lawgivers, moralists, and philanthropists can do is whitewashing a sepulcher."

These are words that should make the ears of the churchmen tingle with shame at the treatment they extended to Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant a few years ago when the church persecuted these two Liberal humanitarians for selling the "Fruits of Philosophy," a work designed to prevent the "insensate and reckless multiplication of the human species." Mrs. Besant and Mr. Bradlaugh are still vice-presidents of a League, the object of which is to spread among the people a knowledge of the law of population, of its consequences, and of its bearing upon human conduct and morals. Yet this League must first agitate for the abolition of all penalties on the public discussion of the population question, because under the laws of England, procured by the Established church, such discussions now come within the scope of the common law as misdemeanors. The Freethinkers only escaped the clutches of the church by a technicality when they advocated a restriction of the "insensate and reckless multiplication of the human species," and now London can thank the church for the sepulcher which Lord Salisbury feels it imperativ to whitewash with a public loan, or with government-built houses. The politics of the poor hav come to the front with a rush. "Since the memorable days," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "when Mr. Gladstone startled Europe by his pamphlet on the Bulgarian horrors, no English statesman has launched a manifesto likely to hav such wide and permanent effects as that of Lord Salisbury." The government, though curiously blind, sees that there is a far greater political issue than the restoration of Cetywayo or the indemnity of Mr. Shaw. The bishop of St. Albans, the only churchman who appears to hav his eyes open, declares that the state of England to-day is that of France in the years immediately preceding the revolution. It is probable that this alarm is not premature, for the attention of the public has been called to it many times before now by the radicals of England. The same conditions of society that produced the French revolution now exist in that country. A royal family supported at enormous cost, a pension list of millions and millions of dollars, a corrupt, tyrannical, and domineering host of ecclesiastics, with a state church drawing other millions of dollars from the taxpayers, with labor ill-paid and the laborer living in filthy squalor, it but needs a fire-brand in the shape of a daring leader to set the country ablaze. If a revolution, with the old wild cry of bread or blood, does come upon England, the Guelph family will probably be the last of English monarchs. Mr. Bradlaugh, if he chose, could be the Robespierre of the English revolution, but, being an Atheist, he probably will not.

Why Not Follow the Mormons?

The Herald of last Monday puts to the churches this pertinent question, backing it up with practical suggestions of the following character:

"A large number of Mormon missionaries hav sailed for Europe in search for converts. Hav the missionary boards of the orthodox churches arranged to follow and expose these impostors? If not, why not? Everybody in the churches, like everybody out of them, believes the Mormon system to be a theological humbug and knows it to be a most persistent and dangerous organization, which undermines the foundations of morality and the authority of our government. Religion and patriotism agree in condemning Mormonism, so there is double reason why the missionaries of the 'Latter Day Saints' should be exposed wherever they go. There is still another reason why the efforts of Mormon missionaries should be opposed. for they are made exclusivly among the most ignorant peoples of Europe—among those who, if Christianity has not outgrown the avowed purposes of its founder, peculiarly deserve protection against bad influences.

"Wherever a merchant finds his competitors, there he redoubles his own efforts; wherever a politician sees a vigorous opponent he sends a sturdy henchman to counteract the undesirable influence. The Christian church used to manage its missionary work according to the dictates of experience. If it allows the Mormons to hav their own way in Europe, it will seem to hav lost its common sense, or, worse still, its avowed spirit."

This is a very good and fair hit at the hypocrisy of the Protestant church, which deplores the social evil of Utah, but suggests only as a remedy an armed crusade into that territory.

But polygamy is a product of the church, of religion, and the legal, rightful way of suppressing it is not only by following the Mormon missionaries, but by following the followers, and educating them all out of the degrading superstition which takes the "revelations" to a Mormon "saint," and bases thereon a hierarchy dangerous to our institutions, or gulps down the rotten stories of the Old Testament, and builds upon them a no less offensiv theology. Let the Christians read the "Model Saints," printed in this number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we think that, brazen as are their ministers, they will not hav the effrontery to condemn Brigham Young and uphold Abraham, David, Solomon, and the rest of God's chosen patriarchs.

Not Much Danger from this Convention.

The God-in-the-Constitutionists hav come to the surface again. This time in Lyons, Kansas, where a convention was held on the evenings of the 15th and 16th of October, at which M. A. Gault, the secretary of the "National Reform Association," made his usual misstatements. Mr. Gault is a kind of Comstock, a bigot with a mission, and he is perfectly unscrupulous in his efforts to aid the encroachments of the church. At this Kansas convention he led the discussion on the religious amendment movement, and its relation to the maintenance of Sabbath legislation. He said the movement "was designed to enthrone, not any church, but the moral law, its author. It aimed, through national legislation, to bring the law of God to bear against intemperance, and licentiousness, and Sabbath desecration, and all the vices of our times. It aimed to remedy the serious defect of our Constitution in not recognizing any divine law—anything higher than the will of the people. William H. Seward had raised a storm in the United States Senate by even hinting that there was a 'higher law.' If this law was made the standard of our legislation, and the people were educated up to it, there would be no lying, stealing, swearing, murder, licentiousness, or intemperance, and universal prosperity would reign."

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, a local pulpiteer, read from Isaiah how God had threatened the Jews that if they violated the Sabbath a fire would be kindled in their cities that would not be put out. He referred to the Chicago fire, and the Boston and Portland fires, and to the great London fires, as originating on the Sabbath.

Rev. D. Kingery, another ornament of a Kansas pulpit, said that during the late war, in every battle fought on the Sabbath, the attacking army was defeated, until Lincoln ordered our army not to open hostilities on that day. Our government employed 200,000 men every Sabbath day, in the post-office department. He had never seen the need of either mailing a letter, or taking one from the office on the Sabbath. He believed every train should cease running, and every post-office should be closed on the Sabbath. He asked, How was this to be done? It must be done as the National Reform Association is doing—holding meetings, and organizing conventions, until public sentiment is elevated on these great questions.

Did anyone ever read worse nonsense? Can the Rev. Mr. Gault seriously believe that a recognition of the unknowable in a national charter would prevent the crimes and vices he enumerates? If so, why is it that European countries are troubled with murderers, or thieves, or liars, or licentious priests? Why does the Rev. Mr. Gault himself hail from Iowa, a remarkably pious state, with a God acknowledged in its constitution? The assertions of Mr. Gault are self-destroying. Neither is the Rev. Mr. Milligan happier in his statements. The Sabbath of the Jews is the Saturday of the Christians, a day selected by Constantine, and no holier than Monday or Tuesday. Besides, the fires of Chicago, Boston, and London were put out, and if they were fires referred to by Isaiah the Bible is mistaken.

The Rev. Mr. Kingery is a delightful fossil. He would suspend everything on Sunday—trains, post-offices, horse-cars, newspapers, etc., etc. But why not arrest the wicked ministers who do work for which they receive pay on Sunday, as well as the post-office clerk or train-man? Why not stop eating, why not sleep all day Sunday to avoid the necessity of doing anything that might break the Sabbath and call down the fires from heaven? In short, why not be a consummate fool and be done with it?

Two Scriptural Texts.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA, Oct. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please giv me, through your valuable paper, the book, chapter, and verse where man is commanded to kill his wife for difference of opinion. Also where the Bible says a man that supporteth not his household by the labor of his hands is more than an Infidel. And oblige a subscriber. W. F. COPENHAVER.

Deuteronomy xiii, 6, and following, says:

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers, namely of the gods of the people which are round about you nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; thou shalt not consent unto him nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him; but thou shalt surely kill him; thy hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people. And thou shalt stone him with stones that he die."

1 Timothy v, 8 says:

"But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an Infidel."

Gods Worshiped.

"GLOBE, ARIZONA, Oct. 6, 1883.

"MR. EDITOR: Will you tell me through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER whether there are any other gods worshiped to-day than the god of the Jews? Rev. Calphy, a Methodist minister, has declared twice in a sermon delivered in Globe City, Arizona, that there is no god worshiped to-day that was worshiped at the coming of Christ. Please let us know all, who and where, if any, and confer a favor on a subscriber.

"W. C. WATKINS."

The minister is very ignorant or very dishonest. Besides Jehovah there is an almost innumerable drove of gods, big and little, worshiped with more or less faithfulness, but all with superstitious reverence. Several hundred millions of people in China bent the knee to Confucius several hundred years before Christ, and do now. Taou was also worshiped long before Christ, and has a strong following now. Brahma is the god of the Hindoos, and is worshiped as the supreme ruler of the universe. He, with Siva and Vishnu, is older by hundreds, if not thousands, of years than Christ. Buddha was the god of India hundreds of years before Christ, and is still. About all of the ancient nations had their tutelary deities, and many retain them to this day. Mr. Bennett's "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" is a work on this subject the clergyman may peruse with great advantage to his understanding.

Devilish Doctrin.

The Rev. Mr. Clarke, of the Society of Jesus, is orthodox. He is no pale phantom eternally suspended between heaven and earth. He is pious; he is Christian; he is a Catholic—and his teachings are detestable.

Preaching on "Some of the Agnostic Objections to Hell," last Sunday, he said, and pretended to speak authoritativly:

"Hell is a lake of fire, inasmuch as those condemned to hell will be surrounded by torments as he who is on a lake is surrounded by water. It is a prison house, in that they will hav no taste of liberty. The fire of hell, though it is a true, real fire, is not the gross material fire with which we are conversant on earth. It is a supernatural fire. It produces on the bodies and souls of the lost the same effect that fire produces here on our material bodies, and through them on our souls, except that the agony it causes will be a thousand times more intense. It will result from the intense energies of the body, seeking in vain to be satisfied, everywhere hampered and impeded.

"But there is a far worse torment in hell. The gnawing agony of eternal remorse and reproach will be far worse than any bodily agony. If one ray of the love of God could pierce the flames of hell, it would cease to be hell. The lost would care nothing for their bodily sufferings if their souls were full of joy. The chief torment of hell is the eternal separation from God. The soul here does not appreciate its loss, but then it will crave after his infinit beauty with all its energy, and the unsatisfied longing will be its worst agony. The soul at the Judgment Day will not see God face to face, but it will behold his infinit beauty reflected in the sacred humanity of Jesus Christ, and the regret will fill it with an unextinguishable craving after him, which will cause the greatest agony to the soul deprived of him for all eternity. Add to this that, while they thus long after God, they will nevertheless hate him with unalterable hatred, and the conflict of love and hate will intensify their agony a hundredfold."

How does the Rev. Father Clarke, of the Society of Jesus (Jesuit), know all this? Why should a person wish to love a God who inflicts such torments? Does a child love a parent who forces it to do a deed and then flogs the life almost from its little body? Yet such a parent is an angel of mercy compared to a God who inflicts never-ending torture. The human parent can only cause temporary pain.

Away with such a hellish religion.

Watts and Chainey.

Now is the time for action. Never were prospects brighter for the Liberal cause. This is seen in the success of Watts and Chainey in the West. There has really been a revival. The fire of Liberalism has burst forth. At every point there has been enthusiastic audiences.

This work must be continued. We must not lose our vantage ground. The only way to advance is to keep the world a-thinking. Agitation must go on. Thoughts must go forth that will change and revolutionize the world.

The platform and the press are our instrumentalities. In every way must we keep these in use. We must be ready to support those who adequately express our new ideals. Silence is by no means golden in the present condition of human affairs. There is absolute necessity for talk and discussion.

We must keep our best speakers in the field. They should be at the front and pour the hot shot into the hosts of superstition. There should be a grand rally about those who hav proved themselvs trained and efficient leaders. Watts and Chainey are two of our most admirable representativs. They are able, eloquent, and well equipped, both in heart and mind. They hav joined forces for practical work. Giv them a wide field and generous aid.

We shall hav the opportunity of hearing these vigorous defenders of our cause on Sunday evening, December 9th, at the German Masonic Hall. Let every Liberal in New York city be earnestly interested in this matter. Help to advertise the meeting; come yourself; stir up your friends and subscribe for tickets. We want to make this lecture a success both for the sake of the cause and for the sake of those who are doing such yeoman service. The subject of George Chainey's lecture will be "The Clergy;" of Charles Watts's, "The Impeachment of Christianity." The admission will be fifty cents. Tickets for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Let the names of subscribers for one or more tickets be sent in at the earliest possible moment.

THE most successful strike of the season was that of the printers of this city, which occurred last week. The advance demanded amounted to about fifteen per cent of the wages they were receiving. Nearly all the offices yielded the advance on Thursday, the first day, the majority of the others on the second day, and on Monday about all the men were at their cases again. The strikers were well prepared, as the Union had for a long time been quietly gathering them into the fold, and when the blow was struck it was hard and thorough. THE TRUTH SEEKER, believing that no business deserves to prosper which does not afford its employees a fair remuneration, of course was one of the first to accede to the demand. The additional expense thus incurred will amount to several hundred dollars per year, but the money goes to deserving workmen, and if our friends will pay their subscriptions promptly, we hope to be able to bear it. The laboring man deserves all he can honestly obtain for his services, and this last raise will not even now make the compositors millionaires. We wish the printers well, and hope they will make a judicious and temperate use of the additional pay accorded them.

THE program of the Manhattan Liberal Club for November embraces "Beautiful Women," by Dr. Dio Lewis; "Bakounine and Anarchy," by Samuel P. Putnam; "Individualism," by Henry Appleton; "Progress," by P. S. M. Munro; and a lecture by Daniel Treadwell, which, as Mr. Wakeman remarked at the last meeting, like the supreme deity of some ancient people, is nameless. The club meets every Friday evening at 220 East Fifteenth street, between Second and Third avenues. The meetings probably transcend in interest those of any other organization in this city.

UNDER date of Oct. 24th, Mr. Heywood writes that his trial is put down for Oct. 31st, at Worcester, before Judge Aldrich, one of the most illiberal occupants of the Massachusetts bench. Mr. Heywood intimates that the politicians are working for his conviction, to secure votes from the Puritans.

IN the North American Review for November, Senator H. B. Anthony writes of "Limited Suffrage in Rhode Island," giving incidentally a highly interesting sketch of the early constitutional history of that little commonwealth, and setting forth the considerations which influenced its people in restricting the exercise of the electoral prerogativ. Dr. Norvin Green, president of the Western Union Company, in an article entitled "The Government and the Telegraph," cites the provisions of the Federal Constitution and the determinations of the Supreme Court which appear to debar the general government from assuming the management of the telegraph lines; and present statistics designed to prove that the service in this country is both cheaper and more efficient than in any of the countries of Europe where the governments own the lines. The Rev. David N. Utter brings out from oblivion the record of certain alleged atrocious crimes of "John Brown, of Osawatomie." There are two scientific articles, namely, "Solar Physics," by Professor Balfour Stewart, and "Modern Explosivs," by Gen. John Newton. W. H. Mallock contributes "Conversations with a Solitary," an imaginary passage-at-arms between a Radical and a Conservativ, in which the two opposing theories of government and society are advocated. In "Suggestions in regard to the Public Service," Green B. Baum offers certain facts going to prove that the clerks and other employes of the government departments at Washington, even before the passage of the Civil Service act, were in the main both faithful and efficient. Finally, "Dr. Hammond's Estimate of Woman" is reviewed by Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Miss Nina Morais, Mrs. Sara A. Underwood, and Dr. Clemence S. Lozier. Fifty cents a copy; $5 a year. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, and sold by newsdealers generally.

THE parties who were arrested near New Haven last Sunday as Sabbath breakers were tried Monday, found guilty of violating a law passed in 1702, and fined $3 each with $2.94 costs in every case. This is right. We hope the law will be rigidly enforced. It is a miserable law, of course, but if it is good enough to remain on the statute books it is good enough to be applied to a people who are willing that it shall remain on the statute books. We believe the legislature repealed a section of a recently made law forbidding pleasure driving on Sunday, because it was found to bear heavily on the clergy of the state, but it seems that the old blue law was not disturbed.—Winsted Press.

It Must Be; It Is Believed.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav been requested by a few of your subscribers to reply to Mr. Chapman's logic on Spiritualism. If this paper is worth inserting, and the argument worth noticing, it is to be hoped that something better than boasting will be advanced in favor of Spiritism. The advocate for modern Spiritism is not over-cautious in his assertions.

Your correspondent (Mr. Chapman) boldly asserts that "even those who are the most bitter in denouncing dare not deny." That is a great folly on his part. I as boldly deny the truth of modern Spiritualism as he asserts it. Here, then, we hav joined issue. Where are the proofs? It has been said by one of old that "boldness is the child of ignorance," and there is truth in the saying. All Spiritualists will agree that I am the child of ignorance. That being so, here is a good opportunity to "enlighten my darkness." "No phenomena but should receive a fair and thorough investigation." So says Mr. Chapman. The question now arises, What is a "fair and thorough investigation?" Is that an honest investigation where the light is turned nearly out to enable you the better to see; where your hands are taken prisoner to enable you to feel the spirit? Is that an honest investigation at nearly all the seances where doubt is treated as a crime? Is that a "fair and thorough investigation" where the audience sings while the medium is in the cabinet? Is that an honest investigation where you are not allowed to look into the cabinet; not allowed to stoop under the table while some one raps? Ah, that philosophy of raps! Investigated the raps? Ask the modern Spiritist what caused the raps. The answer is, spirit. Is that an honest answer? If it is, it is an ignorant one. Raps are no proof of spirit. There are thousands of raps made without the aid of spirit. Any one can make a rap. There is a rap. How was it made? Spirit made it, says the Spiritist. How do you know? The rap said so, by rapping out the proper raps. Is that proof? If so, saying makes it so. If the raps are no proof, where is the value of the raps? There is this proof—there is the medium; he is an interested party. Where is the spirit? Giv as good proof of the spirit being present as there is of the medium? Giv as good proof that the spirits can and do rap as the mediums can and do rap? Giv as good proof of the existence of spirit as Franklin gave of electricity. To compare modern Spiritualism with scientific facts is simply begging the question. In what science are you requested to hav the light put out, or to hav your hands held fast by your neighbor's? In what science are you not to doubt? In scientific investigation the cry is, light. In Spiritism the cry is, darkness. In "fair and thorough investigation" the motto is, examin. In Spiritualism, hands off. In scientific circles doubt is not a crime, because the fact can be produced whether you doubt or not. In spirit circles doubt is a crime, and doubter and the unbeliever in the genuin phenomena of dark circles, hands prisoners; must leave the spirit circle, because the fact cannot be produced if a "fair and thorough investigation" takes place. Spiritualism is not scientific; the principle factors in Spiritism are faith, fancy, and mediumism. Faith sees things that are not; fancy takes them for realities, and mediumism is the theology of rapism. All scientific facts can be reduced to something useful. Spiritualism is useful to the mediums only. Your correspondent admits that he has seen fraud among mediums. Has he proof, apart from his faith and fancy, of a genuin one?

He asserts, "But this did not prove the genuin one false." That is really a truth, with another truth alongside of it. It did not prove that any genuin ones exist.

What a mistaken notion to fancy that one thing proves the existence of another! A genuin seance will not prove the existence of a false one; neither will a false one prove the existence of a genuin one; each must prove their own existence—that is, if they hav any existence.

Surely your correspondent's faith destroys his philosophy, or it may be only a slight touch of rant. What can he mean by this: "When people die, they simply move from the world of effects into the world of causes?

Does not anyone know that an effect becomes a cause; that a cause was only an effect of another effect; that cause and effect are equal in time, both being of one age? The cause cannot be the cause until it has produced the effect, therefore cause and effect are of one age. Hence dead people do not go into the world of cause, but they are buried in the effect of death. Spiritualism is truly the religion of faith, fancy, and mediumship; it is not competent to see the meaning of cause and effect.

The father is the cause, or one of the causes, of the child. Cannot anyone see that father and son are of one age? The father was not the father until he had a child born to him. He was a man before, but not a father; when the child became a child, he became a father. When the child dies, he will no longer be a father, hence cause and effect are of this world, of one age, and not of the fanciful dreamland of misty Spiritism. What a strange thing it is to find Spiritualists talking about "prejudice!" Who has more "prejudice" than a Spiritualist, when he makes doubt a crime and refuses to allow a materialized spirit to be held in the light? "Prejudice!" Who can be prejudiced against eternal life, a life of youth and beauty, a life of happiness and joy, a life of eternal progress? These things man may not believe, because he has no evidence for them; but to be prejudiced against them—it is the hight of folly to assert it. The prejudices are on the side of the Spiritist, because people will not believe on such poor evidences, that hav the stamp of deception on their faces. Are the performances of the dead evidence of anything but that a poor set of conjurers are at the bottom of the affair? Eternal life will be as great a blessing as mediumship is a curse.

Unbelievers are refused liberty to examin. It is said that if the conditions are not favorable for such an examination, the spirits will not submit to be examined. An honest spirit would. An honest medium would. Honesty is truth reduced to practice. Therefore, if neither the spirit or medium will submit to be examined upon scientific principles, they prove themselvs to be both cowards and impostors.

The theory of Spiritualism is unphilosophic, whether man livs after death or not. The theory is a complete blunder. Nature develops the physical body. Spirit is developed in the body. Spirit is mind. Mind is a function of the brain. Memory, imagination, the power to reason, love, hatred, joy, grief, faith, fear; here are sex passions, with the intellectual powers, go to make the constitution of the mind. In your summer-land, will the spirit hav joy and grief, love and hatred, belief and doubt? If the spirit is without these passions, then the spirit has changed, and the change has made it something else than a human spirit, because it has lost sex passion. If the spirit keeps the passions, does it exercise them by hating some other spirit?—by doubting some other spirit?—by fearing some other spirit?

The theory says, "Spirits are organized, and then they are subject to the organic law, therefore they are not eternal. One thing is certain about Spiritism. All its pretensions to scientific accuracy are begged; its only prop is fancy, faith, and mediumism.

If Spiritism was a truth, then it could be rereduced to practice, and spirits would labor for the benefit of man. All crime could be detected. All the rich ore in the earth could be pointed out. All the lost treasure, lost in the sea, could be pointed out, and the best way to find it. Spiritualism has been long enough to hav showed something of utility to the inhabitants of earth, instead of rapism, mediumism, and boastism. Look at this vain boasting from the champion of Spiritism? "Spiritualism is a sceince. As such it has been demonstrated by as able scientists as ever lived." In plain, honest English, that is not true. "It is here and has come to stay." Because it is here is, that a proof of its truth? How many errors are here? Do not errors stay? What rant, instead of logic! Spiritualism, instead of being a science, is a delusion reduced to practice, and it is hedged in and round by those conditions that favor deception instead of exposing it.

Verona Pa., Oct. 23, 1883. Dr. Charles Audley.

Spiritualism.

WHO IS AT THE OTHER END OF THE WIRES?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I think it is about thirty years since I attended some of Mr. LaRoy Sunderland's lectures in New York city, on psychology and mesmerism in general. They were the more interesting to me inasmuch as I had found by some previous acquaintance in the same line of research, myself to be a pretty good operator. Mr. Sunderland was then a vigorous, activ-minded philosopher, and evidently understood the subject he was laboring to elucidate. Can it be possible that age (for he must be an old man now) has had anything to do with his reasoning faculties? or must we reply in the language of Festus to Paul, "Much learning hath made thee mad." And yet when he talks so inconclusivly about the ends of these invisible Spiritual wires, I am afraid he is trifling with my extreme youth;

> "Or has he eaten of the insane root
> That takes the reason prisoner?" —Macbeth.

Be that as it may; his own expressed experience should long ere this hav taught him who these meddlers were who were agitating the other end of the wires. Mr. Sunderland has left his friends to infer he has seen much on this mysterious subject. The straightforward account of what he saw and felt at the Rev. Dr. Phelps's dwelling, in Stratford, Conn., in the year 1851, viz., knocking things about, throwing boxes at his head, shaking the breakfast-table so violently as to spill the coffee, destroying property, and then the deliberate lying and diabolic blasphemy when questioned by the "man of God," a minister fully ordained and in good orthodox standing—these manifestations certainly indicated spirits, and yet not "the spirits of just men made perfect."

Fortunately for me, early in my investigations into the mysteries of Spiritualism I commenced journalizing my own observations, from early in the year 1851, many of which The Truth Seeker had the kindness to publish. This memorandum, with notations of the various circumstances under which they were obtained, has now swollen to the size of two volumes. I am free to confess that some of the scenes were indeed frightful, terrific, and repulsiv. I hav also memoranda of communications indicating the most advanced conceptions in philosophy, and lessons in morality of the purest practical, unselfish character. I hav had also friendly chidings, timely cautions, and healthful cures in my own family. I hav carefully also noted the various channels of mediumship through which these communications hav been received—discounting sometimes very liberally for artless self-deceptions, and repudiating promptly all deliberately attempted fraud. I can confidently repeat—as in a former article published in The Truth Seeker—I hav long since discovered "who are at the other end of the wires."

Mr. Sunderland must be aware from his examination into the facts of Spiritualism that its most striking tests are principally of a private domestic nature, and seldom or never come before the public. He is shrewd enough to observe also that the range of Spiritual belief is very extensiv, ranging from the extreme Pantheistic disbeliever in a personal deity, disbelievers in all biblical authenticity unsupported by the developments of science and reason—to which I naturally incline—down to the most creed-bound evangelical bigot, including in its descent the most abject "holy roller" that ever disgraced the flooring of a Methodist revival church.

It is queer for a professor to propound to a common thinker, "if he really knows why the angels waited a hundred thousand years before making known to us the summer-land." Why not ask, Why was not the theory of Darwin launched upon the world a hundred thousand years ago, or long before priestcraft allowed the human mind by the slow process of unfoldment to comprehend such startling facts? With the same propriety why not ask why the discovery of photography, the electric telegraph and telephone, with numerous kindred wonders, were allowed so long to remain unknown. No doubt the same constituent elements existed then as now.

Mr. Sunderland does not, or pretends not to, know the precise claims of spiritual knowledge or Spiritualism, as a demonstrated philosophy. He seems to think they (the spirits) can giv you a comprehensible history of thousands of antecedent years. He seems to think they hav the ability with accuracy of foretelling events. He seems to expect a high condition of veracity in all their averments. Now, if he has made this blunder, the sooner he corrects his error the sooner he will find out who are at the other end of the wires.

Spirits to us are invisible, and no doubt will long to mortals remain so; and we can only judge of them by their intelligence given through mediums, be the same good, bad, or indifferent. From them we are uniformly told that they (the spirits) are individuals who formerly occupied (the same as ourselvs do now) the mortal form, and that their condition is a vast improvement on the physical or earth life; but that they carry with them into their new condition all their loves, and hatreds, and mischievous follies, and malevolences, that actuated them while in the mortal form.

The doctor frankly concedes the strangeness of the phenomena in all its grotesqueness, and if so, it is wonderful from the folly, the ignorance, viciousness, villainy, hypocrisy, and general inconsistency of the lives of humanity here, that he should expect a higher exhibition of intelligence from them than we are apt to receive at an ordinary seance.

Much could be said of the temptation to fraud in hired mediumship or of those who follow mediumship as a profession. But we must be cautious of arraigning the ruling animus of the whole human family for its love of greed. On this point we must indeed be gentle. Certainly when the learned doctor was lecturing, in the years long past, on the mysteries of mesmerism (a very valuable study), he did not overlook the love of gain. He certainly will not contend that there is a gowned bishop, parson, or preacher, descending downward through Beecher and Talmage to the most noisy psychological Methodist ranter, who, while he bellows on God's merciful "plan of salvation" is not more stimulated by love of the almighty dollar than the love of Jesus.

In conclusion, I will state that I hav received through the tippings of a common pine kitchen table (the medium being an unlettered Irish domestic) more convincing evidence, both scientific and metaphysical, than from hours of eloquence on the public platform. Those who desire to will please try. At any rate, they will find who is at the other end of the wires.

David Bruce.

Mr. John E. Remsburg's great speech at the Rochester Convention, on the "False Claims of the Church," it should be remembered, is now published in a handsome pamphlet. It should also be borne in mind that The Truth Seeker's edition of this valuable lecture was revised and enlarged by the author, and is the only correct edition. The price is 10 cents per copy, or 75 cents per dozen. Sold at this office.

Dr. Buchanan's New Education.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A communication was made to me for the Colloquium by Dr. Joseph Rodes Buchanan, and read before that body, which has in it matter which I believe will be of interest to Liberals generally, and I transmit it for publication. Dr. Buchanan is, in my judgment, one of the few great men of the world, and a great discover in science in domains so new and so subtle that he has had to wait many years for appreciation—the penalty of being in advance of his age. Being a medical man, and also profoundly interested in education, he has recently published a work entitled "Moral Education;" and is also occupying himself with the effort to found, in Boston, a Reform Medical School or College, with a view to illustrate in practice many of his advanced ideas, in addition to the ordinary instruction in such schools. These statements will explain the following correspondence:

26 East Chester Park, Boston, Oct. 16, 1883.

S. P. Andrews, Dear Sir: I inclose an item of educational progress for your information and also for communication to the Colloquium. Our meeting was favorably noticed in the Globe, Herald, Transcript, Commonwealth, and Journal of Education, and will be in the Hartford Times. The notice I send is from the Transcript. I expect to continue the meetings. Our College lectures will not begin before January. My indorsing friends Phillips, Allen, Applebee, and Barnett, are first-class men. I remain your friend, J. R. Buchanan.

THE NEW EDUCATION.

At the meeting in Berkeley Hall Saturday evening, Professor R. F. Humiston was chosen chairman, and Rev. W. H. Wagner secretary. Professor J. R. Buchanan stated the objects of the meeting, and presented the following letters of sympathy and approbation from gentlemen who had been expected but were unable to attend. A letter was read from Wendell Phillips, as follows:

"My Deas Sir: I am very sorry I cannot attend your convention to-day. Some time ago I read your volume with profound interest. It stirred new hopes within me. I welcomed most earnestly your large, generous views of human nature, its duties and responsibilities; your novel but not revolutionary philosophy. And it is because I do not agree with you in every point that I more deeply regret I cannot listen to the discussions to-day.

"Your analysis of human nature and your outlook for its future and its development engaged my deepest interest. It seemed to me that whether men agreed entirely with you or not, your argument is destined to work a most beneficial change in our educational plans and methods—indeed, in the whole philosophy of education—a change imperativ in self-governed states, and sure to result in vast improvement.

"So important do I consider your suggestions on this matter, that I count your convention an event, almost an epoch, in New England agitation. Indeed, it is your invaluable and very practical suggestions touching education that most interest me.

"I earnestly wish that you may be able to get the attention of the best minds among us, and that your movement will rally round it aid and co-operation enough to insure its fullest consideration in Massachusetts. Very cordially yours,

"Wendell Phillips."

Other letters were read from Rev. James Kay Applebee, Hon. Stephen M. Allen, and Rev. Benjamin F. Barrett, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Applebee who is a worthy successor of Theodore Parker, and has built up a free and creedless church, writes as follows:

"Dr. Joseph Rodes Buchanan, Dear Sir: I very much regret that in consequence of your meeting taking place on Saturday evening, it will be impossible for me to be present. You represent the most important reform movement of the time—the movement that means the most, and which cuts the most deeply into all the social sins and sores of the age—and I do most heartily wish the movement all possible success. To try to advance such a movement must indeed be considered by all true reformers a supreme duty.

"I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, James Kay Applebee."

Professor Buchanan then addressed the meeting for about half an hour, his remarks being received with great applause, and a vote of thanks tendered for his able address in exposition of improvement in education.

The subject was then discussed by Messrs. Humiston, Wellington, Flower, and Lawrence in a very interesting manner, and a committee of eleven was appointed to continue the agitation of the subject and to raise an endowment of fifty thousand dollars for the university.

The address of Professor Buchanan was devoted to illustrating the omnipotent power of education to change and elevate human nature, and the failure of purely intellectual education to improve our social condition, as the immense increase of intellectual education in the present century had been accompanied by an equal increase of crime, insanity, intemperance, and suicide. Moral education, he claimed, was the only remedy, and he referred to several famous schools in which its power to reform and elevate had been demonstrated.

P.S.—Permit me to mention another matter. Mr. Caleb Pink feels himself aggrieved by the notice of him in your report of his lecture before the Liberal Club, reported Oct. 13th, in which he is characterized as "egotistic" and as manifesting a tendency to "brag" of his own far-reaching comprehensivness. He affirms, and I am certain that in his ideal sketch of a mind able to span the area of truth, he referred not to himself at all, but to some one else. His own assumption is that he is guided by the spirit of truth; i. e., desires and intends the truth every time, and does also his level best. Even this claim is of course liable to be mistaken for egotism. Mr. Pink's grievance, however, is in the main that the unfriendly criticism, as he regards it, was made by a Universologist, and so inclines to hold me responsible for not keeping my "following" better in hand as a "brotherhood," than to leave them to smooch each other. This involves an entire misapprehension of the matter. Universologists, as such, are no more a brotherhood than mathematicians. Among Universologists there are those, it is true, who are associated more intimately, under another name, in what is the incipient idea of "a brotherhood."

I can only say that, for myself, I dissent entirely from the adverse part of the criticism on Mr. Pink in the report, which still in the main was very appreciativ and commendatory. Mr. Pink is among my most cherished friends, and also himself a Universologist. What others deem egotism in him is, to my perception, an exceedingly interesting audacity, in asserting, in a novel and emphatic way, the truth he sees. What has surprised me a little is his thin-skinnedness to this special criticism, as I hav always seen him stand fire with exceptional intrepidity. Stephen Pearl Andrews.

Letters from Friends.

Onondaga Valley, Oct. 22, 1883.

Mr. Editor: One of the admirers of The Truth Seeker (Comfort T. Chaffee), of Navarino, N. Y., died of typhoid fever on the 17th of October, aged 75 years and 8 months. His funeral was attended by a Baptist clergyman (Mr. Palmer), who did honor to himself and the friends of the deceased. Thus a good man has passed peacefully to his rest. R. Chafee.

Springfield, Mass., October 20, 1883.

Mr. Editor: Inclosed I send you $3 to pay for The Truth Seeker. I hav taken it six years, and feel that I cannot do without it. I am glad that there is a prospect of a Freethought convention at Boston some time next January. I am glad that you proposed that Mrs. Colby be engaged to speak at such a gathering at Boston. She is a very eloquent speaker. Yours truly, M. O. Mott.

A YOUNG INFIDEL GONE.

Perrysville, Allegheny Co., Pa., Oct. 21, 282.

Dear Macdonald: With sorrow we inform you two of our grandchildren died about a week ago of diphtheria, one 14 years old, the other 5. Phemie M. Beveridge, the young Infidel, has been a remarkable child all her lifetime. She could read well when 11 years of age. At that time she read R. G. Ingersoll's book, the "Gods and Other Lectures." She liked it so well she took the book to school to her teacher, a man by the name of John Thompson, to read. Some of the Christians wanted Thompson removed for taking such a book into school. She has lately read the "Darwins" and other books by Elmina. Oh, how she admired the author of such grand works! When the time came for us to get The Truth Seeker Phemie was always first at the post-office, and had a great part of the paper looked over before we received it. O cruel death, to pluck our flowers so early.

Our brother, Andrew Beveridge, read at the grave from the "Truth Seeker Collection," that beautiful passage Form Number 8, by Jenkins.

Your friends in mourning,

Grandfather and Grandmother,
James and Euphemia Beveridge.

WHAT IS LIFE WITHOUT LIBERTY?

Pittsburgh, Oct. 23, 1883.

Is there in nature anything more beautiful to behold than her glory and wonders, and when we study man, with all his construction, what a wonderful study! Man is the greatest study of human progress. How many thousands are in this world scarcely without any knowledge, but, on the other hand, those that are gifted by nature are not always allowed to make use of that knowledge, but what a horrible thing it is to enslave the mind by force and ignorance! What human power dares to deny its rights of freedom to a fellow-being is beyond my comprehension. What is a man's intelligence to him without the exercise of his will? The mind should be free on every subject. But where the mind is imprisoned, there man is a helpless being, as much as the child that knows little of its surroundings.

But some would say, "What's the good of an education?" Only those that know very little of its value would ask such a question? Intelligence has no use for ignorance.

Ignorance is the deadlock to barbarism. Intelligence and reason are the great guides to human happiness. But the question arises, Who keeps mankind in ignorance? No one but the church. She is ever ready to crush human knowledge.

But the time will come when she cannot exercise that right, and the clergy realizes this fact. Does religion enlighten the mind? On the contrary, she despises progress. Religion has conquered long enough. The time will come when religion will pass away, and science will step in her place for eternal truth. Where there is religion, there is ignorance and crime. To say that religion is beneficial to humankind is utterly absurd. Infidelity is yet in its infancy, but what wonderful progress it has made! It is growing year by year. 'Tis to Infidelity, that great benefactor of humanity, that we are indebted for our liberties to-day. And, let me add, every Infidel may be proud of his title. When you come in contact with an ignorant being, you realize that he is a Christian. We may rejoice at the progress it has made. Yours truly, Julius Wagner.

Mt Union Oct. 21, 1883.

Mr Editor: Will you allow a true friend and occasional reader of your paper to say a word to the disputants in the case of spirit vs. matter? I find it very amusing, these Freethinkers are so spicy.

Mr. Otto Wettstein starts out quite cheerfully to make something useful out of Mrs. Heddon, but brings up suddenly with a sigh of despair, "Alas, you are a woman!" To him I would say, Take heart, dear brother; that is a most fortunate circumstance for you. Surely it is an entity you are in pursuit of, and truth, like every other entity, has a masculin and feminin side. It is apparently the mission of Mrs. Heddon to keep you from entrenching yourself in one side of a question, and ignoring the other. In this she is doing you a service, for which you will be grateful.

But Mr. Winter with his quack nostrum, labeled Materialism, is quite irresistible. "See here, madam," he says, "I am going to quiet you. You are emotional (or hysterical); take this and be happy."

The medicin he prescribes, and for which I infer he claims a sort of patent, if not for himself, for Mr. Wettstein, was offered some of us before he was born, I presume, by hands as skilful, and holding in their palms the utmost of our love, but so far from ever having been cured thereby, we unhesitatingly pronounce it humbug; incapable of producing happiness, and if it were not, still false. Happiness by the way, is a vague term. A drunkard reeled past me the other dav, proclaiming himself "the happiest man alive." When an incubus like orthodoxy is removed, there must be a feeling of exhilaration; but if this were synonymous with happiness it would be no proof of truth or falsity in that which produced it. It has happened to some of us to know that human life goes on, how long we know nothing about, but complete, and perhaps slightly improved after the dissolution of the body; and this knowledge would still be truth to us, if instead of yielding the sweetest satisfaction, it were fraught with misery. If you say such knowledge is impossible, I answer that is mere assumption on your part. Your own ignorance of any given subject proves nothing.

In one thing, however, we may, and will if they are rational, agree—that our proper work is here and now. "One world at a time" is a good motto. If this world is a school, we are not by any means ready to graduate to a higher. I also freely admit that if the laws of that life (spirit) were designed to govern us here, they will be at least as unmistakable as the laws of this world. Like Charles Bright, I deprecate the building up of a sect upon Spiritism. Let all sects go to the dogs. and let all our faculties be bent to the service of humanity.

It seems to me a rather fortunate circumstance that our beliefs do not directly or very seriously affect our happiness or our conduct. I hav known long and very intimately those professing the extreme of Atheism whose lives could not hav been more stainless and exalted if they had been modeled from the knights of old with all "modern improvements;" who watched and disciplined themselvs as if they thought the eye of a wrathful God was always upon them and they would hav to liv thousands of years under its burning beams.

I hav known highly professing Christians who lived as if their motto might be, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die;" or, with Frances Wright's addition, "Let us eat, drink, and love, for to-morrow we die." I hav known, too, the cases reversed.

I hav boldly claimed knowledge of continued existence—the existence of a God I can only surmise. I will say, briefly as possible, that this evidence was given before the advent of Spiritualism, when it was least expected, as to how as well as when, and has never been repeated. I am quite ready to giv the proofs to anyone who does not doubt either my truth or sanity; to the rest I hav nothing to say. I hav no power to get up a spiritual show, even for the tempting bait of Mr. Wettstein's stock of jewelry; but perhaps if it ever occurs to him to make acquaintance with that "love stronger than death," the knowledge will be his without the loss of a single jewel. E. A. W.

Owego, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1883.

Mr. Editor: What a world of thought, of fact and fancy, is continually thrust upon your consideration for analysis and reflection! Almost every creedist and combatant is presented for aerification to public inspection, acceptance, or rejection. Prominently among the mighty ones of thought for public acceptance or rejection, I will only name one at this time, one whom I much love and greatly admire for his manly and bold outspoken defense of humanity—Robert G. Ingersoll. In the letter he wrote to his friend bereaved of his mother, I was tenderly touched by the whole tenor of it, until I came to the "only salutation, good-night," and the last paragraph of the letter in which he says, "Nearly forty-eight years ago, under the snow in the little town of Cazenovia, my poor mother was buried. I remember her as she looked in death. That sweet cold face has kept my heart warm through all the years." Oh, how cold and chilling the thought or idea that the remembrance of cold, corrupting, decomposing mattter can warm, cheer, and encourage this loving heart! No, for what property does it possess over any other organ or function of my organism for intellectual and affectional recognition or enjoyment, in the nature of my conscious being—the me, the ego, all there is connected with this material individuality?

O my brother, I hav laid all that remained of the material of a loved mother away under the sod (not silent, for it is teeming with vegetable life, possessing the spirit, life, or soul of vegetation) some years since, and my heart (or the ego) has been and is kept, not from the cold-faced remembrance, but from a conscious presence of her life examples and maternal affection, developed through her original being in connection with my own, between which not even dissolution nor decay (death) can interpose one moment's absence or forgetfulness. And the cheering thought that that emotional, thoughtful mother yet survives in higher realms of existence of loving emotional affection, the sympathetic chords or relation of which no time or circumstances can sever, the great law of compensation, justice, and equality must still remain. All the parts are only equal to the whole; so that without these parts there is no whole. Thus we learn the true definition of the word eternity is the incomprehensible postulate of all things.

H. C. CHAMPLIN, M.D.

BRONSON. FLA., Oct. 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3. which you will place to my credit on THE TRUTH SEEKER, the best Freethought paper published in this country. "Long may it wave." O. RICHARDSON.

CASNOVIA, MICH., Oct 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of the missing numbers, and also two extra copies, for which recieve my thanks. I will endeavor to use them so they will do the most good. Please send me your catalog, and I think, ere long, I will show you that I appreciate favors. I am an old man; came into Michigan over fifty years ago; hav been exposed to all the orthodox creeds and the fever and ague, but through merciful providence I hav not been afflicted with either. May THE TRUTH SEEKER hav a wide circulation. Yours, JNO. S. TUXBURY

NEW YORK, Oct. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I think that perhaps neither yourself nor your correspondents of last week hav put sufficiet emphasis upon what is really the best and most effectiv way of honoring Mr. Bennett. A monument is good, and I hav contributed $5 toward it; a Bennett Hall is better, and I would be pleased to contribute toward its erection. But he has a monument and a memorial already in the paper which he founded, and one that may from year to year become more worthy of its founder. Those who differ as to the respectiv effectivness of the monument and the hall for the purposes for which they are intended need entertain no doubt in regard to THE TRUTH SEEKER. To the support of this, then, let contributions in the form of subscriptions be made until it enters every English-speaking community under the sun, carrying the name of its founder with it, and until D. M. Bennett becomes known and honored throughout the world. Nothing less than this can be the best way of honoring Mr. Bennett.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

CLINTON, ILL., Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find a brief history of a brother Liberal who called me to his death-bed six weeks ago, and made the following request of me. He said: "Brother Myers, I am about to pass to the inevitable, and as I hav lived a Liberal all my life, I hope to die a Liberal, and preserve all my hatred and contempt for ignorance, superstition, and orthodoxy to an honorable end. Furthermore, as my wife is a believer in Christianity, and of a nervous temperament, she is liable to be overcome and permit a minister to officiate at my funeral. Now, Brother Myers, I make this last request—should any preacher attempt to conduct services at my burial, for the respect you hav for my final desire, please interfere, and that to such extent as will so crush clerical impudence that it may never be displayed at the omega of a Liberal." J. C. MYERS.

DIED, in Clinton, Dewitt Co., Ill., of sciatica, Geo. W. Crowden, aged 41 years, 11 months, and 28 days.

George Crowden was born in Cambridgeshire, England, Oct. 21, 1842. At the age of nine years, he, with his parents, emigrated to the United States, and settled in Westfield, Chautauqua Co., N. Y. At the age of seventeen his father moved to Freeport, Stephenson Co., Ill., and at the breaking out of the late war he enlisted in Co. B, 17th Regular Volunteers Infantry; served nine months, and was discharged from the hospital, and enlisted a second time in the mule-packing department, packing over the Cumberland to Rosecrans. After serving five months he turned his train over to another chief on account of rheumatism, contracted by exposure, sleeping in the mud and under the snow without shelter in winter. November 17, 1863, he was married to Miss Elvira J. Clarke, of Freeport, Ill. In 1864 he became an employee of the I. C. R. R. Co., as fireman—always the first man to be laid off, and the last man for promotion; but finally arrived at the hight of his ambition by being promoted to an engineer of the same road, where he served faithfully up to the 27th of last December, when he made his last trip. During this time he has suffered more or less from rheumatism, and for the past two years he could not walk from his engin to his home without the assistance of a cane or crutch. It seems that misfortune has followed him through life.

LEHIGH, PA., Oct. 22, 1883.

MR EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3—$2.50 to pay my subscription, and 50 cents to pay for pamphlets selected, which you will find named elsewhere in this letter. I hav been receiving your paper on credit for some time, and I was cognizant of the fact; but my financial circumstances, which were some what poor, forced me to defer in remitting until now.

Your goodness in still sending the paper after the termination of my subscription I fully appreciate, and please accept my sincerest thanks for the same. I hope I shall be able to do better in the future in regard to my subscription when it becomes due.

Your paper is the most welcome visitor which enters our home. And we would be lost indeed if we were deprived from reading the many good articles from the pens of its intelligent contributors. Our attachment has become so great toward it that the grand TRUTH SEEKER can be seen occupying the most prominent place upon our table.

It seems to me that it is gaining and growing more interesting each week, and I am forced to announce that THE TRUTH SEEKER was never more interesting than at present. I subscribe for a so-called Freethought paper; and in order to avoid being personal I shall refrain from mentioning the name; but it would be unfair to class it as a brother of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as it seems to be carrying a dead weight with it. It has no attractivness about it, nothing in it which interests the general thinking mind, or the few who think above the average. In fact, to my mind, every copy is but a duplicate of the previous one. As soon as such papers are received the headings only of articles are glanced at, and as they hav no attractiv features to encourage the reading of the articles, they are hastily thrown down and never taken up again unless for waste paper. The publication of such papers seems to me but a waste of time and labor, and which results in nothing. None gains thereby.

And, according to my thinking, it would be much better if the managers of papers like the one I hav referred to could be induced to follow some other lucrativ branch of employment which would suit their abilities better than the editing of a Freethought paper. This is why I cannot class it as a brother to THE TRUTH SEEKER. It has not got the same ring, nor the force which drives its Christian foes to the wall in despair. The one is too sweet. It wants to put too much molasses on the back of a Christian before it attacks him. The other, with its long, broad sword, cuts to the bone and lays open the inwardness of his deception by letting the corruption flow.

Long may the grand old TRUTH SEEKER stand at the front among Freethought journals. It now is head and shoulders above all others. I think under its present management it will continue to gain ground and favor throughout the length and breadth of this broad continent. Very truly yours,

R FLEMING.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just "gone through" THE TRUTH SEEKER of October 6th. It contains an article by Otto Wettstein and a letter from Thomas Winter. I mention the names of these two persons because to me they represent a class or "strata" of Materialism which is utterly illogical, inconsistent, and morally dishonest. This modern world about them is literally crowded with the every-day, indisputable evidence of the spiritual phenomena they affect to call (mildly speaking) delusion, and which they doggedly and, from a moral point of view, cowardly ignore. The whole troupe of the same class of Materialistic scientists I place in the same box. Their pride is in the way of their looking into the subject with any degree of sincerity. Their attitude is such as to impress one that they would view a true revelation from "the beyond" as a very unwholesome truth—a guest nominally welcome, but in the case of "spirits" very hard to take. What sounding idiots do they make of themselvs by hollowing into our ears, Humbug! for if there was ever anything in this wondrous universe belonging to the unknown that has been and is constantly being proved to be true, it is spirit phenomena. In fact, the man or the woman in this land and age who is not a witness of it, is simply materialistically sleepy. A man who would know what is going on in this world must not get into the backwoods of his own pride and conceit, and declare that what he don't already know has no existence. It is altogether too thin to assert that what is not known is the unknowable. Their Materialism is the rebound of rank superstition, and as a sequence, only the twin of that barbarism. Their perplexity seems to be, as with the superstitionists, God. They are not satisfied with the easy task of disposing of the Jewish God, but they must needs destroy the bare term, God, which in all intelligent chronicling is synonymous with the various terms and figures of speech applied to the unknowable. Language can only state cold fact; at least, with most of us this is so. The soul, spirit, essence, or whatever it may be named [what's in a name?] cannot do more than approximate its true expression through material forms, any more than the hand can paint or portray the full beauty and grandeur of the ideal. Even if it could, where would be those who could comprehend it. Heywood's talk is very largely idealism. He says, "Don't marry," and yet he is probably one of the best married men in the world. His language is understood by but very few, and this few so generally poor, and consequently practically powerless, that he will probably be swamped by the martyrdom he seems to court. He, too, seems to like nothing less than God the indefinable. It has come to this: that a term troubles the superstitionists no more and no less than it does some of our ultra-radicals. Perhaps it is not so much the term, as the unknowable it suggests. The unknowable is the red rag which, flaunted in the eyes of pure Materialism, make it the mad bull it is. To evolve from its beastly (hate) condition, it must not try to prop itself up with big terms, but rather look at and go for facts, which abound all around and about it. It won't do to stilt themselvs up because superstition is such a sickening dose, and assume that because this is so utterly bad to take and absurd, there is nothing else to be answered. It is not exactly "scientific" to assume that when one is answered all are answered. Do you ask me, "Show me your phenomena," etc., I answer, "Show you nothing; do your own 'chewing,' or starve.

DR. GEORGE HARDCASTLE.

CINCINNATI, O., Oct., 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: These are a few remarks in reply to E. A. Chapman, Esq., who hath made free with my name in connection with LaRoy Sunderland: Sir, your special pleading in favor of Spiritualism is much more the result of preconceived ideas than any solid or genuin facts, which you, in good, true inwardness, are fully satisfied is unmistakable realities. Nothing, sir, is more easy than it is to deceive ourselvs. You must be aware that such is the case. And how, sir, do you know but what you are really deceiving your own individual self, but hav not as yet discovered your mistake? My dear sir, think of this. Can we hav thought or knowledge without the Materialistic properties to produce such powers? Did you, sir, possess thought and knowledge prior to your birth, or any faculties you now enjoy? You and every one else must answer no; and why? because no properties existed to produce such thoughts, etc. No, sir. So also will it be when dead; it doth not imply that because a person hath once lived, they are bound to ever liv. You might as well say that because a child is once born, it will be born over and over again to an unlimited extent. Sir, your theory of spirit life can never be fastened on minds which are mature in thought and guided only by positiv facts. You say, well, that the ignorant more readily believes this spiritual system than the prejudiced. Surely, what is there but what ignorance will swallow? Sir, were it not for wide-spread ignorance, no superstition could exist for a day. Sir, Spiritualism is a somewhat modern superstition, although some such folly did exist in past ages, when witchcraft, and other dark phantoms of the imagination, ruled the unlettered and priestridden multitude. Faith, sir, in a future state of existence was equally as ripe amongst savages as civilized nations; perhaps no faith is older than a faith in ghosts and their habitations. But the light of true science consigns all such false faiths to oblivion, except amongst the illiterate, who are ever ready to cling to the ridiculous and the marvelous, and follow the pious crank who hath cheek enough to deceive and gull them for pay. I think, sir, Spiritualism is much too thin for this age; it's one of those things which must go, in common with other preposterous superstitions, as Materialistic philosophy spreads its sails of truth before the breeze of growing intelligence of this age. Float on, ye gallant truthful facts that here is our birth, aud our death, our beginning and our end, which is nature's truth, whether it is believed in or not. The trouble with Mr. Chapman, and most other Spiritualists, is, they imagin they hav found a very singular mare's-nest, and they call it science. Well, that is easy enough. But no real intellectual character so regards it. The science of nature stands opposed to every iota of supernatural or Spiritual phenomena, and it can never be classified together; it must ever remain an antagonism. Sir, are you not fully persuaded that those persons who believe in an orthodox heaven and hell are deluding and deceiving themselvs? Is not all the glitter offered to believers in orthodox religion a gilt-edged lie by the cunning priesthood? You know it is. And is not your summer-land promis equally as absurd and ridiculous as the orthodox version? Both are oriental fables, and I guess you know it as well as myself, and were your mind well balanced, you would confess it. Every true Naturalist or Materialist will agree with me that a disembodied spirit is utterly impossible, and a land of spooks all nonsense, sir.

Yours fraternally, T. WINTER, Materialist.

Poetry.

The Day That is Coming.

Then a man shall work and bethink him, and rejoice in the deeds of his hand,
For yet come home in the even too faint and weary to stand.

Men in that time a'coming shall work and hav no fear
For to-morrow's lack of earning and the hunger-wolf anear.

O strange new wonderful justice! But for whom shall we gather the gain?
For ourselvs and for each of our fellows, and no hand shall labor in vain.

Then all mine and all thine shall be ours, and no more shall any man crave
For riches that serve for nothing but to fetter a friend for a slave.

And what wealth then shall be left us when none shall gather gold
To buy his friend in the market, and pinch and pine the sold?

Nay what save the lovely city, and the little house on the hill,
And the wastes and the woodland beauty, and the happy fields we till.

And the homes of ancient stories, the tombs of the mighty dead,
And the wise men seeking out marvels, and the poets teeming head.

And the painter's hand of wonder; and the marvelous fiddle-bow,
And the banded choirs of music—all those that do and know.

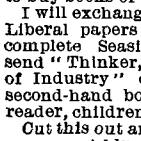
For all these shall be ours and all men's, nor shall any lack a share
Of the toil and the gain of living in the days when the world grows fair.

WM. MORRIS.

Sing with the Spirit of Liberty and Intellectual Freedom.

Liberal Leagues and organizations that are expecting Mr. Watts or Mr. Chainey to lecture for them should gather together all their members who can sing, especially the young people, and form a choir. Then they should send for a sufficient number of "Liberal Hymn-Books," and practice singing some of the stirring songs, so that both the lecturers and the audience may be inspired by the concord of sweet sounds, and all hav a good time generally. Just try it. The sentiments and emotions are no less a part of man than his reason, and they need and should hav their appropriate stimulus and nourishment. Singing supplies both. E. B. B.

Who Will Exchange with Elmina!



Friends, I have for 25 years kept a FREE circulating library for the benefit of those who are not able to buy books or papers.

I will exchange "John's Way" or copies of four Liberal papers (those named in my advts) for any complete Seaside or other cheap novel, and will send "Thinker," "Matrimonial Review," "Herald of Industry" one year for one dollar's worth of second-hand books that will interest the average reader, children or grown people.

Cut this out and save it, as it will appear but once.

Address ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.
1t44 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Freethinkers' Badge Pin.

This badge is adapted for the use of all classes of Freethinkers, "Universal Mental Liberty" being its device. The cut shows the design, but not its beauty. Solid gold, 18k, double thick, $4.00; solid gold, 10k, $1.75; silver, $1.00. Packages registered; descriptiv circular with terms to Leagues, etc., free. Remit by post-office money order or registered letter. Mention this paper.

A Munificent Offer!

GOOD UNTIL JANUARY 1, 284,

Man or Woman's Herald of Industry one year free with an 18k badge. Your choice of the two papers and a 10k badge for $2.00. Address the originator and patentee, LUCY L. CHURCHILL, 4t44 West Richfield, Summit Co., Ohio.

A GOOD WORD FOR THE DEVIL.

BIBLE MUSINGS OF AN INFIDEL.

A Poetical Pamphlet of 136 Pages. Price 50 cents.

The author has been highly praised for this production. His motto is,

"Apply your disinfectants to 'The Word,' Though God's, it should be decent or unheard;"

And he has ruthlessly dissected the "holy scriptures" in accordance therewith.

For sale at this office.

Correspondence.

A middle-aged lady of refinement, capable of filling a position of trust, wishes correspondence with a gentleman of means, hoping to obtain a good home by superintending it. None but honorable persons need reply. Address, MRS. E. WING, 1t43 (General Delivery). Minneapolis, Minn.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man Price 10 cents, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound in volumes of 525 pages each—Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V. Each volume containing 525 pages—thirty tracts or more. A Library within themselves of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price. Paper, 60 cents per volume; cloth, $1.00. If the whole set are taken—paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents each.

The Truth Seeker in bound volumes. Vol. I., 25 cents; vol. II., 50 cents; vols. III. and IV., $2 each; vols. V., VI., VII., VIII., and IX., $3 each. The whole set by express for $15.

Voltaire in Exile. Translated from the French of M. GASTINEAU by his son EDMOND GASTINEAU. Being Memoirs of the life of the great writer never before published. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil? A Series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

Which: Spiritualism or Christianity? A discussion between MOSES HULL and REV. W. F. PARKER. Paper, 50 cents: cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit-Life. Paper, 20 cents.

After Death; the Disembodiment of Man, The World of Spirit, Its Location, Extent, Appearance, Inhabitants, Customs, Sex and its uses there. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Price, $2.00.

After Dogmatic Theology, What? Materialism, or, a Spiritual Philosophy and Natural Religion. By GILES B. STEBBINS. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Agassiz and Spiritualism: Involving the Investigation of Harvard College Professors in 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM, author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Spirit Works," "Natty a Spirit," etc. This sterling work combines in itself the characteristics of memoir, essay, and review. The matter considered is of vital interest to the cause of Spiritualism, and readers cannot fail of being pleased with the treatment which Mr. PUTMAN accords to it. Price, 25 cents.

Angel of Horeb. By M. B. CRAVEN. A Critical Review of Biblical Inspiration and Divinity. Paper, 10 cents.

Angel Voices from the Spirit-World. Essays taken indiscriminately from a large amount written under angel influence. By JAMES LAWRENCE, Dial and Transcribing Medium, and Reputed Author. Cloth, pp. 400; $1.00.

An Hour With the Angels; or, A Dream of the Spirit Life. By A. BRIGHAM. Price, 50 cents.

Answers to Charges in General Belief. By Mr. and Mrs A. E. NEWTON. Price, 15 cents.

Armageddon; or, the Overthrow of Romanism and Monarchy. By S. D. BALDWIN. Price, $1.50.

Baptism of Fire. An Autobiographical Sketch. By LUCIFER. Price, 30 cents.

Battle-Ground of the Spiritual Reformation. By S. B. BRITTAN, M.D. The latest and best defense of Spiritualism—at once a text-book and a vindication. An armory from which Spiritualists will draw weapons for years. Price, $2.

Better Views of Living; or, Life According to the Doctrin, "Whatever Is Is Right. By Dr. A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.

Beyond the Breakers. A Story of the Present Day. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. Finely illustrated. This story of village life in the West is, in its narrow and interior meaning, a profoundly spiritual story, through and by whose numberless incidents, scenes, characters, and narrations is illustrated the great truth of spirit-life and communion. Cloth, $1.50.

Beyond the Veil. Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. RANDOLPH, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. H. M'Dougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. Cloth, with steel-plate portrait of P. B. Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Biblical Chronology. By M. B. CRAVEN. Contrasting the Chronological Computations of the Hebrew and Septuagint Versions from Adam to Christ; Critical Essay on the Geographical Location of the Garden of Eden. Paper, 10 cents.

Bible in the Balance. A Text Book for Investigators. The Bible weighed in the balance with history, chronology, science, literature, and itself. With illustrations. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Cloth, $1.50

Bible Marvel-Workers, And the Power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words; together with some personal traits and characteristics of prophets, apostles, and Jesus, or New Readings of "The Miracles." By ALLEN PUTNAM. Price, $1.25.

Book on Mediums; or, Guide for Mediums and Invocators. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $1.50.

Buddhism and Christianity Face to Face. By J. M. PEEBLES. A Discussion between a Buddhist priest and an English clergyman. Paper, 25 cents.

Chapters from the Bible of the Ages. Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS. Price, $1.50

Christianity Before the Time of Christ. By M. B. CRAVEN. With Quotations from the Ancient Sages and Fathers, showing the Historic Origin of Christian Worship. Paper, 25 cents.

Christ and the People. By A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.25.

Christ, the Corner-stone of Spiritualism. By J. M. PEEBLES. 10 cents.

Civil and Religious Persecutions in the State of New York. By THOMAS R. HAZARD. Paper, 10 cents.

Claims of Spiritualism. By a Medical Man. Price, 25 cents.

Robert G. Ingersoll.

Thou bold, brave man,
Who fraud can ban
And all vain superstitions probe;
Of the I sing
High priest ahd king
Sovereign, Iconoclast, Pope Bob.

Since first you spoke
Men hav awoke
And burst the fetters of old faith,
And cast aside
Glamours that hide
Eternal truths from reason's path.

Brave heretic
Which no vain trick
Of saintly sophistries can fool;
The church may scoff
But you can laugh
At all their creeds, codes, rites, and rule.

Reformer great
Who dares debate
The wrongs of old or modern laws;
For human right
'Gainst tyrant might
Still plead humanity's great cause.

Iconoclast,
Thou truly hast
Burst all the bubbles of blind faith;
And in their stead
Let reason shed
Its rays upon our onward path.

Men now rejoice
With heart and voice
Since you drowned out hell's hottest fire;
Its sulphurous flame
Is but a name
To frighten all from babe to sire.

Life's human needs
Are not old creeds
Of myths, of fables, or romance,
But honest life,
And earnest strife,
All human welfares to advance.

Thy keen wit's thrust
Has bubbles burst
That held o'er man terrorum sway;
The legends told
By prophets old
From Moses to Talmage's day.

Bold Infidel
That dares to tell
Of Moses blundering great mistakes;
Withstood attack
Of legal Black
And false premises that he makes.

Reason's High Priest
Within whose breast
Sits truth with mercy ever kind,
By might of brain
A monarch reign
O'er the grand empire of the mind.

From God's clear sky
We can espy
The cobwebs you hav swept away;
The web or woof
Of all untruth
Of what the fable histories say.

Now science light
Dispels the night
Of cruel faith and musty creed,
While thou, brave man,
In freedom's van
To happier times the nations lead.

Humanity
Is more to thee
Than saints with misty memories;
The woe and weal
That mankind feel
Are more than bald theologies.

Liv on and preach
Till mankind reach
The happy goal—the longed for prize,
Which yet shall come
To every home,
A happy earthly paradise.

With you I pray
That come it may,
When every church transformed shall be;
Fair nature's school
With science rule
In all her grand philosophy.

Thy big, warm heart
New hopes impart
To every creed-tossed, thinking man;
Thy searching mind
The truth will find,
In spite of state and church's ban.

Thy humorous words
Such fun affords
When fancy's idols feel thy knocks;
The gods of clay
All melt away
Though heathen, Jew, or orthodox.

Giv us more light,
Dispel the night
Of absolution, mummery, beads;
They only blind
And cloud the mind
With legends, miracles, and creeds.

The pastor views
His empty pews,
Howe'er so eloquent he preach;
Thought-husks so dry
Will not supply
What modern schools of of science teach.

An humble bard
Pays his regard
In simple rhyme and homely phrase;
Since first you spoke,
Thoughts that awoke
In me in boyhood's budding days.

C. G. MACKENZIE.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between MRS. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. MCDOUGALL and Mrs. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ. 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.
A. ATWOOD, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

HAV YOU READ IT?

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL.

THE DANISH CURE EXPLAINED

BY WILHELMINE D. SCHOTT,

Practitioner of the Danish Cure.

WITH PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; large type, widely spaced; extra cloth, black and gold side and back stamps; 12mo., 319 pp.; $1.50.

A VERY APPROPRIATE GIFT BOOK.

It tells you what physicians should tell their patients, but do not: How to avoid contracting "doctors' bills;" how to hav good health without taking medicins. Hints on every subject pertaining to the health of women and children.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to giv a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick. She considers Animal Electricity, used as directed in this book, a very important curativ agent.

Although written primarily for women, this book will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, Nature will remove the difficulty without other aid.

Send to THE TRUTH SEEKER for circular an tents.

Photographs of T. Winter,

The Great Western Materialist, now on sale at 265 West Eighth street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Card size, 50 cents; cabinet size, $1. Mailed to address on prepayment. 4t43

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR

OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,

STYLED

Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us [illegible] stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselves. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

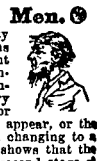
All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6 15

DR. FELLOWS



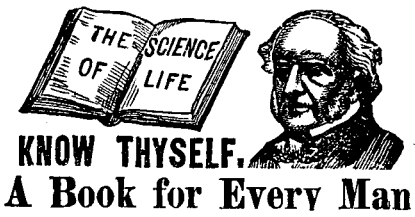
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

G. A. Lomas, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

EVERY human being is a brother or sister to us, and every effort we make to increase their happiness augments our own.—D. M. Bennett.

THE sixth commandment is, "Thou shalt not kill." A strikingly horrible commentary on this may be selected from the Old Testament records in Yahweh's urgent, oft-repeated and most atrocious commands to slaughter whole nations, sparing neither age nor sex. The penalty enacted by Yahweh for murder, and for Sabbath-breaking was the same, namely, death, with important alleviations in the case of one of these great crimes. The murderer, with whom Yahweh apparently has more sympathy than with the Sunday excursionist, might, in one shameful case at least, go scot free. Read, mark, and, if you can, inwardly digest the following: "And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall be surely punished. [We are not told how or how much.] Notwithstanding if he continue a day or two he shall not be punished; for he is his money."—W. P. Ball's Ten Commandments.

IT were better to hav no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him; for the one is unbelief, the other is contumely, and certainly superstition is the reproach of the deity. Plutarch saith well to that purpose: "Surely I had rather a great deal men should say there was no such a man at all as Plutarch than that they should say there was one Plutarch that would eat his children as soon as they were born." . . . Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation; all of which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not; but superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men.—Bacon's Essays.

THIS is well to be weighed, that boldness is ever blind; for it seeth not dangers and inconvenieuces; therefore it is ill in counsel, good in execution; so that the right use of bold persons is that they never command in chief, but be second, and under the direction of others; for in counsel it is good to see dangers, and in execution not to see them except they be very great.—Bacon's Essays.

THE question as to the general existence of religion among men is indeed, to a great extent, a matter of definition. If the mere sensation of fear and the recognition that there are probably other beings, more powerful than man, are sufficient alone to constitute a religion, then we must, I think, admit that religion is general to the human race. But when a child dreads the darkness, and shrinks from a lightless room, we never regard that as evidence of religion. Moreover, if these definitions be adopted, we cannot longer regard religion as peculiar to men. We must admit that the feeling of a dog or a horse toward its master is of the same character, and the baying of a dog to the moon is as much an act of worship as some ceremonies which hav been so described by travelers.—Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.

WHAT is right, and what is wrong? Everything is right that tends to the happiness of mankind, and everything is wrong that increases the sum of human misery. What can increase the happiness of this world more than to do away with every form of slavery, and with all war? What can increase the misery of mankind more than to increase wars and put chains upon human limbs? What is conscience? If a man were incapable of suffering, if man could not feel pain, the word "conscience" never would hav passed his lips. The man who puts himself in the place of another, whose imagination has been cultivated to the point of feeling the agonies suffered by another, is the man of conscience. But a man who justifies slavery, who justifies a god when he commands the soldier to rip open the mother and pierce with the sword of war the child unborn, is controled and dominated, not by conscience, but by a cruel and remorseless superstition.—Ingersoll.

THOUGH objections against the evidence of Christianity are most seriously to be considered, yet objections against Christianity itself are, in a great measure, frivolous; almost all objections against it, excepting those that are alleged against the particular proofs of its coming from God. I express myself with caution, lest I should be mistaken to vilify reason, which is indeed the only faculty we hav wherewith to judge concerning anything, even revelation itself; or be misunderstood to assert that a supposed revelation cannot be proved false from internal characters. For it may contain clear immoralities or contradictions [as Ingersoll, Underwood, and a cloud of witnesses assert of our Bible], and either of these would prove it false. Nor will I take upon me to affirm that nothing else can possibly render any supposed revelation incredible.—Butler's Analogy.

THE Freethinker does not refuse to study and to strive to benefit by the utterances even of a man who has been so cruelly misunderstood and maligned by men as to be named God. Putting gently but firmly upon one side all the claims to divinity on behalf of Jesus, he none the less studies his utterances with the reverence due to the thought of a remarkable man. Wherever the Freethinker finds in the Sermon on the Mount, or in other of the teachings of Jesus, advice that is unpractical, unwordly, conduciv to men's misery, and therefore evil, he rejects. Wherever he finds advice that is practical, words conduciv to man's happiness, he thankfully accepts and patiently strives to follow.—Dr. Aveling.

AN article which the poor are apt to envy in the rich is their ease. Now here they mistake the matter totally. They call inaction ease, whereas nothing is farther from it. Rest is ease. That is true, but no man can rest who has not worked. Rest is cessation from labor. It cannot, therefore, be enjoyed, or even tasted, except by those who hav known fatigue. . . . I hav heard it said that if the face of happiness can anywhere be seen, it is in summer evening of a country village; when, after the labors of the day, each man, at his door, with his children, among his neighbors, feels his frame and his heart at rest, everything about him pleased and pleasing, and a delight and complacency in his sensations far beyond what either luxury or diversion can afford. The rich want this; and they want what they must never hav.—Paley's Reasons for Contentment.

Odds and Ends.

WHAT should a man be called who takes the place of another in a brass band? A substi-toot.

A DENTIST'S appearance is apt to deceive one. The more he looks down in the mouth the better he feels.

BEER was made in Egypt 400 years B.C. But it didn't pyramid other nations until some years afterwards.

"I AIM to tell the truth." "Yes," interrupted an acquaintance, "and you are probably the worst shot in England."

THE moral side of it.—"And so, Miss Fuller, you think Miss Johnson did wrong to go on the stage in tights?" "Indeed I do. Why, her limbs are as thin as pipe-stems."

A LIBEL on Arkansas is going the rounds to the effect that a Little Rock man found a cake of soap and for days carried it as a curiosity, as nobody could tell what it was.

Now, while the winds of autumn,
Makes every leaflet squirm,
The busy little chestnut
Doth catch the early worm.

A TEXAS man has been sentenced to ninety-nine years in the penitentiary. The judge would hav made it an even hundred, but didn't want to be hard on the fellow for his first offense.

POOTS, who has heard that scientists are trying to discover how smell travels, says it isn't how smell travels that worries him so much as the way it sticks to a fellow. He says coffee doesn't seem to do it a bit of good.

"WHAT is the infinity of silence?" asked a philosopher of a married man. "I don't know; but I should think it would be what a man had to say to his wife when she caught him trying to kiss the hired girl."

LITTLE Meg came into her Sunday-school class one morning, her eyes filled with tears, and, looking up into her teacher's face, said: "Our dog's dead, and I guess the angels were real scared when they saw him coming up the path, for he's awfully cross to strangers."

I HAVEN'T heard anything from you in some time,' wrote an Arkansaw father to his son, "and I fear that you are dead." "No, I am sentenced to be hung next week. If you can spare the time, come over. There will be quite a crowd, and you may meet some of your old friends."

"DOLLARS and cents are a mighty valuable consideration in matrimony," said Mr. Blipking to his wife. "Yes, dear, I'm aware of it." "And it is seldom that it is equally divided. Hav you noticed that?" "Yes, dear; in our own case, for instance. You had all the dollars and I had all the sense."

DEFINITION of a baby: It is composed of a bald head and a pair of lungs. One of the lungs takes a rest while the other runs the shop. One of them is always on deck all of the time. The baby is a bigger man than his mother. He likes to walk around with his father at night. The father does most of the walking, and all of the swearing.

ADAM ate the apple because it looked ripe and luscious and he wanted it, and his treachery to Eve, his cowardly betrayal of a poor, defenseless woman, who had no big brothers and rich kin to stand by her, has clouded his name for many thousand years. Ancient and modern history gibbets the traitor and makes treachery the most disgraceful o all crimes.

AN Arkansaw justice of the peace sent the following letter to Lord Coleridge: "I am mighty sorry that you ain't comin' to this state, for I did 'low to hav a high ole time with you. I've got a son that can out-rassle the next man, and I ain't no slouch nuther, lemme tell yer. I've been a judge five years an hav wupped more men than a few. When I makes a rulin' in court she sticks. I ain't much in chancery business, but I'm wus than high water on a hog case."

"STAND up," said the teacher to the head boy. "Spell 'admittance,' and giv the definition." This word went from head to near the foot, all spelling the word, but could not tell the meaning of it until it reached a little boy near the foot, who had seen the circus bills posted around the village, who spelled the word admittance correctly. "What does it mean?" asked the teacher. "Admittance," said the boy, "means fifty cents, and children and niggers half price." "Go head," said the teacher, and he "went up," the proudest boy in the school.

"SHOOT?" said Adirondack Jim. "Well, I should say so. The fellow I'm speaking of was called the best shot around the lakes; but I'll giv you a yarn he told a couple o' chaps from the city who was campin' out with us. They were askin' him about shootin', and he says: 'I won a match once—not so much from shootin' as from known' about the habits of critters in general. I was in camp at Moosehead Lake, one summer, and the men got a blowin' about shootin', and after they got blown out, I says: "I'll show ye suthin' in the way of shootin'. Take one of them turkeys and tie her 1,000 feet off." And after they did, I took six bullets and asked them to mark 'em. "Now," says I, "here's a piece of paper on which is writ where you'll find them marked bullets when I git through shootin'," and with that I handed the paper, folded, to one o' the men and commenced to fire. When I was done, they looked at the paper and it read, "Stomach," and sure enough, in the turkey's stomach they found the six bullets.' How was it done? Why, jest by my mate's takin' advantage of his knowledge of nature. He knowed turkeys would swallow anythin', so he loaned light and struck the turkey's bill ever time, so that the bullet stuck there. The bird would put its head down, scratch off the bullet, look at it a minute, and then swallow it, and so it did the whole six. Yes, it was fine shootin'," the old guide concluded, puffing violently at his pipe, "but he was a fine hunter."—New York Sun.

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker,

Founded by D. M. Bennett.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It gives all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and givs everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winsted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

TERMS FOR BALANCE OF YEAR:

To all who will settle all arrearages and pay for the year 1884 in advance, we will allow the price for 1884 to be the same as for 1883—$2.50.

To all who renew for one year from next January, or thereafter, before January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To all new subscribers who send in their subscriptions previous to January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

TERMS FOR 1884:

Single subscription, - - -	$3 00
One subscription two years, -	5 00
Two new subscribers, - -	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance, -	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance, -	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance, -	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, -	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3), will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other Liberal paper. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York City.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A
MISSIONARY DOCUMENT
IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movements; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

"It is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call."—EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER.

God and the State.

BY

MICHAEL BAKOUNINE

Founder of Nihilism and Apostle of Anarchy.

WITH A PREFACE BY
CARLO CAFIERO AND ELISEE RECLUS.

Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER, (Editor of Liberty.)

52 pages, octavo. Price 15 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

HOUGHTON LIBRARY OF SCIENCE.

In paper covers. Two cents each additional for postage.

Price, 15 Cents Each Number.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and River, Ice and Glaciers. 19 Illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous Illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous Illustrations. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. / No. 12. The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S.

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Thirty-two Illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity. Sixty Illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

NOTE—The preceding numbers are 4to form—like Harpers' Franklin Square Library. The numbers which follow are 8vo., the size of Harpers' Monthly.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford Univ.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous Illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous Illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.

No. 30. / No. 31. The Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By Prof. John Tyndall.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 45. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 10, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

Religious excitement unsettled the mind of Mrs. Henry Beekman, of Deer Park, Md., and she killed herself by eating two handfuls of blue vitrol.

The revenue derived from dram-shop and wine and beer licenses in St. Louis, from Sept. 1st to Jan. 1st, under the new high license law, amounts to $251,128. This may be regarded as paying dearly for wetting the whistle.

The Salvation army in foreign lands appear to hav a very checkered career of it. It looks as if they would hav to travel with a few Krupp guns and a brigade of cavalry, in order to shoot religion into those who decline to hav it shouted into them.

The idols worshiped by the heathen of Africa and India are nearly all manufactured in England, and pay a very handsome profit. It is stated that the commercial value of the brass and cast-iron gods shipped to heathen lands far exceeds that of the Bibles, books, and tracts which reach the same destination.

The Rev. J. W. Bain, of Philadelphia, preaching in Pittsburgh, enumerated the things not to be found in heaven. "There is no darkness there, no clouds, no sickness, no graves, no funerals, no preachers——." At this point, seeing a smile rippling over the congregation, he explained: "I mean there's no preaching there."

A Jacksonville, Fla., paper says that the leaf of a Methodist hymn-book was found far up in the spiral of a conch shell, fished out of deep water. If it had been a Baptist hymn-book leaf, the fact of its being fished out of "deep water" would not hav been so remarkable, but as it is, it must be admitted that Methodism is spreading.

The recent Florida enactment forbidding licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, except upon a petition of a majority of the voters of the election district, has been considered by the Supreme Court and the constitutionality of the act affirmed. The people in any election district may hence declare absolute prohibition if they choose.

While Prince and Princess Albert of Prussia were returning from the Martin Luther celebration last week they lost their way in a fog; their carriage was overturned, and the princess's ankle was fractured. This might hav been construed as the vengeance of heaven if the royal parties had been attending any other than a religious circus.

The University of Zurich has now thirty-one women students, of whom only seven are German. Twenty are studying medicin, ten philosophy, and one chemistry. Zurich has conferred the doctor's degree on thirty women in the ten years during which the university has been open to them. Twenty-three were doctors of medicin; the remaining had the Ph. D. degree.

The Rev. Abner Eastman has worried himself about the evil results of wine-drinking and the violence and wickedness that result from the use of lager beer until he has gone crazy. The other day, at Tarlboro, N. C., as the papers state, he went on a rampage with a club, broke open the door of the public school-room and knocked down several of the pupils. Some of the larger boys resisted him and he was at length overpowered and secured.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage says, "There will be no need of Bibles in heaven, but it may be that they will hav one chained to the throne." It is all right for the reverend gentleman to compare the throne to a hotel office counter and the Bible as a city directory chained to it, but if Bob Ingersoll had made such a flippant remark it is more than likely he would hav found it rather sultry if he had strayed into the Brooklyn Tabernacle after saying it.—Peck's Sun.

Mr. Lewis Cohen, of London, has been exempted from duty on a coroner's jury because he is a lineal descendant of the High Priest Aaron. This will work a revolution in London legal proceedings; for, according to the orthodox Hebrew law, as interpreted by the old orthodox authorities, all Cohens—the word "cohen" meaning priest—and the descendants of the Levites, of whom Aaron was one, hav the right, in certain matters of ceremonial, before all others.

A riotous affair occurred at St. Stanislaus Polish Catholic church, Buffalo, N. Y., Sunday the 26th ult. About five months ago, Rev. Frank Charvanix was appointed to assist Rev. John Pitass. The former immediately began a vigorous crusade against the excessiv beer-drinking and the playing of music in the saloons adjacent to the church during service. Father Charvanix began to receive threatening letters, and some of the members on his side hearing of it, stoned one of these saloons opposit the church, completely demolishing the front and a pool table within. On Sunday one of the priests was hissed as he was about to enter the church, which was promptly resented by the congregation.

It will surprise many persons to learn from as good authority as the Rev. Emory J. Haynes that Brooklyn is not a church-going town, and that its title of the city of churches is essentially misleading. Of 150,000 young men Mr. Haynes does not believe one in ten goes to church. He givs figures showing that in a crack Brooklyn regiment not 100 men attend church, and that in banks and shops the proportion of churchgoers is still smaller. In six years, he says, 100,000 souls hav been added to the population of the city, and not ten new churches hav been built. This state of things is food for serious thought, says the Sun, not only for Brooklyn pastors, but for Christians everywhere. Is the fault with the people who don't go to church or with the churches?

By many individuals in many countries an oath is regarded very lightly. To them it is just as easy to swear as to sneeze, and in many instances easier. In the Eastern nations, among the Mohammedans, an extraordinary sanctity is attached to a solemn asseveration, and the belief in punishment hereafter to a perjurer is carried to a degree of fanaticism. When a Hindoo or a Burmese swears, he implicates not himself alone, but all his kindred to the seventh degree, all his personal acquaintances, and all his posterity. When he, through lapse of memory, perjures himself, all these are condemned to "ten kinds of punishment and five attacks of enemies." Should the perjury be of a more serious form, the "earth will open and swallow them all up." Should he knowingly make a false oath, all his friends and acquaintances will be precipitated into eighty great hells and one hundred and twenty small ones.

There livs in Pawtucket, R. I., a man whose whole existence seems to be conducted similar to a piece of machinery. His movements and transactions are always "on time;" in fact, his great hobby is time. "Be on time and save time" is his motto. At the same hour every morning he gets out of bed. A few seconds later his right boot is on, and then his left; breakfast is finished at a separate time, and he is seen at his place of business just at the stroke of 7. He is constantly enlarging on the immense quantity of time that is wasted and thrown away by every man and woman every hour. He illustrated his hobby the other day in a rather amusing and indisputable manner. A friend presented him with a very fine-looking cat. Calling the next day, he found the cat without any tail, the tail being cut off as close to the body as it could be without cutting the tail off behind the cat's ears. When asked why he had done this, he remarked: "I hav to let this cat in and out of this store a good many times a day. Now, if that cat had a long tail, don't you see I would hav to lose too much time waiting for the tail to go out and in, whereas I now hav only to wait for the cat. A tail is of no earthly use to a cat, and especially to this cat, so you will see I hav the cat just the same, and only the time in letting the cat in and out, thus saving all that time that would be lost in letting the tail in and out."

The Rev. Mr. Houghton, of horse-trotting and murder notoriety, is an upholder of suicide as well as patron of the turf and amateur detectiv. But he puts considerable common sense into the following letter to the Spirit of the Times, which criticised him for his false entry of his horse Borax: "Having been brought up among horses, and attended hundreds of races, and having read all the turf books, and glanced several times at the rules, I am not quite the novice in turf matters that you evidently suppose. I enjoy a good horse, and think there is no harm in a fair, open contest. I fail to see the difference between deacons drawing bed-quilts, by ticket, at church fairs, and Sunday-school scholars contending for gilt-edged prizes, or horses trotting for gold premiums. If there is a difference, will you please point it out, and so oblige your humble servant and friend?" Evidently the Rev. Houghton has but one aim, and that is—notoriety.

Rev. Robert M. Turner, a Methodist clergyman of Indianapolis, although he is an ultra temperance man and has been in the habit of representing that nearly all, if not all, the ills which afflict humanity come, directly or indirectly, from alcoholic beverages, has occasion, says the Journal of Freedom, to file an exception in his own case. A young widow lady, Mrs. Ellen C. Wright, of that city, has sued him recently for $5,000 damages for breach of promis, he having solemnly agreed, on certain conditions, to make her his lawful and wedded wife. The conditions being fulfilled, she demanded the redemption of his promis, made before God and the holy angels in the most solemn manner. He demurred on the ground that he was already a married man, which she found to be the fact. To pacify her he promised that as soon as he could secure a divorce from Mrs. Turner he would redeem his promis and lead her to the hymeneal altar. But alas for the frailty of human hopes, when the divorce was secured, as it was recently, he went off and married a young lady in Greenville, Ohio. Hence the suit. The Rev. Robert thinks $5,000 altogether too much to pay for the fun he has had with Mrs. Wright, and will resist the suit.

A Chicago paper says that notwithstanding all that has been said in favor of a new version of the Bible, and all the efforts that Beecher, Murray, Ingersoll, and others hav put forth to bring the common version into discredit, the old Bible holds its own, good and strong, yet; and, in proof, points to the fact that a Cincinnati church-woman knocked her husband senseless the other day with the family Bible. She belonged to the Crusaders and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and he, though not an intemperate man, was a habitual drinker, and strongly opposed both to prohibition and high license. The dispute arose upon the question whether the Bible anywhere encouraged or allowed the use of strong drink—he affirming stoutly, and she shriekingly denying. The family Bible was got, and she was told to turn to the twenty-sixth verse of the fourteenth chapter of Deuteronomy, where she read as follows: "And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatever thy soul desireth, and thou shalt eat there before the Lord thy God, and thou shalt rejoice—thou and thy household." She was discomfited, confounded, and knew not what to say, so she said nothing, but looked daggers at her belligerent lord. He was reckless enough to laugh at her, and tell her she did not know so much about the Bible as she thought she did. It was too much. The next thing he knew he knew nothing. The big Bible struck him square on the herd and sent him end over end. It was a "knock-down argument."

News of the Week.

Immense damage was done by a fire in London last Sunday.

Glasgow, Scotland, had a $1,500,000 fire last Saturday night.

Another defeat of El Mahdi, the False Prophet of Soudan, is reported from Egypt. The report is doubted.

Thirteen "soldiers" of the Salvation Army of Brooklyn hav been arrested and locked up for obstructing the sidewalk.

The question of making a second canal across the Isthmus of Suez is said to be occupying the attention of the Egyptian government.

The coinage in the United States mint during the last year was $35,936,927 of gold, and $28,835,470 of silver, of which $28,111,119 was in standard silver dollars.

Kate Townsend, who enjoyed the distinction of being the queen of the demi-monde of New Orleans, was stabbed to death by her alleged husband last Sunday.

The Rev. James Brand, a Congregational minister at Oberlin, Ohio, has been sued for slander by a druggist whom he publicly charged with keeping a rum-hole.

There hav been bloody riots recently in Londonderry and county Galway, in Ireland, caused by labor strikes and the hostility between Orangemen and Nationalists.

A disastrous tornado visited Springfield, Mo., last Monday afternoon. It is reported that five persons were killed, thirty or more injured, and one hundred houses demolished.

A man named Piotrowski has been arrested in Germany charged with intent to kill Prince Bismarck. He confesses that he was sent by the Nihilists to effect the decease of the chancellor.

There were no services held in the churches of Danville, Va., last Sunday, as the town was in a state of political riot between blacks and whites. Numerous persons were killed or wounded. The military are in possession of the town.

In the elections on Tuesday Massachusetts went Republican, defeating Butler; Pennsylvania and Minnesota are claimed by the Republicans; New Jersey and Virginia by the Democrats. Low was re-elected mayor in Brooklyn.

A convict in the Albany penitentiary, named Herman, received a telegram from Germany last Saturday informing him that he had fallen heir to $2,000,000. Herman is a notorious forger. His term of imprisonment expires next May.

The Woman Suffrage Organization of this city distributed one hundred thousand circulars throughout this state asking Republican voters to scratch Leslie W. Russell for attorney-general, and to vote for the Democratic candidate. Russell has declared himself opposed to woman suffrage.

Dynamite was exploded in the underground railways in London recently, doing great damage and injuring a number of passengers. A reward of $5,000 has been offered by the government and railway companies. The explosivs used are said to be the same kind with which an attempt was made to blow up the local government offices some time ago.

J. L. Lynch, of Utica, N. Y., was shot on the 31st ult., by E. N. Rowell, of Batavia, for improper intimacy with the latter's wife. Lynch was a well-known lawyer and Rowell a prosperous merchant. The killing is said to hav been unpremeditated. Rowell found Lynch in his wife's room in his shirt-sleeves and stocking-feet, the guilty pair being about to retire. Lynch ran down stairs and was shot in the back, dying almost instantly. A. B. Johnson, of Utica, uncle and recent law partner of Lynch, shocked by his nephew's tragic and disgraceful death, committed suicide by shooting himself on the 3d inst.

Communications.

Paul's Trial at Cesarea Before Felix.

The apostolic prisoner was escorted by 70 horsemen and 400 footmen at night from Jerusalem to Antipatris. This town was built by Herod the Great in the plain of Capharsaba about 10 B.C. (Jos. Ant. xvi, 5 § 3). It is now known as Kefr Saba, and Paul must hav known it as Capharsaba. It is 42 miles from Jerusalem, and 26 from Cesarea. The writer of Acts tells us that the 70 horsemen and 400 footmen marched 42 miles over a rough mountain road in a single night after nine o'clock! How happens it that Josephus tells us nothing about this extraordinary march?

"And the next day the horseman dismissed the footmen their associates, that they might return to the castle. And they brought him to Cesarea; and they delivered the letter to the governor, and set Paul before him. And when he read the letter he asked him of what province he was. And when he learned that he was of Cilicia he said to him: I will giv thee audience when thy accusers arrive. And he ordered him to be kept in the Pretorium of Herod" (xxiii, 32–35).

If there is any truth in this story Paul was confined in the Pretorium of Herod the Great, between 20 and 10 B.C., just as he was afterward kept in the Pretorium of Augustus Cæsar at Rome (Phil. i, 13; ii, 20; iv, 22).

"And after five days Ananias, the high priest, with the elders, and with Tertullus, the orator, went down and made communication to the governor against Paul (xxiv, 1).

Of Tertullus we know nothing, but Ananias was certainly not high priest when this alleged trial occurred. Simon IV. was high priest from 23 to 5 B.C., when, if ever, Paul was tried at Cesarea.

"And when he [Paul] had been called, Tertullus began to accuse him and say: Through thee we dwell in much tranquility; and many reforms hav come to this nation under thy administration; and we all in every place receive thy grace [Gr., accept it with all thankfulness], excellent Felix" (2, 3).

"We dwell in much tranquility, excellent Felix!" What a falsehood! Says Canon Farrar:

"The real fact was that Felix was peculiarly detested, and that though he had certainly suppressed some brigands, yet he had from the earliest times of his administration distinctly encouraged more" (St. Paul, 548).

The administration of Felix was most turbulent, as we hav already shown.

"But not to weary thee with numerous particulars, I pray thee to hear our humbleness in brief. For we hav found this man to be an assassin (Gr. loimos, a plague), and a mover of sedition among all Jews in the whole land; for he is a ringleader of the sect of the Nazareans. And he was disposed to pollute our temple. And having seized him we wished to judge him according to our law. But Lysias, the chiliarch, came, and with great violence took him out of our hands, and sent him to thee. And he commanded his accusers to come before thee. And if thou wilt interrogate him thou canst learn from him respecting all these things of which we accuse him."

The italicized part is omitted in all the early Greek codices.

"And the Jews also pleaded against him, saying that these things were so. Then the governor made signs to Paul that he should speak" (9, 10).

The prototype of Tertullus may be found in Nicolaus of Damascus; he pleaded for the Jews at the request of Herod the Great, who was present on the occasion, before Marcus Vispanius Agrippa, at Ionia, about 16 B.C. This Agrippa was a distinguished Roman commander and statesman, and one of the chief ministers of Augustus Cæsar. He was born 63 B.C., and died 12 B.C. The speech of Nicolaus is given at length by Josephus (Ant. xvi, 1, § 3); and not only does the spirit and tone of it answer in part to the pretended abstract of the speech of Tertullus, but the state of affairs in Judea, as represented by Tertullus, would agree well with that described by Nicolaus, in the reign of Herod the Great.

Nicolaus was afterward sent to Rome by Herod to plead before Augustus Cæsar in behalf of Archelaus as Herod's successor (Ant. xvi, 9, § 4; 11, § 3; xvii, 9, § 6, 7).

"And Paul answered and said: I know thee to hav been a judge of this nation for many years, and therefore I cheerfully enter upon a defense of myself."

"A judge of this nation for many years." That depends upon certain data which are very uncertain. Josephus does not always giv us exact dates; and the beginning of Felix's procuratorship is the most uncertain of all. Nor are the authorities agreed as to the end of it. The calculations differ pretty widely as follows:

Felix's Procuratorship.

A.D.	49	to	59	Rawlinson.
	51	"	58	Helvecus.
	51	"	60	Wise.
	52	"	60	Whiston; Farrar.
	53	"	60	Smith's Bib. Dic.
	53	"	55(!)	McClintock & Strong.
	60(!)	"	62	Lipp. Biog. Dic.
	—	"	62	Usher; Bib. Soc., et al.

All these authorities except Wise are biased by the necessity of maintaining the false chronology of Acts, and some of them are misled by the so-called "annals" of Poggio B. "Tacitus," first published in 1427, who givs particulars about Felix that never existed save in the brain of the astute and infamous papal secretary. Dr. Whiston quotes with gusto what pseudo Tacitus says about the wickedness of Felix, and then adds:

"But as to what Tacitus here says, that before the death [banishment] of Cumanus [which Whiston dates A.D. 52] Felix was procurator over Samaria, at the same time, does not well agree with St. Paul's own words, who would hardly hav called Samaria a Jewish nation. In short, since what [Poggio B.] Tacitus here says is about countries very remote from Rome where he lived; since what he says of two Roman procurators, the one over Galilee, the other over Samaria, at the same time, is without all example elsewhere; and since Josephus, who lived at that very time in Judea, appears to hav known nothing of this procuratorship of Felix, before the death [banishment] of Cumanus, I much suspect the story itself is nothing better than a mistake of [P. B.] Tacitus; especially when it seems not only omitted but contradicted by Josephus. . . . Possibly Felix might hav been a subordinate judge among the Jews some time before under Cumanus; but that he was in earnest a procurator of Samaria before, I do not believe. Bishop Pearson, as well as Bishop Lloyd, quotes this account, but with a doubtful clause: 'If we may believe Tacitus'" (Jos. War. ii, 12 § 8, note.)

But the latest authority (McClintock and Strong) reduces Felix's procuratorship of Judia to two years, relying on pseudo Tacitus for an extension backwards, as procurator of Samaria, in order to confirm Paul's alleged statement that Felix had been "a judge of this [Jewish] nation for many years!" It won't do; the writer of Acts makes Paul come in just after the Egyptian false prophet, who appeared near the end of Felix's administration, and certainly after A.D. 55.

And now let us return to Paul's defense before Felix.

"Because thou canst understand that there hav been but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem to worship. And they did not find me talking with any person in the temple, nor collecting any company, either in their synagogs or in the city. Nor hav they power to prove before thee the things of which they now accuse me. But this indeed I acknowledge: that in that same doctrin of which they speak (Gr., 'after the way which they call heresy,' or 'a sect') I do serve the God of my fathers, believing all the things written in the law and in the prophets. And I hav a hope in God, which they also themselvs expect—that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, both of the righteous and the wicked. And for this reason I also labor to hav always a pure conscience before God and before men. And after many years I came to the people of my own nation to impart alms and to present an offering" (11–17).

The marginal dates of Paul's five visits to Jerusalem are as follows:

1st. Returning from Damascus (ix, 26)	A.D.	37
2d. From Antioch, with alms (xi, 30)	"	44
3d. From Antioch, to convention (xv, 4)	"	52
4th. From 1st mission in Greece (xviii, 21)	"	56
5th. From 2d mission in Macedonia (xxiii, 17)	"	60

These are Archbishop Usher's dates adopted by the Bible societies. But there is a wide difference in the opinions of Biblical scholars. We hav before us a chronological table compiled from more than thirty Christian authorities, and they differ as follows:

1st visit, variously dated from	A.D.	33 to 43
2d "	"	41 to 46
3d "	"	47 to 53
4th "	"	49 to 56
5th "	"	53 to 60

And Mr. Wise puts the last visit A.D. 63. The dates are all too late by at least sixty years as to the last, and ninety-six as to the first event.

It is not easy to harmonize Paul's statement, "after many years I came . . . to impart alms and present an offering," with the accounts of his prior visits to Jerusalem. The interval between the fourth and fifth appears to hav been four years, and he certainly came with alms on his third visit if the account in Acts is true.

"And when I had purified myself these men found me in the temple; not with a throng nor with a tumult. But certain Jews who came from Asia were tumultuous, who ought with me to stand before thee and make accusation of their own affair" (18–19).

The words "were tumultuous" are omitted in the Greek codices. They make Paul's defense much more clear and rational; he throws the blame for the tumult on his Asiatic adversaries, who do not appear at the trial.

"Or let these here present say whether they found any offense in me when I stood before their assembly; except this one thing, that I cried, while standing in the midst of them, Concerning the resurrection of the dead am I this day on trial before you. And Felix, because he understood that way fully, deferred them, saying: When [Gr. Lysias] the chiliarch shall come, I will giv hearing between you. And he commanded the centurian to keep Paul at rest; and that no one of his acquaintances should be forbidden to minister to him. And after a few days, Felix and Drusilla his wife, who was a Jewess, sent and called for Paul; and they heard him concerning faith in the Messiah" (20–24).

For particulars concerning Felix and Drusilla, see Josephus (Ant. xx, 7 § 2).

"And while he was discoursing with them on righteousness and on holiness, and on the future judgment, Felix was filled with fear; and he said: For the present time go; and when I hav opportunity I will send for thee. He hoped, moreover, that a present (Gr. money) would be given him by Paul; therefore he often sent for him and conversed with him" (25–26).

The idea of expecting a bribe from Paul, the poor tent maker!

"And when two years were fulfilled to him, another governor whose name was Porcius Festus came into his place" (27).

This passage is rather blind. The Greek reads: "But when two years were fulfilled, Felix was succeeded by Festus." It is generally inferred that Paul was in custody at Cesarea two years; our Bible chronology says, from A.D. 60 to 62, but Smith's Bible Dictionary says: "It has been proved almost to a certainty that Felix was recalled from Judea and succeeded by Festus in the year 60" (Art. Paul). And the latest authority, McClintock and Strong, relying on pseudo Tacitus and interpreting the "two years" to mean the whole of Felix's term as procurator of Judea, has Felix succeeded by Festus A.D. 55.

Will it ever dawn upon the minds of these old fossils that the book of Acts is a priestly fabrication, and that what real history there is in it covers a period a hundred years prior to the life time of Felix and Festus?

Some More Facts About Prohibition.

I see that THE TRUTH SEEKER is quite liberal in printing matter which is intended to discourage and defeat the prohibitory movement. The attempt to represent this movement as one of a religious or tyrannical nature is not only absurd but ridiculous. The keepers of dram-shops are, in a majority of cases, members of the Roman Catholic church. The more bigoted and zealous in the maintenance of a belief and a religious organization one may be, the more likely he is to liv by some degrading, loathsome business like that of rum-selling. The "facts" which you copied from the Sun did not hav behind them the name of any respectable citizen of Maine. They seem to hav been thrown out for what they are worth.

I send you a few words from the pen of the Hon. Nelson Dingley, Jr., as follows:

1. The fact that our prohibitory system has stood in our statutes since 1851—with the exception of two years (1856 and 1857), when license was tried in its place—and has steadily increased in popularity until no political party dares to go before the people on the issue of its repeal, is conclusiv evidence that the great body of the people of Maine, who hav had the best opportunity to judge of its practical workings, believe that it is the most efficient legal policy ever devised as a supplement of moral agencies in dealing with the evils arising from the use and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. No one expects that it can take the place of moral agencies, but that it is simply an adjunct of them. No one claims that it can entirely extirpate the dram-shops.

Mr. Roper, the distinguished Englishman, who spent some time in Maine and other parts of this country a few years ago, stated in a public speech that he did not believe there was in the whole civilized world a state of like population, so free as ours from the evils of intemperance, or one possessed of so healthy a public sentiment in the matter of the use of liquors as a beverage.

2. To-day there is not a single distillery or brewery in Maine; in 1830 there were thirteen distilleries.

3. Prohibition has well-nigh stopped the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the rural districts of Maine. In the town of Durham, with less than 1,500 inhabitants in 1832, there were seven licensed grog-shops. To-day there is not a drop of liquor sold in the town. Readfield had in 1832 seven open bars, and sold 2,300 gallons of spirits annually; now none is sold to be used as a beverage. Minot had thirteen grog-shops; now there is not a place in it where liquor is sold as a beverage.

4. In the cities and larger villages, representing less than one-fourth of the population of Maine, the improvement is less marked than in the rural districts, although undeniably real even there. There are three reasons for this less marked improvement: the greater facilities that vice has to hide itself in crowded populations; the concentration there of a large foreign population which has come into this state within thirty years; and the resort to the city of the drinking men from the rural regions for supplies of liquor. If the cities had simply held their own under these circumstances, it would be a great gain. But they hav done more than this. Occasionally, through the failure to elect both city officials and county sheriffs friendly to prohibition, the law is neglected and open dram-shops appear. But, generally speaking, even in the cities intoxicating liquors are sold only surreptitiously, and are to be found only by those who know the signs and passwords of the liquor fraternity—and then mainly in places kept by foreigners.

5. The charge is frequently made that, so far as the cities are concerned, the traffic has been simply driven out of sight. Even if nothing more had been gained, it is something to banish the temptations of the dram-shop where only those seeking them will find them. It is also occasionally alleged that club-rooms, more dangerous than dram-shops, hav taken the place of the latter. After careful inquiry we cannot learn that club-rooms exist outside of a few cities of Maine, and even there not so extensivly as in many cities of similar size in license states.

6. It is difficult to obtain reliable statistics of the extent to which the surreptitious sale of liquors is still carried on in Maine. Some of the enemies of prohibition claim that a million and a quarter of dollars' worth is sold here annually. Allowing even this, and we hav $2 per inhabitant now, against $25 per inhabitant forty years ago, and $16 per inhabitant as the average for the Union to-day. This shows that not more than one-tenth as much liquor, proportionally, is consumed in Maine as there was forty years ago, and not more than one-eighth as much as in the country at large to-day.

Now, if you will spare me the space, I will refer to some of the statements you published, and see how they compare with Mr. Dingley's.

Your Sun correspondent says: "Men dodged in by back doors, took drinks from 'bottle-carriers,' and from fallen women; joined so-called clubs. . . It is to be found in cellars, hotel basements, cheap groggeries, club-rooms, and in houses of ill-repute." The liquor sold in this way, he says, was "wretched stuff."

In the face of his own statements about the sly and secret ways in which liquors were sold, he claims two hundred open bars in Bangor. Now, if it is true that open bars can be safely run, why these frantic and desperate modes of selling "wretched stuff" in the ways described? One or the other of these statements is not true. If it can be sold openly, it is not sold secretly; and if sold secretly, it is because it cannot be sold openly.

What the Sun correspondent referred to was undoubtedly the same thing that all the friends of prohibition readily admit—that there is some violation of the law, just as there is of every other law. It will also appear reasonable that such violations should occur when we reflect upon the extended coast of Maine, which cannot be guarded, and of the neighboring states where liquor may be manufactured and sent across the line. The only question worth a moment's notice is this: Which restrains the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage most effectivly—free-rum license, or prohibition? I think the history of Maine for thirty years givs a sufficient answer to this question. LIBERTA.

The Doubts of a Doubter.

So much discussion as is going on over the subject of immortality givs me an irrepressible desire to cooperate. I will state a few facts concerning this grave question if you will furnish the space in your patient bearer of all opinions. I don't believe in immortality. I don't say decidedly that death ends all, but I do say that the first proof or sound argument in favor of immortality is yet to come. When we consider that we remember absolutely nothing that took place before we were born, it does not seem reasonable to expect to feel or to know any more after we hav shuffled the coil that gave us the only consciousness we hav ever had. I believe nothing will be lost that composes us, but there can be no identity after death; we hardly possess that in full now. A man is not, of himself, a living being. His body is only one of two conditions of life. The air we breath is the other, and that we all partake of in common.

Instantly put a man where he will hav no air to breathe, and just as instantly you will hav, on one side, a dead mass of material, and on the other side you hav air, which we do not know to hav a conscious existence. It is all very well for those who are not weaned of all desires to rock themselvs through life in the delusion of immortality, but when they say, as does Mrs. Heddon, in a late issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that the desire for immortality is a natural instinct and is general, they say a falsehood, which they hav not even the right to treat of. Our feelings and desires are gauged by our knowledge, chiefly. How can one person know the desires of another of entirely different acquirements? To know it, he must possess the same knowledge, no more nor no less, and then he would not only know but would also feel them. I hav no desire for an eternal existence. Not only do I submit to the inevitable, but I feel no craving for immortality, neither do I see anything horrid in eternal rest.

I would hardly say with Mr. Otto Wettstein that I would dread an eternal existence, but I must confess that the possibility of everlasting happiness, without interruption, or any of the disagreeable feelings inherent to monotony, is beyond my comprehension.

As to what "state of mind" givs the most happiness, I ought to be a pretty fair witness. I started from a fervent Roman Catholic; hav emerged into the different creeds of Protestantism; passed through all stages of unbelief; hav not forced my way, but kept studying and only allowed nature to take its course with a perfect freedom of thought; hav halted awhile in Spiritualism—long enough to consider it to my satisfaction—and I am now prepared to swear by Saint Bennett, on the sacred volume of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that, in my present state of mind, the cold death-ends-all Materialism, I am the happiest that I hav ever been.

I hav no fear of the over-heated Christian winter quarters; am not jealous of parrot's beaks, nor of the angels wings; neither do I yearn for the acquaintance of, or desire any personal intercourse with, dead saints of either gender. I would like (at least for a time) a nice little soul, light enough to float over land and water, and see what is going on; but if that fails me, as I fear very much it will, I can sleep in complete peace in Mother Earth's bosom. It is nothing bad after one gets used to it. The only painful part of the process is the transit from this to that, and whether I only go to the cold grave sod, or clear through to kingdom come, the pangs of death are the same.

My best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER, which I hav read from its first issue so constantly that I feel as if I were part owner of it. CHAS. LAPERCHE.

Alexandria, Ont.

Land Thieves.

I want space to ask every one of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers to turn to page 683 of the issue of October 27th, and read the letter of J. Allen Evans, about the land that our thieves in Congress hav stolen from its natural owners, and are selling to foreign lords, on which the latter are establishing the same system of landlordism and serfdom that has pauperized Ireland and made it necessary for England to rob India, Africa, and other weaker nations to support her royal family and other drones, falsely called noblemen; and then think what will be the condition of your children, or their children, after all of what is falsely called government land has passed into the hands of these rich Shylocks of this and foreign countries. That letter is worth more to coming generations, if the present generation will read it and receive its warnings, and then perform their duty to their posterity, than a hundred years' subscription to each family.

For forty years I hav been trying to arouse the people of this nation to a sense of this, the greatest and surest danger that can ever come upon our beloved country. Nature has spread out the earth for the use of all; from it we must draw our support, or starve and die. Land is just as necessary to us as sunlight, air, and water; and every man has just as good a right to as much land as he and his own family can cultivate as he has to life itself—and that, too, without paying any man or government for it. But our government, or more properly robberment, has robbed the people of this natural right to free land, and is selling it—five, ten, twenty, fifty, and seventy thousand acres in a lot—to these rich foreign Shylocks, on which the posterity of these same Congressmen will hav to work for starvation wages, their children growing up in ignorance, to hav even a harder lot, and starve and die in every year of short crops, as they hav many times in Ireland. One man in the West has so much land that his half-paid and half-starved, landless slaves plow a furrow seventeen miles long! Another has seventy thousand acres worked by ragged, hungry, half-paid slaves, living in miserable hovels on his broad domain. Foreign capitalists hav just bought a tract of timber-land in southeastern Kansas, said to contain 160,000,000 feet of lumber, and the papers that profess to be the guardians of our rights tell of it as a mere matter of news, without one word of reproof of our government for this great robbery and waste. The men who cut and manufacture this lumber will work at starvation wages, the lumber will be carried out of the country and sold, and its value and half the toil of the laborers will go into foreign pockets, to be spent in luxury and dissipation, while they ship their paupers to our shores every year for our workers to feed. No foreigner should ever own an inch of land here, unless he settles on and cultivates it. Our Washington robbers hav given to various railroads one hundred and eighty millions (180,000,000) of square acres, or two hundred and eighty thousand (280,000) square miles—a tract that would make more than thirty-four states like Vermont, or as large as Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, and Rhode Island; and, leaving out Maine, it is more than eight times as large as the other five states. It is nearly six times as large as the great state of New York. Better to giv the landless people this land to settle on, without railroads, than to giv them railroads without land.

Most of the people who are working to pay the salaries of members of Congress and other government expenses do not even know what their servants that they hav sent to Congress to look after their interests are doing with this land, which belongs to them and their children; and not one paper in a thousand dares to tell them, for fear of offending the railroad kings, money lords, and other monopolists. I hav before me a list of many more hundreds of millions of acres bought by about a dozen individuals, among them English and French noblemen, falsely so-called, on which they are breeding pauperism and starvation.

Now, there is a method by which all this robbery may be stopped, and every acre of this land restored to its rightful owners—those who now and hereafter may want it to cultivate. This remedy is in the hands of the working classes, and very few of them know it. If this article finds a place in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as I hope it will, and creates an interest among landless workers, let them write at once and notify me, and they shall hav a remedy that will save their posterity from the landless, homeless rags and starvation of the Irish tenants. J. HACKER.

Berlin, N. J., Oct. 27, 1883.

Elmina and the Monument.

"I received an appeal the other day from Mr. Hacker. I asked my father if he thought I had better send him a dollar; but, being as he didn't encourage me, and as I got to thinking about that 1,000 odd dollars Infidels are almost throwing away on Bennett's monument, I kept my dollar. What's the use talking about humanity, love, etc., etc., with friends needy and starving? I would feel too ashamed to raise my pen in preaching humanity if I was an Infidel. The merest mention of poverty-stricken writers being in want ought to fill their pockets. T. B. L."

Thus writes a Christian correspondent; and as many others, and even professed Liberals, also look upon the monument as a piece of useless expense, I would like to say to all such ones, "we do not liv by bread alone." We do not liv to merely eat, drink, and sleep. We hav ideas, opinions, and tastes aside from the mere fact of existence. We are doing a great work for Liberalism in having a monument to an Infidel erected in the cemetery where heretofore Godites and Christians alone hav had their myths inscribed, honored, and perpetuated. We who so loved our leader, our guide, and our friend, want to hav him sleep in beautiful quiet among the dreamless ones who are there resting, and we intend him to be as truly honored, reverenced, and memorialized as the very best of them; for we know not one there was more true, more honest, or more good than our brave and grand hero, D. M. Bennett. If we were only as able in purse as we are loyal in heart to our dead truth seeker, his monument should be a $100,000 one, inscribed with his strong, terse, and valuable sayings, in lettters that should outlast the myths these sayings hav done so much to destroy.

It is a poor excuse for not helping an aged Liberal, because Liberals are raising a monument to one of their noblest editors and publishers. As well might each member of our whole nation refuse to pay their poor taxes because we hav national monuments erected to national heroes. Methinks those who make such paltry excuses for tight purse-strings are more nice than wise; more theoretical than practical. I wonder if "T. B. L." ever indulges in anything that is esthetical or luxurious. Is he so plain and practical and economical that he spends nothing for show or beauty? Would he bury his dead and hav no stone to mark the spot where they lie. I think it is well to hav as little expense as possible attendant on the funerals of the general dead; but where a man or woman represents a great idea or a great cause, we honor the cause in honoring the man.

I doubt if a single contributor to the monument has sent Mr. Hacker one penny the less because of the fund. In fact, the more we practice giving in a good cause the more generous we grow, and probably he is receiving more help to-day because of the genuin feeling of fraternity this monument building is fostering among us, Mr. "T. B. L." to the contrary notwithstanding.

Since writing the above I hav received THE TRUTH SEEKER for October 27th, and to Janet Spenser, on page 681, I would say: Neglect not the lesser good for the greater. Our monument is only taking a few scattered dollars from here and there, and will not giv the Bennett Hall or Bennett Home for Helpless Liberals one room the less, should either ever become a reality, which I truly hope may be. And if it does result in a home, I trust it may be a real home, which few of our benevolent institutions actually are. I know of "old ladies' homes," where aged widows dare not be seen reading an Infidel book or paper, and are compelled to listen to blasphemous prayers from old hypocrits who are not fit to "tie the latchets of their shoes." I know "homes" where they hav no privacy, no pure air, free from the sight and sound of sickness, groans, and suffering; homes where they must eat stale food, in company with idiots, insane people, and other horrors. Is it, then, a wonder that Mr. Hacker, Mrs. Tuttle, and Mr. Broom prefer the shelter of their own humble roofs to the "dignity" of such benevolence? I know of soldiers' homes where no woman ever dwells, and men grow sad, lonely, and despairing, longing as only sick, feeble, and desolate men can long, for woman's step and woman's sympathy. Why, Hacker was offered a "home" and all the comforts (physical) of life among the Shakers, if he would separate from his wife!

Is it a wonder, then, that I ask you all for help for our brave pioneers, that they may retain their liberty and their own humble homes, rather than accept the "dignified' aid of the charity that puts them into "handsome institutions" where home is a by-word and a mockery? I doubt if there would be one hungry, cold, and starving man the less if every monument were to-day converted into bread for the hungry. It would only leave so much more grain for the distiller of liquid poison.

No, no, friends; it is not the few monuments we erect in honor of our grand and noble workers for humanity that are robbing the poor. It is rum, tobacco, and land monopoly! Kill these three giants, and there will be plenty for the hungry, the cold, and the homeless. Read Bennett's "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and you will see that he approved of monuments and took a special pride in visiting them, while he mentions their absence in the the Holy Land as an evidence of the want of intelligence and culture among the inhabitants. It is not by decrying works of art and precious memorials to our honored dead that we shall most benefit the living; but by teaching good morals, hygienic laws, and scientific truths. All that elevates, refines, and cultivates helps to abolish destitution, suffering, and penury. So I say, Success to the monument, and all honor to its generous builders.

> " All over bouquets of roses,
> O Death, I cover you over with roses and early lilies,
> But mostly and now the lilac that blooms the first,
> Copious I break, I break the sprigs from the bushes; with loaded arms I come . . . . . .
> I grave a monumental line before I go, amid these songs, and set a tombstone here. —Leaves of Grass.

Snowville, Oct. 29. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Anarchy and Pantarchy, Again.

I am, I believe, authorized, notwithstanding Mr. Tucker's disclaimer in his reply to me, in holding the school he represents to his statement of its character and platform, in his reply to Mr. Haskell, and to the implications of the term Anarchy. Of Mr. Tucker's own somewhat private opinions about the essential harmony of Anarchy (as he ulteriorly means it) and Pantarchy, I was, as he says, fully aware; and the object of my critique on him was to call out from him a distinct avowal of what otherwise he was (for doubtless sufficiently good reasons, from his point of view) seemingly, and indeed, distinctly, in terms, contradicting. Just what I fished for I caught. Mr. Tucker should not be therefore "too previous" in boasting of his skill in refusing to nibble where hooks are concealed in the bait.

In one breath Mr. Tucker says: "Either liberty or authority must guide you wholly," etc. "You cannot serve two masters."

To which I replied that: Both liberty and authority must guide us; and that we can, do, and must serve two masters from the cradle to the grave. And in the next breath Mr. Tucker says: That he means all that I do, and just what I do; though the statements were precisely opposit; and reproaches me with the fact that I knew that that was what he meant. Now, if my object were to put Mr. Tucker in a bad logical position before your readers, or to embarrass him in any degree, this certainly might be my opportunity; but I hav no such object in view. I hav quite another purpose. I do know, as Mr. Tucker says, that when he proclaims liberty the most loudly as the one thing needful, he does not in any manner mean to impugn anything, as a principle, which I mean by Authority or Order. The whole complex truth is in his mind, and even in his language, implicity but not explicitly; and if it is there, as he thinks, more clearly than it is in my mind, why, so much the better. We can hardly hav too much clearness among us; and it is all in the family.

But what I wanted, for my purpose, was that this unrepresented side of the complex truth should be explicitly affirmed by Mr. Tucker as it now is; and has been, perhaps, at other times, incidentally. I also admit, with pleasure, that Mr. Tucker's use of the word archy is as well authorized, historically, as mine; though not so primitiv, logical, and comprehensiv—for his purposes better, for my purposes not so good, as mine. I also, again, admit that for a career of radical political agitation, in the immediate assault of the old and existing institutions of society, Anarchy is a good, perhaps the very best, rallying cry that could be devised. In order to convince, it is requisit to arouse; and in order to arouse, it is often good generalship, in the war of opinion, to shock. If campaigning as the paladin of political revolution, in behalf of liberty, and all that undefined "something," as John Swinton calls it, which shall follow in its wake, is the chosen career of Mr. Tucker, as it seems for the present to be, I hav no criticism on him whatsoever, and no quarrel with him on that subject; but everything, on the contrary, in the way of admiration, sympathy, commendation, and incidental cooperation. He is, probably, striking deeper and preparing to compass more power over the public mind than any agitator whosoever, except, perhaps, one or two others of the same radical school.

My own special field of labor, at this period of my life, is different, and my present object is to discriminate the two, and to show, while Anarchism is doing its own proper work, that, scientifically and entically viewed, it is not and cannot be the ultimate form of Social Structure, except as it shall be supplemented by the acceptance and emphasis, in turn, of Authority accepted in Freedom. In other words, Anarchy is functionating, mainly, in the immediate and pressing office of removing obstructions and preparing materials for the Higher Integration; while Pantarchy is mainly engaged in looking beyond, and in solving, theoretically, and, in a small way, practically, the architecture of the new temple of humanity; assuming the obstacles to hav been removed, and the materials to hav been, in a first crude way, prepared in the School of Anarchy. They must, it is true, then undergo their final preparation in the Training-Schools of the Pantarchy itself.

Now, my only regret, which is not a very strong one (as I so profoundly appreciate what he is now doing), but which comes over me at times, is, that Mr. Tucker, really seeing with a clearness that is exceptional, the ulterior and greater work, should feel bound to the lower and preliminary work to the neglect of this other; that the competent professor of the Higher Mathematics should deem it his duty to spend his life is teaching the primary classes in the school. I sometimes feel like quoting scripture, too, and saying to him, "Let the dead bury their dead," which I take to mean, "Let those do the lower branches of the labor of thought and love, who are competent to that, but who are dead to the perception of the higher truth." In other words, Let men devote themselvs to that which is the highest truth they know. For my own part, I believe that if Mr. Tucker should at any time, under conviction, graduate into the higher constructiv work of social science, that the vacuum he would leave by deserting his present labor would be immediately filled by new men coming up from a lower stratum. But if he does not see it so, as I hav said, I hav no quarrel with him, and not the slightest purpose of embarrassing or worrying him. Then, again, now, I should be afraid; since that terrible threat about "a stunner between the eyes"—dynamite, or something. I am timid about mule-kicks, and thunder, and giantpowder, and rash young men who strike out from the shoulder, or thrash round; and such things; which are liable to jar on the nerves unpleasantly.

On the other hand, he may dismiss at once and forever all fear of my being led astray, from any greenness, in my desire for reconciliation or adherents. I hav only a philosophic and distant interest in any effort at unity which is not thoroughly based on precisely the doctrin of Individuality which Mr. Tucker means and is engaged in promulgating. But, philosophically, I detect the same principle, that of authority, as being the same in slave-holding, in the worst political tyranny, and in the truest and most harmonious order. The modes of its realization are diverse; and the first crude forms are so terrible in their faultiness that we cannot but devote ourselvs to overthrowing them; but the principle will survive. The agitator for this overthrow is one kind of reformer, the Integral Social Scientist is another kind. Both are indispensable, and both may be united in the same man; but then he has generally to divide his life into successiv stages.

For myself, my present purposes in this behalf are:

I. The formulation, rigorously and exhaustivly, of the fundamental truths of Social Science.

II. The rallying into a co-operativ unity of the as yet small handful of graduates out of the school of mere Individualism or Anarchy.

III. Preparing the way, by preliminary plans and sketches, and by small modelic experiments, for the Higher Integration of Humanity upon the basis of science.

From these considerations Pantarchy differentiates at once into several applications, four of which occurring to me now may be stated thus:

1. Pantarchy as the antithet of Anarchy, as has been variously illustrated in this discussion.

2. Pantarchy as a proposed loose association among the various branches of this great reformatory movement, Union Reform, uniting the different reformatory bodies and sects, somewhat as the Christian Alliance unites the different ecclesiastical Christian sects, in respect to such matters as they can agree upon and co-operate in, despite their differences. If this plan were accepted and acted on, the Pantarchy would be for all the branches of reform about what the Clearing House is to the banks—a mutual exchange and accommodation center, without other authority than should come from its power to serve.

3. Pantarchy is applied to and describes the mere handful of post-graduate Individualists who are at the same time Universologists, and who aspire to resolve themselvs into a Brotherhood of the Higher Life; or, if that cannot be done, to submit to the necessary schooling and disciplin to fit them ultimately for it.

4. Pantarchy is employed to denote the Higher Integration or ultimate type and form of Human Society—the Heaven of the Future on Earth—as ideally sketched on the Basis of Universological Sociology.

Still other phases of the idea exist, but these will suffice. STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Mrs. Richmond's Lecture.

A fair-sized audience gathered in Chickering Hall on Sunday evening to listen to a lecture by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. Her subject was, "A Voice from Beyond the Gates." Mrs. Richmond belongs to that class best known, perhaps, by the term Transcendental Spiritualists. To those who agree with her, her lecture was all that could be desired. No one, I think, who listens to her can doubt for a moment that she is inspired; but grant that her inspiration is, as a Scotch divine once said, from "God's angels," and the question naturally arises, why do so many and opposing doctrins come from the same source? Grant her inspiration, and we must grant others as well, who teach, as we said, entirely opposit theories. Andrew Jackson Davis and his school hold that spirit is the highest form of matter. Mrs. Richmond holds that spirit is the primal force—the spirit world is the world of causes, and this world the world of effects.

The lesson to us is that we must still use our own reason in judging of so-called spirit-teaching, and use it just as rigorously as we do in regard to mundane affairs—in fact, that each one's own reason must still be the final arbiter.

Next Sunday evening Mrs. Richmond is to speak on "The Power or Influence of Spiritualism in Relation to Materialism and Liberalism." I bespeak for her a good audience. A. C. M.

The Liberal Club.

Female beauty and cognate themes were discussed by the speakers of the Manhattan Liberal Club at the last meeting of that body, and it must be said that they acquitted themselvs like connoisseurs. The subject was brought upon the platform by Dr. Dio Lewis in a lecture on "Beautiful Women." The doctor said there was no question but that American women, and especially American girls, were the most beautiful in the world. Nevertheless they hav not attained the highest type of beauty. They lack backbone and lungs. The primary cause of this is the fact that they do not adequately develop their muscles. They need more exercise. Next, their dress is abominable. Beginning at the top, the doctor reviewed, so to speak, the wearing apparel of the popular female, in regard to which he displayed evidences of rare research. The wad of material formerly worn on the crown and back of the head destroyed the capillary glands and made the hair fall out. Proceeding lower, the doctor discovered cotton. This padding destroyed other resources, and robbed the offspring of its natural sustenance. Next came an infernal machine worked by cords that compressed and displaced the vital organs of the wearer, and gave the doctors half their income. The lower limbs—technically alluded to by Dr. Lewis as the "legs"—were not sufficiently protected from the cold. They should be clothed in warm trousers. Again, below an imaginary joint, denominated the "knee," the "leg" was ligatured by an instrument of torture familiar to science under the name of the "garter," which was often drawn so tight as to leave a deep mark when removed. This prevents the circulation of the blood to the extremities, and is the cause of the phenomenon known as cold feet. This ligature sometimes occurs above the alleged knee. Then the walk of a woman was all wrong. The correct way to walk was illustrated by the doctor, the chairman leaving the platform and taking a seat in the audience to afford room for the experiment. The principal point made was that in walking the chin should be kept close to the neck. If the doctor were to write a book on walking it would contain but four words: "Chin close to neck." Following these directions, no one could walk wrong. The same rule held good in elocution. With the chin close to the neck, no one could talk wrong. The hands should swing by the side, making walking a means of exercise for the whole body. Fashionable women, however, thrust the chin forward and rest their hands on the stomach when walking. This imparts to the body the wiggling motion or "switch" so frequently remarked, and calls the exclamation, "How she wiggles!" from the male observer. The doctor added that women wore their shoes too narrow, and that cleaning the teeth would preserve them from decay; as in India, where the teeth are universally cleaned after each meal, decayed teeth are unknown. No woman could be beautiful without good teeth. With these, and an erect bearing, every woman would be handsome, regardless of the length of her nose.

Lawyer Seering arose to corroborate some portions of the speaker's discourse, and to giv his ideas as to how a nice girl would look when she wore nothing but a smile. He inferred from instances in nature and in high art, like the Indian women and the Venus de Medici and the Venus de Milo, that a woman's waist was naturally larger in proportion to her shoulders than a man's, as Dr. Lewis had held.

Mr. Langerfelt maintained that a poor girl could not afford to be out of fashion. Her end and aim in life was to secure a husband. If she departed from the style as regards the size of her waist and shoes, the men would guy and eschew her. She must be afforded the means to be independent of man's support before she can inaugurate a new fashion.

Mr. Andrews further elaborated the ideas of the previous speaker. Independence of thought on matters in general must precede or accompany independence of action in matters of dress. Fashion is a mighty power, and must be taken into consideration and intelligently guided. Sociology and physiology should be studied together, and each do its part in modeling the fashion.

Dr. Lambert started to relate an anecdote to illustrate the fact that cleaning the teeth alone is not adequate to their perfect preservation. This anecdote was divided and sub-divided, bisected and trisected, and interpolated and parenthesized by so many other pleasing ones that it was not ended when ten minutes had elapsed, and he was granted five minutes more. He drew the inference that the cause of de-cayed teeth is constitutional and hereditary, and in many cases lies hundreds of years back. Dr. Lambert said further that the latest scientific investigation went to show that the female stocking was not now, except in sundry isolated instances, supported by the "garter." That ligature had been superseded by a kind of suspender which attached itself to the top of the stocking. From what source this suspender received its own support science was still at fault.

Dr. Weeks, who is a practical and efficient dentist, recurred to his experience with a Hindoo lady whose teeth he had been called upon to fill. She was about twenty-five years of age, and had been in this country but eighteen months. It was not possible that the decay could hav begun here. Therefore perfect teeth were not universal in India. Bony people were apt to hav good teeth, and those of a lymphatic temperament were not.

Dr. Lewis replied to his critics with considerable warmth. Mr. Langerfelt's proposition was the most absurd thing he had heard in thirty years of discussion on the subject. Mr. Andrews's mention of individuality in this connection was a hobby run to seed, and Dr. Lambert's remarks were criticisms run to seed. If it was desired to differ with him for the sake of a quarrel, he should prefer to settle it with the gloves. He had been a teacher of the manly art, and, although now over sixty years of age, he felt confident he could knock out any man in the house. An expression on the face of the chairman, who is a good man and weighs two hundred, indicated that there was a difference of opinion on that point, but nobody accepted the challenge. Dr. Lewis was evidently disappointed to find that his audience knew so much. He must also be disappointed to realize that, despite his thirty years of agitation, there is so little improvement in female fashions as regards their relation to health. The explanation may rest in the fact that he takes men like John L. Sullivan as the highest type of manhood, instead of the intellectual giants of the race, like, for instance, Mr. Shook (who was not present). He is himself, perhaps, as well preserved, physically, at sixty, as any man in the world. He complains bitterly, and justly, of the way in which human bodies are warped and neglected, but takes little concern for the mind, of which they may be called the outward expression, and by which they are controled. Mr. Wakeman hinted at this by inviting the doctor to attend the club on the evening of the 9th and hear Mr. S. P. Putnam. He might then learn why it was that his labors had thus far been practically in vain.

The Boston Liberal Club.

The debate on Sunday last brought together as large an audience as has greeted any of the club's efforts to provide amusement for its patrons. The members and their friends were evidently much interested in the way in which the club should consider and determin the respectiv merits of the candidates for the chief executiv of the state. As the election comes off on Tuesday, it is important that this report should be in the hands of your readers as soon as possible, or perchance we may find that in spite of all our efforts the wrong man has been elected. Possibly under the pressure of so weighty a consideration, you may be induced to bring out your paper a few days earlier than the regular time. The result in New York, or, indeed, in any state except Massachusetts, is of no importance at all compared with the question whether Benjamin F. Butler is "to be or not to be"—whether his political life is to be brought to an untimely end, or whether he is yet to worry his opponents with dreams of his future greatness.

Mr. P. W. Cherrington was of opinion that such a calamity as the political extinction of the present governor was not likely soon to take place. He had made so good a record while in the executiv chair that the people were determined to giv him another trial. As to his having any designs upon the presidency, that was absurd, because he had sense enough to know that there was not the slightest prospect of any Eastern man's success in that direction. He had shown his good sense by coming out of the Republican party. That party had performed its mission and become corrupt, and all the disfavor with them of Gov. Butler arose from the fact that he had been successful in laying bare that corruption.

Mr. John S. Verity did not agree with the conclusions of his predecessor. Ever since he had been able to think he had been inconsistent in his actions, and therefore, as he supported Gen. Butler last year, he would at the next election oppose him. Either party was bad enough, but the Demoncratic he found was the worst, and would never be regarded as the conservator of the people's rights, either political, social, or religious.

Mr. A. Schell, of Albany, being present, was invited to speak, and disclosed a New York republican who was favorable to the election of Butler. He was a man of brains who had shown himself capable in whatever office he had filled, and especially so in his capacity as a military commander. He would not assume to instruct so intelligent an audience in the politics of its own state, but for his own part he preferred a man of brains for a leader in any undertaking in which he was interested.

Mr. E. B. G. Haggan did not think that brains were half so necessary as a high development of the moral faculty, and in this General Butler was utterly deficient. He was in fact a moral idiot. What Barnum was to business, Joe Cook to science, Talmage to theology, that was Butler to politics. There was but little known of Robinson, but he was certainly honest as well as modest. There was nothing whatever known against him.

Dr. Huntoon was willing to admit that nothing was known against Robinson, because although he had served his state for some time in Congress, nothing whatever was known about him, either good or bad.

Mr. Pickett was very much excited because people had said that Butler had discovered the tanning of human hides belonging to the former inmates of Tewksbury Almshouse. The Republican party had nothing to do with that, but it was now in the tanning business, and on Tuesday evening Butler would find his own hide so thoroughly tanned that he would never want to submit it a second time to the operation.

Mr. Herbert D. Allen, the secretary, was of opinion that Butler was a good man and ought to be re-elected, because he had removed an insurance commissioner who had once opposed himself to the fruition of a scheme of which he (the secretary) had been an advocate.

Mr. Horace Seaver thought that Mr. Robinson and his adherents had converted the machine into a huge sewer, from which flowed copious draughts of Billingsgate upon the devoted head of Butler, who excelled as a statesman, a lawyer, a soldier, a patriot, and, above all, a friend of the people. He exemplified the three qualifications of Jefferson for an office of trust. He was honest, capable, and a friend of the Constitution, and Massachusetts would be honoring herself by re-electing him.

Prof. Wetherell thought that the cry that Butler had done so little while in office was unreasonable, because his hands had been tied by an adverse council and legislature. Re-elect him, and giv him as his coadjutors men who would second his efforts, and good would be done.

The Robinson advocates not being in abundance, Mr. Verity again took the floor, and surprised the audience by maintaining the same views that he had expressed in his former speech.

The debate was then closed by Mr. Cherrington, who passed in review the history of the Republican party, with the inference that that showed it to be no longer worthy of confidence.

MR. VERITY SENDS A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your paper of November 3d one of your Boston correspondents, in giving his report of the Boston Liberal Club, says that John S. Verity said that he would hav nothing whatever to do with the band of fanatics who sailed under the banner of Anarchy; that he did not believe in any form of government, consequently the Anarchists' idea was sheer nonsense, etc. I want to deny this report of my language. I said nothing at all about the Anarchists, one way or another. I believe that your correspondent has wilfully misrepresented my language at that meeting. Why he has done so I do not know; perhaps he does. I know that I often say things that may not seem very wise; but that I should be the fool your correspondent there represents me to be, I most emphatically deny.

Yours for truth and veracity, John S. Verity.

The Ethical Society.

Felix Adler resumed his lectures at Chickering Hall last Sunday. Ill health had compelled him to take an extra long vacation. His reappearance was hailed with great cordiality by the large audience. His topic was the religious needs of the people, and he devoted an hour to the consideration of the old religions in comparison with the new religion of morality which he considers certain is to supersede supernatural manifestations of the religious feeling. The most remarkable feature of the old religions, just at present, he thought, was their tenacity of purpose, and this had recently been illustrated by two remarkable occurrences in this country. It would be well, said Professor Adler, if the Provincial Council of the Roman Catholic church, recently held in this city, would not soon be forgotten. The time was when the Roman Catholic church built no cathedrals, when it sought the shelter of obscurity; now it is as a city on a mountain top. It invites the observation of all eyes; it points to the millions in its ranks and to the cohorts of its priesthood, thousands in number. Thus as from a coign of vantage it throws down the gauntlet to the spirit of this age. It condemns the system of education which is the corner-stone of our modern civilization. It repudiates all that does not accord with its own doctrins.

In Protestantism, though in a less degree, there is the same inflexibility, and the convention of the Protestant church which has just ended is the second event I would speak of as exemplifying the tenacity of the old creeds. What does it decree? That the dogma of the trinity shall be taught, not as any airy generality, but as an essential truth. It places the absolute infallibility of the Bible as a principle second in importance to that of the triune God.

Why, then, do the old churches now spring from the darkness and take their places again in the old seats of power? What explains to us the fact that in this city, where there are only 90,000 Protestant church-members, the minority—at least in intellect—should rule, should govern opinion? The success of the conservativ churches comes, not from their strength, but from our weakness. Liberalism has heretofore waged almost entirely a negativ warfare; it has failed to appreciate the religious need of men; it has thought only of the intellect, and has given books of popular science for religious instruction. Books of popular science!—as if popular science could take the place of religious feeling. The religious needs of human nature must be satisfied, and men will turn sooner or later to those who satisfy their cravings. This is the reason why a great reaction to the old religions is to be feared, and I believe that such a tendency already exists, and that this provincial council and this conventien are the signs of it.

Professor Adler then advocated a new religion grounded on morality. This, he said, might be considered by some too cold, too abstract, an objectiv point for the creation of religious enthusiasm, but that could only be the idea of those who took a low view of morality. The lecturer discussed the several ethical standards—those of law, or public opinion and of personal feeling and judgment. This last was the true one, and it might be made the foundation of an exalted creed. As for the rest, this internal consciousness of right was founded on the sense of unity in nature, of the one law underlying all the disjointed facts of the universe, and in the contemplation of that law and in obedience to its behests would yet be found the material for a religion that would conquer all those of older days.

Lectures and Meetings.

Mrs. Lake spoke at Greene and Waverly, Iowa, during October. In November she will speak at Waverly, Ossian, and Vinton; and for the Liberal Society of Ottumwa, Iowa, during the Sundays of December. Address her during November, at Vinton, Iowa.

J. E. Remsburg goes now to Texas. He will speak at Montague, that state, Nov. 17th and 18th; at Dallas, on the 20th; at Norse, the 21st, 22d, and 23d; at Temple, on the 24th and 25th; at Waco, the 26th. We hope Mr. Remsburg will be kept busy, for he is one of our best and most effectiv workers.

Mr. H. L. Green writes us: "The prospects of the Salamanca convention are first rate. J. E. Remsburg, J. H. Burnham, Dr. T. L. Brown, and Charles B. Reynolds hav already agreed to attend and address the convention." Mr. Green will lecture in Port Allegheny, Pa., Friday evening, Nov. 9th.

We regret to learn that the Sydney, New South Wales, Liberal is in danger of suspension through lack of support. At a special meeting held to consider the best means of continuing its publication, it was explained that the paper was about $400 in debt. Mr. Charles Bright, who will be remembered in this country for the series of brilliant lectures delivered here about two years ago, then offered to be personally responsible for one week's issue, and after consideration the financial and editorial control of the paper was turned over to him. The Liberal Association will make strong efforts to keep the journal going, and ought to be successful. Mr. Bright is a talented lecturer and writer, and should be supported by the Australian Freethinkers. The death of a Liberal paper is to be deeply deplored. There are not half enough in existence, and we regret to say those we hav are not any too well supported.

We take little interest in the strife of the two great parties for spoils, but there was one man nominated in this state for attorney-general who ought to hav been elected, although he had no more chance than Beecher has of getting into an orthodox heaven when St. Peter holds the keys. That man is Louis F. Post, nominated on the workingmen's ticket. He is a stanch friend of the downtrodden, and a splendid Infidel. His speech at the Paine celebration last winter will be remembered by our readers as one of the best among a host of good ones. With him as attorney-general there would be some show of getting justice.

The Christian Advocate now and then lets a little light into dark places. In a recent issue the editor confesses that he places the most reliance upon statistics not gathered in the "interest of Christianity, as a whole, or of any one sect thereof." Is it possible that the Christians sometimes falsify statistics? It looks as though the Advocate thinks so; and, being on the ground floor, it ought to know.

The Rev. Dr. Hays, of Denver, is another sky-pilot who has made himself odious by defaming our dead. Prayer and slander are with him synonymous. The love of God makes him hate his fellow-man who sees in Christianity only hollow pretense and heartless strife of creeds. Mark such defamers well. There is something wrong with a man who will, unprovoked, vilify one who never harmed him.

Communications.

Giving Way.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The following extract is from the leading article of the last number of the Review and Herald (October 23d), the organ of the Seventh-day Adventists—the most earnest, zealous, and bigoted sect of conscientious Bible Christians in the world. It is from the pen of its editor, Uriah Smith, a ripe scholar, a profound Bible student, and a modest and true gentleman.

The article is not alone worthy of a place in The Truth Seeker on account of its truth and the encouragement it affords to all lovers of universal mental liberty, but should be very carefully preserved for use as the best possible refutation of the assertions of our orthodox friends that "Christianity is advancing in numbers and influence, more than ever before, so much so that they see the dawn of the millennium."

Truly, our dear Brother Smith hath witnessed a good confession. May he evolve from the constrained apologist of the superstitious vagaries and dreams of an illiterate old lady to the fearless champion of Dame Nature and scientific truth.

Rochester, N. Y. Chas. B. Reynolds.

GIVING WAY.

Under the names of "religious development," "modern thought," "advanced science," etc., a change is taking place in the religious world, the significance and strength of which are, perhaps, hardly apparent to the casual observer. One after another of those who hav been, and are still, regarded as responsible leaders and guides in the religious world, are making concessions to the demands of so-called science, which are a virtual surrender of the whole scheme of revelation and redemption. This, we are told, has been the cry at every new astronomical or geological discovery, and yet theology has adjusted itself to the new scientific theories and been none the worse for it in the end.

Granting all this, does it follow that there never can be demands made in the name of science which, if granted, would undermine the very foundations of the Christian system? Or shall we make concessions in this direction till we can go as far as Henry Ward Beecher goes when he says that there are no Infidels; that what is called Infidelity is only another form of Christian belief? Only a step more is required to meet the extreme claim of Spiritualists, that there is no sin, and that all evil is only "undeveloped good."

We had always supposed that Christianity did possess some fundamental principles; that among these were a belief in the authenticity and credibility of the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, a recognition of the fact that man by sin has fallen and must depend upon a redeemer for his future well-being, and that Christ has provided the requisit atonement for all who will accept of it. But a claim is now put forth in the name of science which confessedly antagonizes and destroys these great principles. Evolution affirms that man exists not by special creation, but by development from lower animal forms. If this is so, the record in Genesis is untrue; there has been no fall; the Bible is a fable, and Jesus Christ was an impostor. This issue bears no comparison whatever to any that has ever been raised on the subject of astronomy, or even of geology. There can be no adjustment here. It must be either teetotal denial or unconditional surrender; and the present outlook shows the religious world leaning rather to the surrender than to the denial.

H. W. Beecher avows himself an Evolutionist; and among his first utterances thereafter he speaks of the fall of man as recorded in Genesis as a "fabulous disaster." If that is fabulous, the entire scripture recorded is a fable, for it all proceeds upon that hypothesis; and the whole plan of redemption is an idle dream, for it is all provided to remedy that evil.

When men in high positions stand ready to accept theories the result of which is acknowledged to be such as above stated, it is time for the friends of truth and righteousness to be alarmed.

And now another name appears, no less than that of Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, in the list of those who indorse the theory of evolution. The Elmira Sunday Telegram, of recent date, says:

"The gradual adjustment which is taking place between Christianity and the theories of evolution is one of the most interesting features of modern religious development. An able pamphlet on this subject recently published by Dr. McCosh, shows the present aspect of mutations. Dr. McCosh is a Christian thinker of acknowledged power. He does not, like Henry Ward Beecher, leap at a bound into the hypothesis of evolution, but goes into it slowly, step by step, proving each advance to his own satisfaction. His attitude is that of one who would reject evolution if he conscientiously could, but who finds it up to a certain point irresistible."

The very fact that these men are persons of acknowledged mental strength and power, is what will giv them great influence to lead the masses in a wrong direction if they are wrong. This is more fully stated in the following paragraph:

"Theology took its stand on the special creation of man. It would not admit his descent through evolution from lower animal forms. But recently it has shown signs of yielding upon this point. The Dean of Westminster said at Darwin's funeral that the doctrins of evolution were not hostil to Christianity. Henry Ward Beecher proclaims himself as a believer in evolution, and now the careful Dr. McCosh, by strict logic, cautiously reaches virtually the same point. What these big men boldly declare, the smaller ones will soon begin to see."

It is a sad fact that the masses allow the men who are esteemed great to do all their theological thinking and formulate their creed for them. We expect the result will be as here stated, and that smaller men and much of the rank and file of the religious world will follow the lead of these men.

What is involved in still retaining these men in their ecclesiastical positions, is set forth in another paragraph from the same article:

"The church will not fall, but it must be underpinned with new foundations and supported with new buttresses. For see how much Henry Ward Beecher has discarded—how much Heber Newton has abandoned; and yet, they remain as ministers of the gospel and exponents of Christianity. The churches that retain them thereby recognize that neither the doctrin of the atonement nor the inspiration of scripture is essential."

No one can say that this is not a just conclusion in regard to their belief in the atonement and inspiration; but what would the churches hav thought of such doctrins twenty or even ten years ago? Again we quote:

"If man sprang from simpler animal forms, rising by successiv steps above his ancestry to his present high position, then there was no 'fall of man,' and this, Dr. McCosh would admit, must undermine the doctrin of the atonement. Henry Ward Beecher boldly takes this ground. He abandons the atonement as inconsistent with evolution."

The rapidity with which this change is to be effected, according to the expectation of its friends, may be gathered from this paragraph:

"But the fact that some eminent divines hav openly accepted evolution and all its consequences, and still not only maintain their Christian faith, but preach it with renewed vigor, shows that others may do so, and that the change may come more swiftly than most people now suppose."

We think our friends are warranted in expecting this religious revolution in the short time they indicate; for the barriers of faith seem to be everywhere giving way. That men who hav been set as defenders of the citadel of Christian truth should manifest such a readiness to receive doctrins so utterly subversiv of all that evangelicalism has held so essential and so dear, seems almost unaccountable. It is phenomenal. We think, however, that there is one ground of explanation; namely, that that being who is the great impersonation of darkness and error is working with demoniac energy, and taking men captiv at will. No one can deliberately and blindly place himself on his ground without falling under his power. As already remarked, it is but a step further to the baldest claims of Spiritualism; and we look for the result of this movement to be the engulfing of the major part of the religious world virtually by the spiritual philosophy, through which will be manifested great power. And then will come the fulfilment of Rev. xviii, 1–4.

Thus, in whatever direction we look, whether to the physical, the political, or the religious world, we stand on the threshold of an epochal crisis.

The Advantages of Being a Spiritualist.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The advocates of the "death-ends-all" theory claim that their faith fires its votaries with greater zeal for the earthly elevation and happiness of mankind than a belief in a future life.

According to this doctrin, the Materialists, now laboring to benefit their fellow-men, would relax their efforts were they to become convinced of the reality of a future state of existence and that the fruition of their labors, instead of ending here, as they now suppose, were to go on ad infinitum.

But will this position bear examination?

The Spiritualist regards physical life as the primary department in the school of human progress, and hear and now as the place and time for his work in unfolding the mental and moral faculties of himself and others, in such a way as to result not only in the greatest good and happiness of this life, but of that which is to come. It is self-evident that whatever means are best calculated to fit us for the duties and enjoyments of mundane existence are also for the endless future. This life unfolds into and givs character to the next; "just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

The Spiritualist, therefore, looks upon the proper education of the race here as of vastly more importance than the Materialist can, whose scope of thought is confined to this life.

Observation and reflection hav convinced me that, with all else equal, one who has seen life after death absolutely demonstrated by independent slate writing, materialization, or otherwise—as millions hav—is more likely to take an interest in earthly reform than one inclined to Materialism.

How can the Materialist bow at nature's shrine? Where can he see mercy, benevolence, or justice in bringing into existence myriads of human beings to suffer cruel hardships all through their earthly lives, with no future in which to unfold or profit by their horrid experiences?

But this is a libel on nature. She works by the universal and eternal law of evolution, or progressiv development. The universe as a whole, and in every infinitesimal part, is developed from the lowest plane, and gradually raised to higher conditions. Man has thus come up from utter ignorance and selfishness, and is destined to march onward and upward forever.

Our Materialistic friends claim to be evolutionists. But mankind, the crowning work and glory of the universe, they turn out in the cold, leaving every individual to die like a dog!

Belief in, and a yearning for, immortality hav characterized the race in all ages and climes; but if there is no future life, nature stultifies herself. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," only to be dashed to earth.

Our friends, to break the force of this contradiction, and place themselvs in harmony with eternal death, declare themselvs but too happy in looking forward to the moment of their own absolute and eternal annihilation.

Brother Winter affects to contemplate his disintegration, dissolution, and final exit from sentient and conscious existence with all the imperturbable gravity and frigid majesty of an ice-bound mountain.

And he will bequeath to a dying world in the frequent wintry blasts, which hav surged and whistled through The Truth Seeker, the bed-rock logic of the faith that is in him. Here it is in a nut-shell:

"I know there is no future life—because—why—why—because—I know there isn't."

Sister Elmina seems to think that we ought to be willing to fall a "prey to dumb forgetfulness," out of gratitude for the many blessings we hav enjoyed here on earth. This shows an amiable trait of self-abnegation which is conspicuous in all her writings and all her actions.

But the beauties of earth—its gorgeous birds, brilliant flowers, and luscious fruits—the magnificence of the sidereal heavens—the golden glories of the king of day—the silvery sheen of the queen of night—and the inexpressible felicities of fraternal and social mundane life, instead of reconciling me to be snuffed out, only make me the more tenacious of life.

I look upon this life as but a faint gleam of what is in store for all. All mankind are to go on unfolding in wisdom, goodness, and happiness under the universal law of evolution forever. Selah!

There are grounds for believing that a large part of those who fancy themselvs Materialists are not really so. Expressions indicating this are often heard. Davis met one who expressed himself as confident that death ends all, but said he wished it were otherwise. "Why so?" asked Mr. Davis. "Because I may regret it afterward," was the reply.

There it was; the ingrained but smothered sentiment would "out."

I once read an article on Thomas Paine by Wm. McDonnell, the distinguished Materialistic author. He closed substantially, if not literally, thus: "Thomas Paine is now taking his last solemn sleep." Here again the idea that Thomas Paine is immortal asserted itself unbidden, as it would seem, as the author's intellect says there is no Thomas Paine, for the reason that all the particles of which he was composed are separated and scattered to the four winds, and probably hav entered into new organizations many times over.

Many Materialists, unlike the one interviewed by Davis, appear to fear that there is a future life. This I infer from their almost constant assertions that there is none—that there is no proof of it, etc., when they must know that thousands as intelligent as themselvs, after an exhaustiv investigation of the question, declare that there is.

Their constant reiterations appear to be after the manner of the boy, who, on going through a dismal forest, whistled to keep his courage up. It would appear more modest, ingenuous, and reasonable, were they simply to say that they hav seen no proof of a future state of existence. As it is, one is reminded of the kings of Siam, who declared it impossible for a river to be bridged over with ice.

The importance of founding and sustaining The Truth Seeker for the free discussion of all live questions can scarcely be fully appreciated.

Should a little intolerance occasionally appear, its friends should be neither surprised nor discouraged. A little ridicule or sarcasm may, perhaps, neutralize it. Some may, perhaps, scent a little in the foregoing. But I disclaim it. Believing all human emotion, thought, and action to be the definit and inevitable results of complicated chains of cause and effect coming from the eternal past, and destined to result in the greatest amount of human good and happiness, I can but look with toleration on all. And this view is not incompatible with the most aggressiv thought and expression.

Memphis, Mo. STEPHEN YOUNG.

Not a Humbug After All.

Last winter THE TRUTH SEEKER published a glowing account from a Mr. Pritchard of a rich find of gold in the Cœur d'Alene range in Idaho. The letter was sent to us by Mr. Thomas Burk. The publicity given caused a rush to the new gold field, but the prospectors failed to find the ore expected, and immediately began to denounce Mr. Pritchard, some even wanting to hang him. Better counsel prevailed, however, and most of the crowd went home. By the subjoined letter from a man now on the ground, published in the Bozeman Avant Courier, and the editor's comments, it is seen that Mr. Pritchard is an honest man and has been most shamefully denounced and abused. Mr. Burk, who sends us the paper, adds that Mr. Craig's account, as given below, is substantiated by others. We publish the whole letter that Mr. Pritchard may be vindicated. Says the Avant Courier:

The following letter from George Craig, a prominent ranchman of the Valley, to his friend, Thomas Burk, of Salesville, was received by that gentleman about a week since, and through his kindness we are permitted to publish it entire. No one acquainted with Mr. Craig will question his veracity for one moment, and the letter can therefore be accepted by strangers as a reliable account of the new Eldorado:

Mr. Craig's letter is dated "Pritchard Creek, Shoshone Co., Idaho, Sept. 9th," and reads:

FRIEND BURK: You will be surprised to get a few lines from me, as I am not much of a hand at writing letters. However, I will giv you a brief account of the rough time I hav had this summer. The day I last saw you I made as far as Three Forks, and I got to Helena on the third day. I staid there one day with my brother, and then went on toward the land of gold. It was a very pleasant trip over the range. There was some snow on the top, but that did not bother us much. We went down the Little Blackfoot, thence on down to Missoula, one hundred and forty miles from Helena. Missoula is a very pleasant, thriving place, near the foot of the Big Root valley, on the north shore of the Missoula river. We staid a day there, then went on to Superior, a post-office at the mouth of Cedar creek, sixty miles below Missoula, but on the Missoula river. It was there I met the front ranks of the returning stampeders. They told me it was a fraud, that there was no gold in such a place, that Pritchard was a rascal of the worst stamp, and I had better turn back.

In a day or two Henry Howell and some of the boys came along and showed me some gold they had panned out on this creek. I made up my mind that there was more of the same metal where that was found, and after a day or so I determined to go to the place and satisfy myself.

It would be too long a story to tell all the hardships I endured before I reached here. The water was very high in the streams we had to cross on this side of the Cœur d'Alene range, and on the other side it was worse.

I got to this camp in June, and found twenty-five or thirty men; some doing nothing, some prospecting, and others cursing Pritchard as a scoundrel of the deepest dye. But there were none of them that could really be called miners. Pritchard and another man had left camp a day or two before to prospect on the north Cœur d'Alene. The California crowd was still here in camp, telling all sorts of things about the discovery of the creek and mines. The water was still very high, and it was impossible to sink prospect holes to any depth. I need not tell you how far we are from the Mullan road. That road is one of the most marvelous pieces of road-building on the globe. It runs up the center of one stream and down the center of another. We crossed one stream one hundred and sixty times before we arrived at Pritchard's house.

When I got here I was tired and worn out, but after resting a few days I commenced to investigate things for myself. This creek is thirty miles long and from a few yards to forty or fifty yards wide. We went up the creek seven or eight miles before commencing to prospect. Here we tried to sink holes in the side gulches, but could not get to bed-rock for the water.

I dug and panned, and traveled and searched, until I had worn out both body and clothes. I found gold in nearly all of the streams that entered into the main stream, but could not tell whether any of the streams would be permanent or not, so the ground could be worked. Some of the Californians had made sluice boxes, but, owing to ignorance, could not make them pay. They set up in two or three of the side gulches, but did not know how to use the water to advantage. It was fortunate for me that they did not know much.

After prospecting for seven or eight days I went down to Pritchard's. He had not returned. Some of the boys wanted to go up the North Cœur d'Alene to prospect, and we started the next day after I came down. I think it was the fourth or fifth of July. We traveled up-stream, or rather cut our way with axes. There were four of us in the party. This is the greatest timber country I hav ever been in. You cannot go any place here with horses without cutting a trail for them. Three of us could cut ten or twelve miles a day, and I never worked harder in my life. There are some of the largest cedar trees on North Cœur d'Alene I ever saw. I measured one, and found it seventeen feet in diameter. It would make rails, stakes, and riders enough to fence any farm in Gallatin Valley.

We went up the stream, sometimes on one side, then on the other. It is one of the finest mountain streams I ever saw. On the third day we came onto Mr. Pritchard's camp, but I did not see him until the next day. If you had seen him here in the wilderness on this July day, you would hav felt for him. He had hurt his leg the day before, his raiment was rent in many places, and his health was considerably shattered from the trials of the weeks before, when they were going to hang him for showing them the spot, now proving to be one of the richest placer mining regions in the Rocky Mountains.

We persuaded him to go up the river with us. He had found gold on some of the side streams, and I found color on the river. The country is so heavily timbered as to make it almost impossible to get into, except on foot, and we returned to Pritchard creek.

After some rest I went up stream some four or five miles to a place I had picked out when I first came here. The water was down and the bed-rock bare. The location was near the mouth of a small stream, where the Californians had been working, but could not make it pay. The fellows that were with me thought I was out of my head to prospect on a flat rock, but I pried out the bed-rock, filled my pan, and when I had panned it out I had more than a dollar. Railsback was along, and panned the next, but did not get so much. There were four of us, and we must hav panned out six or seven dollars in two or three hours. It was one of Mr. Pritchard's claims, and I saw him that night and arranged to be one of his partners. I then (July 14th) went up and commenced work. We did not make much till we struck bed-rock. Then we made seven or eight dollars a day, and it got better as we worked up. The last clean up we averaged nearly twenty dollars a day to the man. Mr. Pritchard's hands made the same or more. The largest nugget I hav found is worth seven dollars. The gold is of very fine quality. We hav picked up off bed-rock as high as twenty dollars' worth of nuggets some days, and I do not think we are on what will prove to be the richest streak.

George Ives is working on a bar two claims below me. He is doing very well. There are only two or three companies that are taking out money yet, as most of them were late in starting in. Mr. Pritchard did not tell near the richness of this country. I think this the greatest mining region in the United States.

The claims here are twenty acres each, and there is a rush in here just now, and some jumping of claims is in fashion. I staked one for you, but some of the boys jumped it. I think you can hold it by legal means. It was recorded. I did my best to keep it. I know in law it is yours. I wish you were here, but I would not advise any one to come from Montana this fall, as the rainy season will soon set in.

As to Mr. Pritchard, I hav found him truthful, honest, generous, and a gentleman in every sense of the word. If you were in this region, and could realize all the hardships he has borne in prospecting this almost inaccessible wilderness, you would say he ought to be hanged for going through it all. For three years he packed his grub, tools, and blankets on his back over places where he had to carry his load in three or four parts to get it up the mountains. I want you to publish the facts I hav stated in this letter in the Avant Courier, over my name, also in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as in justice to Mr. Pritchard you should.

I hav told you just what I know, and no more. Certainly this is an unprospected mining-camp as yet. But I hav got into trouble for showing that at least one spot in it is valuable. Men are rushing in now from Washington Territory and Montana. They find the twenty-acre claims take up some room, and a few men can hold a big gulch. Tell folks to stay away this fall.

In some other letter, if this one does not worry you, I will giv a more detailed account of the Cœur d'Alene Mountains. The fault I hav to find with this gulch is that it hasn't much fall to the rod. It is very wide, and covered with the largest timber this side of the coast. I am tired of seeing it. We know very little about this country yet, but indications are that it is not deep to bed-rock. We hav had no rain for three months. We hav bacon and beans most of the time to eat. Publish just what you think of this letter will interest the people. Yours truly, GEORGE CRAIG.

The foregoing is further corroborated by the following letter:

BUTTE, MONTANA, Oct. 16, 1883.

FRIEND MACDONALD: Everybody is excited about Pritchard's new gold find in the Cœur d'Alene Mountains. There is no doubt about there being good placer diggings in that section. So he [Pritchard] isn't such a crank after all.

Kind regards to all, FRED COOKE.

Do the People Govern?

It is often said that in our country the people govern.

So many false statements are taken for granted as true simply because no one ever stops to inquire or doubt. Let us see if this be true. I contend that it is not true in any sense. If the people govern, it must be through one or all of the three great, sole branches of government—the executiv, the legislativ, or the judiciary.

Now, the judiciary is chosen by the president, and must needs be composed of lawyers. The lawyers own that branch, and as the lowest pettifogger who is entitled to practice may become a judge, we are much interested to hav the bar pure—no people are more so.

As to the executiv, all the hundred thousand subofficials and heads of departments, cabinet ministers, etc., are appointees of the president. The people do nothing as to them.

How is the president elected? In the first place, a few party managers select two or three persons as candidates. We, the people, vote for one of them, and by a majority of votes are supposed to elect one out of the two or three selected for us to vote for. If Y is doing business, and A and B select two or three persons from whom Y is to select his business manager, it would really seem that A or B, and not Y, is managing and controling.

However, this is a small matter. The real government is in Congress, subject to no control but a paper document—the Constitution, which was established as a bar to tyranny by statute law. Congress makes the laws. It is composed of Senate and House. As to the Senate, it is filled by the appointees of the state legislatures. Of late almost every senator has been chosen by the influence of his wealth or that of corporations. The people are not heard in this selection, save rarely by indirection.

As to the house, what reader of this ever had a voice in choosing a candidate for Congress? Party management long since took that business in hand. Two or three candidates are selected to make the race. We go like dumb cattle to the polls and vote for one, and by the majority vote one of the two or three is elected.

Is this government by the people? Those who select the candidate who is elected really govern, but not the people. If it be said that the people might do more toward selecting candidates, we can reply, that is not the question—what people may do; but what they really do, is the question.

For some cause public opinion of late years has less influence over government, and power has narrowed down to fewer hands. When Cameron ordered the legislature of Pennsylvania to elect his son as United States senator to succeed himself, and was promptly obeyed, that was a spectacle never seen in a true republic. That son made laws for the whole Union, for he was a United States law-maker.

If it be said that on occasions of great excitement, when the people are roused, their will is obeyed, we reply such occasions are not government. They may call a halt, effect a few brief reforms. It is the steady pace that tells, and it is that which has changed this from a government by popular will to one by appointed agents of great corporations and a few wealthy citizens.

It is said that the founders of our government intended the elections to be confined to the states in all their workings and influences, that state parties would be formed having little or no affiliation with parties of other states, and that when they saw great national parties taking hold of affairs they were surprised and alarmed. They knew that the people are ever strongest in local elections, and that two great national parties striving for the prize of national government must end in civil war, centralization of power, and despotism.

The people do themselvs choose their own local officers—their township clerks and trustees, and village mayors and justices. They hav considerable influence in selecting their county officers. When it comes to their own state officers, party managers pull the wires. United States officers are so far from the people they hav nothing to do with the selection of candidates. The larger the object of rule, the less the people hav to do with it. For this cause our founders desired to hav all ruling done through county and state influence, or through the people as citizens of smaller districts, where the popular voice was most potent. HOLT.

Freethought Meetings.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As was announced in THE TRUTH SEEKER last week, I spoke in the Opera House at St. Petersburgh, Pa., on Friday evening last, and on the following evening in the Opera House at Edenburgh. At St. Petersburgh there was an attendance of about one hundred and fifty, and at Edenburgh, of about two hundred.

Both audiences listened attentivly to what I had to say, for an hour and a half, and I hope I was able to start the scales of orthodoxy from some of their eyes. I know that, at least, what I said had sufficient effect to set the community talking about what I offered them. These were the first Freethought speeches that were ever delivered in these towns and, with the exception of two addresses delivered by J. H. Burnham in Foxburgh, last winter, the only ones ever delivered in that vicinity.

I was pleased to learn that there are a number of intelligent, out-spoken, working Freethinkers in that neighborhood, who hav money, and are willing to use some of it to advance the Liberal cause.

G. C. Fink, of Foxburgh, is one of the most earnest and energetic friends of the Freethought cause in the state of Pennsylvania, and I am glad to know that he is a young man, not over thirty years of age, who, nature permitting, will be able to remain an activ member of the Liberal party for many years to come. And he has an intelligent, pleasant wife who is in full sympathy with him, and they hav now a noble bright son, little Ray Howe Fink, that they do not propose to bring up in "the fear of the Lord," or any other hobgoblin.

Mr. Fink and Mrs. Fink are both great admirers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and are doing all in their power to giv it a large circulation in that town.

C. H. Vensel, of St. Petersburgh, is another brave soldier in the army of progress. He is constantly at work scattering Liberal literature in his vicinity. It was through his instrumentality that these two meetings were gotten up, and the expenses of them, which amounted to over sixty dollars, were raised and paid. And now Mr. Vensel is arranging to get Mr. Remsburg to hold five evening meetings in the vicinity the first days of January. At St. Petersburgh I was permitted to take by the hand the following named Freethinkers, all of whom are most worthy citizens of that town and vicinity: Charles Blakesley, Dr. Glover, Messrs. Densmore and Brothers, Samuel Lobough, Calvin Blackman, Daniel Whitting, Dr. Everets, and Samuel Bostoph, and many others whose names I do not now remember.

At St. Petersburgh they propose soon to organize a Liberal League. They hav good material here for one. Truly yours, H. L. GREEN.

THE deacons of the New Hampshire legislature hav amended the woodchuck law so that no bounty will be paid for a woodchuck killed on Sunday. This will giv the boys Sunday to go fishing.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 10, 1883.

Wanted, a New but a Better Luther.

Four hundred years ago to-day Martin Luther was born. His life and labors hav made an impress upon the world never to be eradicated. He is one of the historic characters rightly termed "epoch makers." He was like thousands of others of the prominent men of his time—superstitious, coarse, sensual. But he had the courage to combat the arrogance of Catholicism, and in doing this he rendered to the world a service greater then he knew or intended. His reasons for defying the pope were personal. He opposed authoritativ dogmatic Catholicism because he could not be the authority. The early reformers, of whom Martin Luther was the most prominent, did not condemn the "mother church" as a church, nor the doctrins which she taught. At first they introduced no new doctrins, and denounced none of the old dogmas. It was but a question of who should exercise the authority of the church. There was no grand fundamental principle at stake, as there is at the present day, between the church and the Rationalists. Luther did not intend to be the founder of a new church. Protestantism is an accident, a catastrophe brought about by a rebellious subject. Luther and his followers blundered into such liberty as Protestants hav. They chose to go a mile, and were compelled to go a league.

The churches to-day and to-morrow—indeed, throughout the year—will laud Luther to the skies, but it is well for impartial thinkers, and especially Liberals, to keep these facts in view. Luther deserves a vote of thanks for his efforts, deserves to be remembered well of posterity, deserves great honor in all countries, and by all free men and women. But so would anything that had broken the power of Catholicism. Mohammedanism did more than Luther for the world, but the churches do not and will not celebrate its centenary. Therein they show their hypocrisy, their one-sidedness. The ministers celebrate Luther because he made the opportunity for them. Liberals are thankful to Luther, and to Mohammedanism; to him for the work he did in breaking mental fetters, to Mohammedanism for protecting discovery and science. But the labors of both were incomplete. Luther's followers forged as many fetters as he broke; Mohammedanism destroyed as well as protected. Religion is incompatible with progress, and religious reformers are sure to grow conservativ when their personal ends are accomplished. The fault is in the central dogmas of a creator and a redeemer. Whoever believes in these is bound to reason in a circle and do foolish things. Even men like Matthew Arnold, who hav been thrown out of orthodoxy, talk of the "natural truths of Christianity," as though a religion false in all its details could be true as a whole. A bundle of lies, when tied together, become, in the sight of him and pale phantoms like him, a grand truth. Luther was one of these halfway men. He rejected the authority of the pope, but accepted the dictatorship of a book. He refused restraint for himself, but imposed it on his mental subjects. He was unphilosophical and illogical, seeing only the length of his own nose.

Luther removed no superstitions. He was, in fact, as superstitious as the most ignorant Catholic. He believed in witches, in demons, and from the head of the latter he once had a personal visit, if his words are at all to be relied on. Of free thought and toleration he had no more conception than the rulers of the church he left because he could not be its pope. He objected to the church's interpreting the Bible for himself, but he translated and interpreted it for others, forcing his interpretation upon them, and saw no inconsistency in the act. Private judgment was for the Lutherans, not the Freethinkers. One who cannot see the absurdity of this is not entitled to much reverence for reasoning acumen, however much he may be honored for swinging the religious battle-axe. "Freethought," says Dr. Manning, "was the very mother and nurse of the Reformation." Yet Luther, Calvin, and others who reformed the Reformation, abused their nurse, and, after the manner of their lord and savior, denied their mother, and every Protestant sect to-day is re-affirming and swearing to that denial. The Infidels are the true Lutherans. They carry to its conclusion the logistic syllogism of which Luther formulated the minor and major premises. Yet they are ashamed of their teacher who had not the wisdom to see or the courage to declare the results of his own reasoning. As Talmage, with an almost miraculous ascent into common sense, declared the other day, the world needs new Luthers. More Calvins would be superfluous, but "the world needs new iconoclasts to break ecclesiastical pretensions" of Protestants as well as of Catholics. "There are those who suppose that the Catholic church has had monopoly of persecution. It is a great mistake. Cotton Mather, a Protestant minister of Boston, advocated the burning of people who were supposed to be bewitched. Who burnt the Quakers? Protestants. Servetus wrote books offensiv to Protestants and was burnt to death, and John Calvin sanctioned the awful tragedy. We want a new Martin Luther at least every fifty years to extirpate the spirit of religious tyranny."

But the world needs improved and enlarged Luthers—as much improved and enlarged as our times are an improvement on Luther's age. He was not a true reformer, but a theologian who substituted one dogma for another. What the world needs now are iconoclasts of the stamp of Ingersoll, Bradlaugh, and Bennett, men who reach down to the people, derive their inspiration from them, and draw them up and along. The churches to-day are shells inclosing all grades and shades of men and Christians, incipient Luthers and would-be popes, men of blind, unreasoning faith, and men faithful to reason, but because of their surroundings powerless for good. This shell needs cracking. These men need light and air, room to grow. We want another Luther but a better one. We want one to change Luther's cry, "I care not a rush if a thousand Austins or a thousand Cyprians stood against me," to, "I care not if a thousand Luthers or a thousand churches stand against me, I will be true to reason and my convictions, lead they whithersoever they may." The new reformer should no more rely on Luther and his authority than he relied on the ancient fathers and their authority. For were not they, too, all blind, Luther with the rest? If Luther asserts "that there is power in the" Bible "to make laws, what is Luther? Who shall oblige us to believe him? If, then, so great an error, and such a sacrilege, prevails against" humanity "for so long a time, with the consent, or submission, or approbation of mankind, let them consider if there be not good reason why" humanity "would hav no creature to be credited." The new iconoclast can also say with Luther, "Neither do I concern myself what Ambrose, Austin, the councils, or practice of ages say. Nor do I want King Harry [or King James] to be my master in this point. I know their opinions so well that I hav declared against them." The new reformer will find in Luther's writings hundreds of declarations that will fit our time. The wonder is that he who saw so clearly certain abuses could not see their fundamental remedy, but should hug the central delusion even closer than those from whom he turned in disgust. Again we say, the new reformer must be a better man than Luther, or his centennial will not be worth celebrating.

The Canadian Censorship Case.

Justice Johnston has rendered his decision in the case of Mr. Lawrence versus the collector of customs for Montreal. By the resuscitation of an old law by the defendant's counsel, and an insistance on its being brought to bear upon the case, the court could not decide upon the merits of the suit. In his decision the judge says, rather regretfully, it seems to us: "The provision of law which the defendant invokes is a very old one in the Customs laws, and I hav always seen it acted upon, and I particularly asked the defendant's counsel at this hearing whether he insisted upon it, and his explicit answer was that his instructions did not allow him to do otherwise. Therefore there has been some time spent in vain upon a discussion which took a very wide range under the pretensions set up by the fifth plea, and on which I am not now permitted to enter; and my duty is to dismiss the action under the defendant's first exception. This may be somewhat disappointing; but it cannot, of course, be a surprise. I am aware that the learned counsel for the defendant accompanied his statement that he insisted on his exception by expressing a hope that I might reach the merits. This either meant that he might see his way to withdraw his pretensions under the exception, or it did not. The exception has not been withdrawn; but it remains, and, of course, must be decided. . . . Action dismissed with costs."

The point of law is a purely technical one, consisting of an old provision that the bringers of suits against the customs officers for seizures of goods must "giv notice in writing to the seizing officer, or other chief officer of the customs at the nearest port, that he intends to claim the same; and the burden of proof that such notice was duly given in any case shall always lie upon such owner." This judgment is of much importance to the merchants of Canada, very few of whom ever heard of the arbitrary provision. It was entirely unexpected in this case, for in February last the minister of customs at Ottawa expressed to a deputation of Freethinkers his gratification that an opportunity would be had, in this case, of deciding the question on its merits, and assured them that the government would facilitate in every possible way any action that might be taken for this purpose. This promis was repeated in a letter from this minister of customs to a prominent Freethinker of Montreal. By this breach of faith the government has shown a desire very far from that expressed by the minister. The action of the defendant's attorney prevented the judge from reaching the merits of the case at all. But it is perhaps well to dig up the fact that a Canadian customs collector has power to seize, at his own risk, any and every thing offered for importation, and goods can only be reclaimed by giving notice within a month of the date of the seizure, that suit is contemplated. This should lead to a new regulation, for it is too great a power in which to clothe any petty officer. In such cases as this of Mr. Lawrence, the seizure would depend upon the private leaning and opinions of the collector. There is about to be sold at auction the library of an ex-collector of Montreal, and in the catalog appear "55 vols. 'Œuvres de Voltaire,'" and "35 vols. Voltaire's Works, English," besides a Renan's "Life of Christ." In Mr. Lawrence's parcel were some of Voltaire's books. Mr. Ryan seized them as immoral and obscene. Does any one suppose the ex-collector would hav done the same? The heretics of Canada are at present at the mercy of their customs officers.

This will not long be the case, however, if the Freethinkers of Montreal can prevent it. Their blood is up, and Mr. Ryan is invited to seize some more books now on the way to his port of entry. He can rest assured that all formalities will be complied with, and there will be no escape for him on a technicality. The minister of customs also will be afforded the opportunity he pretended to wish for to decide the question whether Canada is a free country or under the censorship of a miserably bigoted lot of collectors.

Another important point was not reached by this case, that is, the admissibility of unbelievers' evidence. On the trial no attempt was made by either side to bring this up, although one of the government lawyers poked a few questions at one of the witnesses with the intention of barring him out. But this subject has been brought up by the rejection of a witness in a civil case who had a somewhat hazy belief in a supreme being, but none at all in the regulation hell. Article 259 of the Canadian Code of Civil Procedure reads: "Before a witness is admitted to be sworn he may be examined by either of the parties as to his religious belief, and he cannot make the oath or affirmation, nor giv evidence, if he does not believe in God and in a state of rewards and punishments after death;" and this was taken advantage of to debar the Deistical witness from testifying. The muddle into which this article throws Canadian jurisprudence is plainly stated by a prominent member of the Montreal bar. "In Canada," said the gentleman appealed to, "there is absolutely no provision for a man to giv his oath, who does not believe in the deity, cr in a future state of rewards and punishments. As long as a person has a particular form of religious belief, no matter what that form of religious belief may be, there are provisions for his being allowed to take the oath according to the forms of his belief. But if he has no religious belief his evidence is not admissible. This is a very awkward question, as this is an age of Agnosticism and widespread doubt in regard to the accepted dogmas and the orthodoxy of the past age. The law recognizes that the form of oath shall be such as is binding on the witness's conscience, but it seems to pre-suppose that the unbeliever has no conscience that can be bound. The Quaker affirms by holding up his hand, the Jew by kissing the Pentateuch, and the Chinaman by breaking a saucer or cutting off the head of a chicken. But a man who livs by the light of his own reason is, as the law stands, debarred from being a witness in a court of law. Even in this city there are quite a number of Freethinkers, holding high social and commercial positions, who are esteemed in the community, but who do not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments. Their testimony would be wholly inadmissible, although the community in the various transactions of life regard their word to be as good as their bond. The question, in the light of a scientific age such as the present, when old faiths are being modified or changed, not only in non-essentials, but even in essentials, is a very grave one, and requires very thoughtful, liberal, and mature consideration."

The case is creating a greater sensation among the general public of Canada than the book seizures, for the reason that the effects of putting such a law in force will be widespread and disastrous. It is therefore very probable that this agitation will result in legislation upon the subject. What Canada seems to need more than anything else is a little common sense among the eminent gentlemen who manage her affairs of state. At present she is groping along about on an equality with Connecticut, a state in which, some prominent papers affirm, it is more dangerous to personal freedom to pick up a walnut on Sunday afternoon than it is to murder a woman on Monday night.

Show the Rascals Up.

We hav just issued the third edition of Mr. Billings's "Crimes of Preachers." It is a "brochure" that should be handed to every Christian in the land. This edition comprises all of the first and second issues, with some thirty added pages, making a long list of clerical crimes. The book needs no explanation. The bald fact that of all the learned professions the clerical is most conduciv to immorality stands out plainly. The book is a warning to clerical students to keep off the broad road to destruction; to heads of families a strong hint to be careful of the daughters; to husbands a caution against pastoral visits; to the people generally a notification that the men of God are not to be trusted. It is not a pleasant task Mr. Billings sets himself each year, but it is a necessary one. Facts are the most potent appeal to reason. That Christianity is not only a false system of religion but a pernicious one is most conclusivly shown by this book. Its logic is irresistible. Surely if Christianity conduces at all to morality, if it restrains any one from crime and leads its devotees away from temptation, the clergy, who devote their whole lives to studying and teaching it, ought to be freer from sin than those who are not "called of God." They pretend they are, but this book tears the mask off and reveals them in all their moral rottenness—whited sepulchers of corruption and unfaithful leaders of blind ignorance.

The nearly two hundred additional ministers piloried in this third edition hav been guilty of crimes of varying hideousness. The gamut is run from "unministerial conduct" to murder must foul, although the majority of sins are against chastity. As usual, the Methodists are ahead, with the Baptists closely following. After them come the Catholics. That the resolution of sympathy introduced at the last Presbyterian conference was not misplaced is shown by the Presbyterian record being almost as black as that of the holy apostolic church. It is a significant fact that the further from orthodoxy the sect is, the further from state prisons are the ministers of that sect. Only two Universalists hav figured in Mr. Billings's ecclesiastical year book, and no Unitarians. We congratulate Mr. Chadwick and Mr. Savage on the well-doing of their pulpit associates.

During the seven years covered by this book, 870 "divine rascals," as Mr. Billings designates the fallen scamps, hav been shown up. He estimates, however, that only one clerical crime out of sixteen committed is brought to public notice, as the churches do all in their power to screen the evil-doers, to prevent the scandal on the holy institution. The Catholic church, especially, is a close corporation whose emissaries must commit a flagrant crime indeed to be brought before either a legal or ecclesiastical court. The 870 also are from the Northern states, which territory employs only about 35,000 preachers. As there are over 71,000 ministers in the country the number of clerical criminals is doubled. If, out of 35,000, 870 hav been guilty of misdemeanors, a little over 71,000 would hav 1,765 criminals among them. If only one in sixteen is discovered—and Mr. Billings's reasoning from data at hand shows this is not an unfair proportion—then the total number of ministers who hav and ought to hav been brought before a legal tribunal in the country would reach the appalling number of 28,240 during the past seven years, which is over a third and nearly a half of the whole number. This proportion is large, being made so by the bad ministers duplicating their crimes and so forcing the honest ones to sin vicariously. Viewed in any light that can be thrown behind the altar and pulpit, the priests and pastors average up a bad lot. Can it be possible, asks Mr. Billings, that teaching and pretending a belief in the "immaculate conception," that three times one is one, that a person is his own father, that a ghost proceeded from the father and son both, and was at the same time both that father and son, make men villians per se? Do teaching and pretending belief in an impossibility make men wicked? Do teaching and pretending to believe that to be true which is manifestly false, that to be historical fact which is not even a respectable mythological fable, make men into coarse and degraded criminals? It would seem so.

"The facts are," he continues, "that a class of men who demand support, confidence, esteem, love, and homage, simply because of some pretended influence they hav with the unseen and unknown powers in the skies, will of necessity come to look upon their dupes as their legitimate prey, and to feel aggrieved if all their unjust demands are not at once complied with.

"Another thought. A preacher is entirely incapacitated for any other occupation. Accustomed to asserting that to be true of which they know nothing, and of which they at least hav much doubt, or believe to be wholly false, when compelled in other employments to meet competition, even flat contradiction, they are thrown completely off their base. Why, they never knew but one side to a question before, and are completely nonplussed when disputed or called upon to show facts. So, too, a preacher's sons are mostly worthless, and for the same reason. Beggary—call it by what name you will—renders the beggar worthless. Priestcraft is beggary. Priests are the most insolent of mendicants! No beggar is so despicable as he who is clothed in shining vestments, the fruit of his trade."

That all who occupy the pulpit are like the ones cataloged in this pamphlet no one pretends. Slight indeed would be the hope for the race if that were true. Mr. Billings willingly concedes that there are honest preachers, but he claims that they are ignorant. No really educated man, he explains, "can remain a priestly drone, unless he does so as a hypocrit. The educated clergymen all well know that the story of Jesus and his apostles is a myth—a fable common to the whole Aryan race for thousands of years. There is no excuse for any minister remaining ignorant on this subject. Slight investigation is all that is necessary. If he will not investigate he is a bigot, and just as unworthy as his hypocritical colleague. Many honest preachers are investigating, many are leaving their mendicant's position and boldly announcing to the world their disbelief in the dogmas of Christian mythology. Bright stand forth the names of Chainey, Miln, Weaver, Newton, Thomas, Swing, and scores of others, who hav braved the impotent scorn of the church and assumed the garb and mien of freemen. Take the cowardly incentiv of popularity away—and it is fast going—and none will remain priests except the groveling ignoramus and the crafty mountebank."

Mr. Billings is preparing a work on religious insanity, similar to the "Crimes of Preachers," and is collecting data concerning murderers who go heavenward by hemp. He will feel obliged to friends who will send him information upon either of these subjects. Meanwhile circulate the "Crimes of Preachers," and let the world see the character of the Christian priesthood. The price is the same as for the other editions—25 cents singly, or five for one dollar.

On the 1st inst. Mr. Heywood's case came up before Judge Aldrich of the Massachusetts Superior Criminal Court at Worcester. The defendant moved for a continuance on the ground that circumstances had arisen since his previous motion which he could explain. The court asked him if the motion was in writing and supported by an affidavit. Mr. Heywood informed the court that he had not his motion in writing, and was not aware that it was necessary to make the motion in writing; he was not required to do it before Judge Nelson in the United States Court. The court informed Mr. Heywood that this court had nothing to do with Judge Nelson; that it had its own rules, and anyone practicing before the court must be governed by the rules of the court. The district-attorney then suspended the case until Friday morning, when Mr. Heywood submitted his reasons for asking for a continuance, which were the unavoidable absence of important witnesses who could not remain from day to day because of the delay of the district-attorney to call the case Oct. 31st, as he agreed to, and by thus breaking his contract he is unable to hav a fair trial, also by the feeble condition of his wife and young child, so that his wife, an important witness, cannot be present. The motion was opposed by the district-attorney, who asked for an immediate trial. All he asked was to hav the distributing of such tracts and papers stopped; if Mr. Heywood will agree to stop, and stop at once, then that is the end of it. It is not to punish Mr. Heywood, but to break up the acts complained of, that this prosecution is instituted. The court informed the defendant that his character or that of his family was not on trial. The only question to be considered is, did he circulate the paper complained of, and if he did is it obscene? It has nothing to do with defendant's character or the effects on his family. No matter if the object of Mr. Heywood is a worthy one, if it is a violation of the law, it cannot be allowed; if it is found that the paper is an obscene one, it makes no matter how pure the motiv is, it is a criminal act; no man can set up his judgment against the laws of the state. Upon the statement in the motion that your wife and young child demand your attention at home, and on that alone, the case is continued to the January term. The court desired it understood that it was continued on no other grounds. The court also desired it fully understood that the attack upon the district-attorney was entirely without warrant; that he knew from experience that such delays as hav occurred in this case are unavoidable, and beyond his control. The judge, Mr. Heywood writes us, seems to hav "an honest spot in him," although he is very narrow in his views of individual freedom, of mental liberty in morals. For the conduct of the district-attorney in endeavoring to push to immediate trial a man whose wife lies sick at home, whose bail is as good a year hence as now, whose most important witnesses are unable to attend, there can be no reprobation too strong. Gladly, says Mr. Heywood, would he rekindle the fires of the Inquisition in Massachusetts, did not Infidel public opinion forbid. His efforts were directed to preventing a fair trial, and were "treacherous, base, and cruel." We sincerely hope Mr. Heywood will get out of his present trouble—and keep out.

The Dawn of the Morning publishes some "requests for prayer." The blessings asked for but not received—at least up to date—are: "For wanderers from the fold—For one who feels sin pressing heavy upon her soul—For the prosperity of the cause in Scotland—For Jerusalem—For the ultimate fall of Babylon—For the coming of the Messiah—A sister desires prayer for her beloved husband, that he may be saved, and for herself that she may keep in the narrow way," etc., etc. We hav a few requests to make if our religious contempory will only publish them. We think that prayers for the following might not be misplaced: For the ministers listed in Billings's "Crimes of Preachers"—For the whale that swallowed Jonah—For the last defaulting Sunday-school superintendent of New Jersey—For Jonah—For the sisters led astray by Billings's preachers—For the animals in Noah's ark—For the husbands of the aforesaid sisters—For Lot—For the wives of Billings's shepherds who went astray—For Lot's daughters—For the depositors robbed by the Sunday-school superintendent—For Lot's wife—For Archbishop Purcell's creditors—For David and Solomon—For Talmage—For the Devil—For Dr. Buckley—For those who never heard of Christ and are consequently damned—For those doomed to sing psalms forever before the throne—For Abraham, who has to hold all the elect in his bosom—For the elect—For the—but we must stop and see if the Dawn of the Morning prints these.

George H. Burgar is postmaster at Welland, Ont. The other day he was elected president of the Welland Sabbath-school Association. In a debate on "Infidelity" held by that association Mr. Burgar said, as reported by the Welland Tribune: "The country is being flooded with The Truth Seeker and kindred publications from New York and Chicago, the centers from which such things emanate. Every mail brings them to hand. He, as postmaster, was required to suppress the circulation of police papers and those having illustrations of an immoral tendency, and he thought we should ask the government to suppress The Truth Seeker and other Infidel literature in the same way." This is a nice kind of an official to hav! A short time ago one of our Welland subscribers sent for a lot of extra copies of The Truth Seeker. They were mailed promptly, but were not received by the subscriber for several weeks. Probably Mr. Burgar knows why. But we will tell the pious postmaster one thing, and he will do well to keep it in mind, and that is, he cannot suppress The Truth Seeker. If he thinks he can, let him try it.

The Depths of Superstition Reached by Russian Monks.

THE CZAR TO ROB HIS FELLOW-CHURCHMEN OF THE MILLIONS THEY HAV BEGGED AND STOLEN FROM IGNORANCE.—A MONK STARVES HIMSELF UNTIL HE SEES VISIONS.—A HEALING SPIRIT IN A BOTTLE.—THE CZAR'S PRISON FOR HERETICS.—RELICS OF THE CROSS, THE WHALE, AND GALLONS OF THE TEARS OF THE MOTHER OF GOD.

A correspondent of the New York Sun sends home this picture of the baneful effects of monasteries upon both Russian government and people:

In holy Russia there is now under discussion a very queer subject—the monastery question. The Russian monasteries and nunneries annually cost the government over a million roubles, and the people over ten millions. As the czar's treasury is now in an exceedingly straitened condition, the question is raised, "Would it not be proper to relieve these holy men and women of their worldly wealth?" To this inquiry six hundred Russian periodicals hav answered almost unanimously that such a policy would be beneficial in general, relieving the monks and nuns of wealth they do not need, and saving a huge sum to the country. As to the merits of monastic life in Russia the various journals express different views. A majority of them affirm that nowadays the monks and nuns belong to a useless, even a parasitical class, and that they should not be suffered to exist unless they earn their bread in the sweat of their own brows.

According to tradition, the apostle Andrew visited the place where the city of Kieff now stands on the high shore of the Dnieper, and, erecting a cross there, said, "In this country there shall shine a great Christian state." Ten centuries later Vladimir, the great prince of Russia, baptized his people in Kieff, and shortly afterward, perhaps on the spot trodden by St. Andrew, the first Russian convent was founded. The monks dug their cells in the ground, and thus the famous catacombs were made. I hav visited these catacombs. While my monkish guide, with a taper in his hand, led the way and pointed out the last resting-place of this or that saint, I wondered at the gigantic work performed by Russian monks centuries ago. To dig an underground cell, to spend a whole lifetime in it, to die and be buried there—what a faith must these austere men hav possessed! Prayer was their special vocation, but they also worked hard. They destroyed the pagan temples and built Christian churches in their stead. In the catacombs the monks mortified their flesh, prayed to God that he would forgiv their sins and also the sins of the world at large, wrote chronicles, painted holy images, prepared vegetable medicins, and buried the martyrs who perished at the hands of Tartar khans, Russian princes, or pagan mobs.

Centuries hav passed, and what do we see to-day in these catacombs? The holy relics and dry bones of those old monks are exposed to the sight of curious people. The monks no longer liv there. They go there only for the purpose of trade. Large metallic plates are put up at the grave of each of the fifty canonized saints, and every day the monks obtain piles of money from the pious pilgrims who come there from all the Russias. They sell the tears of St. Theophilus, the weeper, the oil that runs from the grave of St. John of Many Sufferings, and drugs from the grave of St. Agapit, the Physician. In this manner the Kieff Convent has gathered many millions of roubles; and besides it owns bushels of precious stones. During the Crimean war, the Czar Nicholas borrowed from the Kieff convent two million roubles upon a note in his own handwriting. Nicholas never paid the money back. Once when the late Czar Alexander visited Kieff, the prior seized the opportunity to remind him of this debt to the convent, showing him Nicholas's note. Alexander shed tears, kissed his father's autograph, and said:

"Truly, holy father, it is my beloved father's handwriting. Oh, what a treasure you hav! Keep it in the sanctuary, and guard it better than your own eyes."

With that he returned the note to the prior. It is the costliest autograph in existence.

On the bank of the Donets river, in the province of Kharkoff, there is a high, chalky mountain, as white as snow, whose shape reminds the beholder of an enormous temple, crowned with a pinnacle. Upon a slope on the side of the mountain stands a convent whose shining gilt domes rise above the majestic old oak-trees that surround it. This is the Convent of the Holy Mountains. It was established by Russian monks in the twelfth century, when the place was in the possession of the Tartars. The monks lived in catacombs connected by a subterranean passage with the river. In the Russian chronicles the convent was known as the one "beyond the frontier." Many Christian hermits were murdered there by the Tartars. At length the holy fathers determined to defend themselvs. They obtained cannon and other arms, and repeatedly saved not only themselvs, but also many Russian prisoners, from the Tartars. In the course of time, when the Muscovite czars conquered the Tartars, the convent became a sacred asylum for all who were persecuted by the czar's authorities. Runaway peasants, Cossacks, and even rebellious Boyards found a safe abode there. By order of the czar the monks were dispersed, and the convent was abolished. During the present century the convent has been re-established, but the catacombs, left alone for four centuries, were quite forgotten until about twenty years ago, when they were accidentally discovered. They hav since been cleared.

On entering the convent I noticed everywhere well-fed and well-dressed monks idling about. "How unlike these men are to those who centuries ago dug these catacombs, and with swords in their hands fought against the Tartar hordes," I said to myself. I gave a hint of my thought to an intelligent monk whose acquaintance I made.

He led me into the underground church, where, during four centuries, not a prayer was delivered nor a taper burned. A shudder seized me when I found myself in a dark, damp underground passage. The lower we descended, the more stifling the air was. Finally we entered the church, which was a dark, dripping vault. The severe faces of the holy images seemed to tremble in the weak light of the oil lamps that hung before them. "And here for centuries God was glorified, and men tried to silence the voice of their nature," thought I. Suddenly I was startled by a strange appearance. There slowly approached us a figure clad in a wide, dark cloak, ornamented with white insignia—the skull and bones and white crosses. It was a schema-monk.

"Who is here?" he asked in a hollow voice.

"A monk and a layman, holy father," answered my guide.

"Layman! Why layman? Go and pray that you may be received into the convent. Hasten, for the ax is laid unto the root of the tree. An unquenchable fire is blazing, and the gnashing of the teeth of sinners is heard. O Lord, Lord!"

The schema-monk prostrated himself on the earthen floor and sobbed. We left the church. My guide told me that the schema-monk had lived in the catacombs for over thirteen years.

We entered another underground apartment. An iron door was seen at the end of a passage.

"In that cell," said my guide, "the Hermit John lived for seventeen years. He was born in 1795. From boyhood he seemed to be a religious enthusiast, yet he stayed in the world until his thirty-eighth year. Then he entered the convent, put fetters upon himself, and began to mortify his flesh. The meanest and hardest work he performed joyfully. He prayed to be permitted to shut himself up in the catacombs, but the prior submitted him to various trials for years. At length, in 1860, he was blessed and allowed to shut himself up in this cell. A coffin with a little straw in it was put in the cell, and daily bread and water were given to him. Here he remained in the winter without any stove. He prayed day and night. Finally he looked like a skeleton, and then he had visions. Various saints, and even Christ, appeared to him, and comforted him. There is a little hole leading from his cell to the underground church. Applying his ear to that hole, John used to listen to the divine services in the church. At last, in 1877, he died, and was buried in the cell."

My guide opened the iron door, and there in the floor I saw the black grave of the hermit. Heavy fetters lay on the floor. A dark painting of the crucifixion hung on the wall, which was lighted by an oil lamp.

When we emerged from the catacombs we met a stout, handsome monk, with two young women leaning on his arms!

The Convent of the Holy Trinity is the richest in Russia. During the Crimean war, like the Kieff Convent, it lent the czar two million roubles. But, unlike the Kieff Convent, it cares nothing about the money; its coffers are better filled than those of the treasury. St. Sergius founded this convent in the fourteenth century, while Russia was yet groaning under the Tartar yoke. Instead of a plain structure, Sergius built a fortress, with thick, towering walls, mounted with many heavy cannon. His brethren were experienced swordsmen and gunners. It was St. Sergius who induced the Moscow prince, Dmitry, to try to throw off the Tartar yoke. The Tartars suffered a bloody defeat, yet their yoke rested upon Russia for over a century more, and the Convent of the Holy Trinity was repeatedly besieged by the pagan hordes. But it was never taken. The black-hooded gunners were too much for the Tartars armed only with bows and arrows. Many times the Moscow court sought refuge within the walls of the Holy Trinity Convent. During the interregnum, the convent assumed supreme authority over the country. In the churchyard of the convent there are the graves of many schema-monks who in this world wore princely crowns. In the olden times Russian monarchs toward the end of their lives used to enter the convent, renounce the world, and change their names.

Now the monks of the Convent of the Holy Trinity hav no need of swords or cannon. They no longer do anything but pray and solicit gifts. Their religious services are brilliant and imposing, and their singing is wonderful, but their solicitation is extortion.

"Three roubles for forty requiems for the repose of the souls of your parents!" shouts a monk directly in your ear.

"Twelve liturgies for your own health and salvation, only five roubles!" cries another.

"Here is a miraculous spirit that will cure you from sickness of every kind," says a third monk, thrusting into your hands a little bottle. "Only twenty-five copecks!" he adds. You notice that it is an empty bottle, but the monk tells you that there is a miraculous spirit in it, and that whenever you fall sick you must uncork the bottle and inspire yourself with faith. "Your faith will save you," he says. I am told that the monks obtain tens of thousands of roubles by the sale of these empty bottles.

Not far from the city of Archangel, in the White Sea, there are two islands united by a bridge composed of stones of gigantic size. The islands are surrounded by huge, gray walls here and there battered as if by cannon balls. In fact, these walls hav been hammered at by the artillery of Swedish men-of-war, as well as by the guns of the czar of Russia. Light steamers and boats ply around the islands, whose inhabitants are Russian monks. Here stands the Solovetsky Convent. The rules of the Byzantine monasteries hav been modified here in accordance with the character of the Russian peasant and the nature of the polar region. The spirits of the monks were tempered here amid snow and ice and sea gales. They often had to face great perils, and their safety depended upon their personal courage and activity. No wonder, then, that when a Swedish fleet appeared under the convent's walls, the monks made a stout defense; and that in the seventeenth century, when a large body of Russians refused to obey the authority of either czar or patriarch, and the Solovetsky Convent sided with the schismatics, the czar's army could not overpower the rebellious monks until after ten years of regular siege. When the convent was captured, the monks were massacred or transported to Siberia. Since then the czar has converted the convent into a religious prison. All sorts of religious Freethinkers and heretics are sent there, and kept there till they repent or die.

To-day there are only about half a dozen heretics imprisoned there behind seven iron doors. Nobody knows who they are. "Repent, and to-day you shall be free, else you shall rot here alive!" Such is the exhortation daily repeated to the heretics by the prior. And yet the heretics do not repent. I heard one, who seemed a mere skeleton with a long gray beard and glowing eyes, say:

"The world is not yet saved. Christ was not the true messiah. See, how many sins, miseries, and sufferings are all around us. If Christ had been the messiah, there would not be so much injustice and grief. The savior shall yet come. We must prepare ourselvs to meet him. Where is the guarantee that he will not be thrown into prison and mocked at? Meanwhile human miseries increase. Nations, like wild beasts, fight and rend one another, and men treat their brothers as enemies. Where is there any brotherhood? But soon there will be an end of human miseries. Men will be happy and contented, for they will learn what our hearts and our minds long for—truth. The spirit of truth will embody itself in life and in men."

This man had been kept in the convent for over twenty years, and there is not the least doubt that he will die there, as many hundreds of religious fanatics hav done before him.

I hav seen many other convents, but they are not so characteristic as those already described. In one they hav the holy relic of a saint, and are very busy manufacturing miracles. They hunt up people suffering from delirium or hysteria, take them to the convent, cure them, and then publish the fact far and wide. Thousands of pilgrims go there, and the monks pocket a good crop of copper and silver coin. In other convents they hav miraculous holy images, which prove as profitable as the holy relics. As to relics, any quantity can be found in every convent. I think if all the pieces of wood sold in convents, and alleged to be from the cross of the savior, were collected, a village of good size might be built of them. Then the tears of God's mother are also very abundant there. Pieces of whalebone from the whale that swallowed Jonah, threads and pieces of cloth from Christ's vestments, stones from the grave in which Christ was buried, and innumerable other relics are sold there.

The Russian convents will not be impoverished or reformed if the state subsidy is discontinued. While Holy Russia contains so many, many millions of ignorant and superstitious people, the convents will grow fat, subsidy or no subsidy.

Why?

Why is it that a prohibitionist cannot speak upon the question without making some illogical remark about the "rum power," and insinuating that Liberals who oppose his pet method of temperance work are friends of "vice?" Our friend, W. F. Jamieson, should hav been just enough to his fellow-Liberals who do not agree with him upon this subject to hav left unwritten the ungenerous flings contained in his criticism of the 7th plank.

Why a man usually so clear in his thought and so fair in his disputation should repeat that stale and thousand-times-refuted slander that Liberals who oppose prohibition are "directly or indirectly" under the control of the "rum power," is past my comprehension. My friend Jamieson well knows that his charge that the League, in adopting that 7th plank, was made, either "directly or indirectly," "the tool of the rum-selling power," is wholly without foundation in fact. The men and women who voted for that resolution hav no more connection with the "rum power" than has W. F. Jamieson; and a large proportion of them are as strict temperance men and women, both in theory and practice, as he dare be. Then why does he make these reckless and cruel charges? Simply from habit, it would appear. It is one of the usual prohibition answers to arguments against sumptuary legislation, and he thoughtlessly repeated it, forgetting at whom his criticisms were aimed.

And our friend insinuates that Liberalism, to the extent that it opposes prohibition, "countenances vice. W. F. Jamieson is equally illogical with Abbot, Underwood, Bundy, Comstock & Co., who asserted that the League, in demanding the repeal of certain postal statutes, favored the circulation of obscene literature. W. F. Jamieson indignantly denied the truth of that wicked charge, and stoutly asserted that Liberty is Virtue's mother. Why does he make equally illogical and wicked charges against the anti-prohibitionists now, that Abbot & Co. did against the League then? Our offense now was his then, no more. E. C. WALKER.

Valley Falls, Kas.

Queer Views on Agnosticism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I take the following from the Herald of the 22d ult:

In the church of St Francis Xavier, in West Sixteenth street, the Rev. Father Richard F. Clark, of the church of the Jesuit Fathers, in Farm street, London, delivered the first of a course of four sermons upon "Agnosticism." He opened his sermon by explaining at length the full meaning of the word Agnosticism. Agnosticism, he said, was not Atheism; it was not Materialism. The Agnostic was a believer in that peculiar theory which places all religious ideas and belief in the field of the unknown and unknowable. Agnosticism was not exactly know-nothingism, but the Agnostic was a sort of worshiper at the shrine of an unknown God. The practical results of Atheism and Agnosticism were the same. They both left man without a God, without his supporting grace, without hope of future life.

In its contest with truth Agnosticism promulgated its delusiv doctrins mainly in connection with three leading human passions. The first of these passions, of which Agnosticism took advantage, was what was known in holy scripture as concupiscence of the flesh. Agnosticism said to man, "You are at perfect liberty to enjoy yourself as you please. You may yield to every desire without fear of the eye of God discovering your sin. You may bask in the smiles of venal beauty, and giv full rein to your passion without fear of the judgment to come." Thus, Agnosticism, the preacher went on to say, prepared the way for the rejection of a vindictiv God. The man who had sinned found consolation in the theory of the non-existence of a future punishment, and little by little let himself be possessed of the theory which delivered him of this fear and left him at liberty to indulge in his pleasures as he liked.

The second weakness or passion of which Agnosticism took advantage was love of money. Agnosticism says to the man with a passion for accumulating wealth: "After all, nothing is known of God, and what reason is there for believing in his existence? Your money you can touch, see, realize. Throw over this God, and you will be at liberty to worship your money with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your strength."

The third human weakness of which Agnosticism took advantage was pride. Agnosticism tempted the man of intellect with the offer of a greater freedom of thought than God had seen fit to grant, and many men of high mental caliber succumbed to the temptation. In conclusion, Father Clark said that it was a sin for a Catholic to doubt any of the fundamental principles of his church. It was natural for a Protestant—from the very fact that he was a Protestant—to question certain of these principles. It was a grievous sin for any one, however, to doubt the existence of God, of a future state, or any of the great natural implanted truths, which were congenial to every human being, and formed a part of the light given unto every man.

Where on earth did the reverend and holy father get his erroneous ideas of Agnostics? He seems to hav been living in England, where Herbert Spencer, their leader, livs; he is preaching in America, where Spencer's "Data of Ethics" can be read in a thousand free libraries, or a fee simple title to a copy be had for fifteen cents. Spencer's views on the control of the passions and respect for each other's rights are almost puritanical. A reverend and holy father would not deliberately tell falsehoods to a New York congregation, would he? He must be like those Protestant "divines" who savagely attack evolution after reading in a newspaper that "Darwin says we are descended from monkeys." After preaching awhile he discovers that he has not informed himself on his subject. And after informing himself by study he finds, if a man of common sense, that he is not opposed to evolution. Then if an honest man he does not preach against it any more. If this holy father will think a moment he will see that we are nearly all Agnostics, himself among the number. The religious are "believers," not knowers. Their foundation is not "Cognosco," but "Credo."

But let me giv this exceedingly reverend and uncommonly holy father a whisper of advice on the danger of making his congregation think that Agnosticism has no other treatment of "concupiscence" than a certain Rabelasian remedy; for his flock may be affected by the information in precisely the opposit way from what he intended, and stampede toward Agnosticism. Did he never hear of that missionary to the Laplanders who, on preaching that hell is a place of everlasting fires, found they all wanted to go there? W.

Letters from Friends.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am very much gratified to notice that you hav put in tract form Mr. Remsburg's admirable speech that he delivered at the Rochester Convention, "False Claims of the Church." It is one of the best things to distribute among orthodox people that I ever read. One hundred thousand copies of this tract should be circulated immediately. Freethinkers everywhere should order copies and circulate them. H. L. GREEN.

BOONEVILLE, IND., Oct. 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My time is expired the first of November for THE TRUTH SEEKER, the paper that I hav taken for years and want to hav for my guide for another year. Please send it. I herewith inclose $5 00—$2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the year, $1 00 for D. M Bennett's monument, 75 cts. for "Half-hours from some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers," and the remainder for "Genesis i, ii: an Essay on the Bible narrativ of Creation," and Charles Bradlaugh's tracts. Yours with friendship until I go to sleep. JOHN A. REYNOLDS.

MOUND CITY, KAN., October 28, 1883.

MR EDITOR: My subscription has been due since August 5th, and it is my neglect that is the cause of my not renewing sooner; but I expected to "winter" this time in New York, as I did last, so I intended to settle up and buy some more reading matter. I keep "Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" and some others like it, on the go, showing them to Christians, some of whom thought they were hard books. We hav quite a number of free-minded people in Mound City, but I don't think THE TRUTH SEEKER is read much, as they need stirring up some. We used to hav some lecturers years ago, but none for some time past. I liv on a farm out of town, and on account of being very much unsettled for about a year I hav not had the chance to read much. My wife died and I miss her very much.

I send you my subscription for one year, and will try to be more prompt in future. I am sorry to hear of Mrs. Bennett's poor health. I had the pleasure of seeing her last winter while in New York. I had not been there since 1856.

Success to THE TRUTH SEEKER and all hands connected with it. Yours, JAMES ADAMS.

DEERSVILLE, O., October 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In reading that sublime paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER which all the self-styled Christians hate, I find it still freighted with much useful knowledge from your many intelligent correspondents, such as Charles Watts, Mrs. Heddon, Putnam, Andrews, Winter, Green, and many others I could name. The article by Charles Watts on "The Fall and Redemption" knocks the socks off the Christians and turns them all inside out, and can't turn them back again Yet many of them are like cattle—you can't open their eyes to see priestcraft and its evil effect on the whole world. It is truly surprising to see the ignorance that prevails among the great majority of church-members. The church is filled with ignorance and cowardice. I hav been a missionary here for ten years, trying to open their eyes to see the fraud of priestcraft, for which I hav the frowns of the clergy and their duped followers If God is good, merciful, and all-wise, and can change our vile hearts in a moment, he having all power, why in the name of all that is good don't he do it at once, and not let us commit one sin?

Last week, in Fry's Valley, Ohio, Alert Fincer, a church-member, killed his wife and three children by cutting their throats and beating their brains out with a heavy shoe-hammer, and then killed himself by cutting his own throat and blowing out his brains with an old shot-gun. Such is the conduct of those for whom, it is said, Christ died.

You Christians say that we are all free agents, and can choose between good and bad. If so, we need no God to govern us. But we ask, Were this man's wife and children free agents? If so, we think they would not hav chosen to be thus inhumanly butchered. Bah! Go away with your free agency; it is a delusion. Now, if I had the power that Christians ascribe to God there should be not one sin committed—unless I were like the old Jewish God, who delights in wholesale murder, rape, and theft (see Numbers xxxi, and many other chapters of like character in the Bible). There is not a crime that man can commit that is not sanctioned by the said-to-be-inspired word of God. What a pity!

A. AULD.

GRAY, NEB., Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: This is from one that believes in realities, and in things that hav been investigated scientifically, and proved to be true; and not in imaginary things, or things that are impossible, or without evidence. I cannot see how it is possible for all that is related in the Bible to be true. It is a matter of impossibility for it to be so. It is absurd, and I can't see how a reasonable person with common sense (if he will pause and think) can take them as veritable facts. I am, until further convinced, a Pantheist or Materialist, for outside of nature or matter there is nothing—no effect, no power, no sensibility, no knowledge, no enjoyment, no suffering; if there is I cannot see it. I must wait till science further investigates and proves Spiritualism, or power independent of matter, before I can conscientiously believe it.

Mr. Wm. S. Logan, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 13 h, says he thinks he has sufficient evidence or reason for the belief in Spiritualism or an invisible unseen entity, capable of enjoyment or suffering, independent of matter, or that which contains no particle of matter; but I cannot see it further than this. Go among the flowers and roses; you are at once delighted with their perfumes—that part which is invisible; only the flowers are visible; yet the odor is from them. But it is not discoverable even with the most perfect magnifying glasses. Then remove the flowers, and the odor is gone. So outside of matter there is nothing; so I can't see that Mr. Logan has made satisfactory proof of Spiritualism. He may hav good intuitiv perceptions, and by some means or other be forewarned of coming incidents, etc., but that is nothing more than brutes possess. They can foresee storms, excessiv cold spells, etc., and among the minor animals, such as the ground-squirrels, can tell when an unusually hard winter is coming, and lay up an extra supply of food. Ignorance and superstition hav been transmitted from generation to generation, but we find ourselvs to-day seeking after knowledge and truth. Science and veritable realities is our motto. Obliterate vice, superstition, falsehood, and all forms of wrong, and let not kingcraft and priestcraft dupe us any longer. Look at our condition at present; see the misery, the wretchedness, and the vice extant with us, and say we do not need more Liberalism, more science, more realities, and more humanity, and less absurdities, impossibilities, and nonsensicalities.

Yours for truth, LEANDER WOODY.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Oct. 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The signs of the times are the modifying of old orthodoxy. Reading in the New Moon, the saying of a popular preacher, that the rich might save the Lord a great deal of trouble by answering their own prayers for the poor, reminds us of a sermon we listened to a few weeks ago, on the subject of prayer, by a disciple preacher, in which he related the following in illustration of his idea of prayer. He went on to state, there was a certain sister of the church, who, with a large family, was reduced to necessitous circumstances; a day was set apart by the members of the church for fasting and prayer for the destitute sister and family; but when the congregation were gathering, one brother, whom he called Jones, said to his son: "I cannot attend the prayer-meeting; I will send my prayer down in a sack. Here, son, please bear this to the sister, with my compliments, telling her I cannot attend." The son obeyed. After the prayer-meeting was over, the old sister said, "Let us see Brother Jones's prayer, being as he has sent it in a sack." Upon opening it, there lay a roll of greenbacks, a large smoked ham, side-meat, with groceries in abundance When the old sister saw Brother Jones's prayer, she examined it carefully and said, "I would giv more for one of Brother Jones's prayers than for ten thousand prayers like you hav offered up in my behalf to-day." Now, said the preacher, after you hav prayed for the poor, just answer that prayer yourself by bestowing upon the poor such things you pray for them to hav, and what you ask the Lord to giv them, and then you can see that your own prayer has been answered. Is not this sensible and wholesome doctrin to be preached? And does not this go far to show how little confidence the so-called Christians hav in the answering of their prayers? Is not this a step in progression, a puling out of the ruts of old theology? If I believed that my prayers would be answered, it would be after this manner, that every family in the Union could hav a good Liberal and Spiritual weekly paper; and if I could, I would answer my prayer as Brother Jones did the prayer he offered for the destitute sister.

B. D. EVANS, M.D.

PROHIBITION.

WELLAND, ONT., CAN.

MR. EDITOR: I must say I am pleased to see the firm stand our Liberal and esteemed friend, W. F. Jamieson, has taken in the temperance cause, and sincerely wish we had more like him. I am sorry to see so many standing high in the ranks of Liberalism who are strongly opposed to prohibition. They nearly all claim to be in favor of temperance. Some claim that a proper education will bring about a cure. Now this is simply nonsense, as many of the most learned are the hardest drinkers. I would ask, who is going to take it in hand to educate the people so they will be able to steer clear of this formidable foe of civilization? Our Liberal lecturers scarcely ever hav anything to say on the subject. I fear many of them are too fond of their bitters to even wish a reform in this direction. I claim that if the accursed traffic cannot be stopped by gentle means, rigorous means will hav to be resorted to; as an evil that is the cause of so much crime, misery, and suffering should be exterminated at all hazards. There are so many who seem to hav so much sympathy for those blear-eyed, bloated destroyers of domestic happiness who run these drinking hells, but hav no feeling for the suffering wives and children whose happiness has been blasted by these human vampires who are living in affluence on the money that rightly belongs to these injured innocents. It should be the duty of those who hav shaken off the shackles of superstition and ignorance and enlisted in the noble cause of Liberalism to use their influence in suppressing this evil, and do what tney can in the direction of elevating the standard of civilization, and should try to set good examples in this respect, as the Christian portion of the community are watching us, and are ever ready to point out the dissipated Liberals to us, no matter how many they hav of their own. The drinking habits of so many claiming to be Liberals is a serious hindrance to our cause, and in a great measure prevent our winning the esteem of many refined and honest minds.

I cannot help but admire the sound reasoning of Francis M. Buck, in his article on prohibition in your issue of Oct. 13th, notwithstanding the assertion of T. Rogers that it contains too much temperance twaddle to need a reply. It has the right ring to it all the same, and T. Rogers cannot successfully contradict it. If the women had full sway we would soon see a reform in this direction. We need more like Susan Wixon and Elmina D. Slenker to keep the ball rolling. A few such as these would be of more worth to our cause than a thousand whisky-soaked Liberals.

May the sun of reason illuminate the minds of those still in the dark, and enable them to see their way out of the mists of superstition, ignorance, and vice, and bask in the sunshine of an enlightened existence, is the sincere wish of your friend and well-wisher, ELLWOOD CHANTLER.

PANGBURN, Oct. 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The church is fast losing its hold on the people of the South. Their greatest curse is too much religion. I am more than pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best paper I ever saw.

Very respectfully yours, J. F. WISE.

OAK POINT, W. T., Oct. 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $10; $2.50 from Mr. R. Ormsby for the Monument Fund, $5.00 for the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," and the balance apply for the monument, or for the benefit of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as you see fit.

Respectfully, H. LAWSON.

HOMER, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Yours of the 19th inst. received. You will find names of many people who I think would like your paper. I hope that everyone whose name you find here will subscribe for your paper. Would that everyone knew how much it was for their benefit. Then they would surely subscribe for it. It is a paper that everyone ought to read. My best wishes for you. Yours and the world's friend,

N. M. LEVY.

ALMOND, Oct. 31, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I see I am indebted for THE TRUTH SEEKER since Sept. 8th. I inclose $3. Take enough to pay my subscription to January, 284, and send me "Revelations of Antichrist." If there is any money left send me some tracts for missionary purposes.

I see another minister has lost faith in the old God-book. A Universalist this time. His denomination wants to turn him out for heresy, but his congregation says, No; we like his sermons too well. Let the good work go on. O. D. WALLACE.

WEATHERFORD, Oct. 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find post-office order for $1.25, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to the subscriber named. He was a trial subscriber for three months last year, and I think THE TRUTH SEEKER has knocked the scales from his eyes and let reason take the place of superstition. I hope to be able in a short time to send you more subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER; it seems to be a welcome visitor to every one of its readers. Yours for truth and justice, D. O. SULLIVAN.

VERDELDA, Mo., Oct. 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2.00—$1.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and 50 cts. for two copies of "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," by our late apostle, D. M. Bennett. I hope to be a member of your glorious crew till June, 284. Would like to write more, but hav neither the time nor the ability. I will only refer to a piece that suits my sentiments better than any other. It is from J. H. Cook, of Columbus, Kan., in your issue of Oct, 13th, page 645. Yours, JOS. A. HALLOTTE.

SALEM, NEB., Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My father, Calvin Tuttle, and mother are both dead. They both died last April. Mother died April 17, 1883, and father the 24th. They both died firm Infidels, and had a piece read at their funeral out of "The Truth Seeker Collection" by J. J. Marvin, of Falls City, Iowa. They were both lovers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I should hav written to you before, but I hav been waiting for some of the rest to write. Father was a member of the National Liberal League. If you will please inform the League of his death I would like to hav you. Please send me his paper for the balance of his unexpired time, if you see fit to do so, and oblige

Yours truly, MYRON TUTTLE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Oct. 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: After some weeks' agitation we hav at last organized a Liberal League in this city, with a roll of about fifty names of earnest Liberals. We hav a large Liberal element in this city, and it is but little organized. A large number seem to hang back and shrink from organization, and can giv no reason for their actions. I think, though, we can get a good progressiv society of Liberals here by a little perseverance, which I know will not be lacking.

At our last meeting the following officers were elected: President, Charles C. Gibson; vice-president, George Newcomer; secretary, W. I. Irvine; treasurer, Joseph Gibson. It is the intention of the leaders to hav some of the leading lights of the Liberal firmament lecture here during the season just beginning. The League meets at Heller Hall every Sunday at 3 o'clock P.M. W. I. IRVINE, Sec.

LONGFORD LUMBER MILLS, ONT., CAN., Oct. 22, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav received the sample copy of your paper, and I like it very much. I shall become a regular subscriber, obtaining it from your agent in Toronto, whose name and address I see in the copy sent to me. I was educated in the Christian religion, believing, like the millions of the world, what was told me. It is by reading Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" that I hav come to see the absurdity of the Bible teachings. I am only a young man, and hope to be able to do something in coming years to expose the false and prove the true.

Please send me the book entitled "The Bible—Whence and What?" as advertised in your paper. I inclose a dollar note. There are many small books I require. Please send me catalog of radical and scientific books. Thanking you beforehand for your trouble, I am yours respectfully, a Truth-Seeker, WM. SMALLWOOD.

NORTHFIELD, MINN., Oct. 25, 283.

MR. EDITOR: The last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is super-excellent, and a good one to put into the hands of Christians. The two must noted articles I wish to hav some of our citizens read are the "Catholicism Against the Country," and "The Truth About It," correspondence between Whitmore and Dr. E. B. Aveling, of England.

Mr. Aveling deserves great credit from all true Liberals, in exposing the lying hypocrisy of the Rev. Whitmore. Dear me, when will these "men of God" learn to tell the truth? How can they be so devoid of the principle of manhood. Truth seems to me the highest standard to stand by. But alas! how often it is crushed "for the glory of God."

Please send me four or five copies of your last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Oct. 20th, for circulation. If I were financially able, I would send for a thousand copies to distribute. But I'm a "Vanderbilt" on too small a scale.

How very sad to hear of the supposed death of Prof. Denton! I hope that we may hear that he is still among the living. But I fear for the worst. In days gone by, he endeared himself im many a heart in and around Northfield; and it is hard to part with such practical men, humanitarians, iconoclasts, human saviors.

Yours for the enlightenment of humanity,

MRS. S. J. LENONT.

SOUTH BARRE, Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Yours of 20th inst. received. We were not unmindful of our due; we also realize it should hav been paid ere this. But while poverty is no disgrace, we find it very inconvenient. Your request, however, is just in time and all right.

We would advance for 1884, but unfortunately we are in a most eventful year. Western New York has had a terrible frost, Sept. 9th, killing our beans, corn, and many other things. They say providence is very kind, but this year there seems a lack of judgment, or perhaps his wrath is kindling as of old. May be he don't like so many Liberal and Spiritual meetings and papers as hav been developed in the last few years? But it is said he created the tree of knowledge, and we believe just in proportion as humanity partakes of that fruit, they will evolve from a lower to a higher state, garden or no garden, God or no God.

The mind—what is it? Evidently elastic and susceptible of vast powers—whether immortal or not is the question for debate. Without using the language of Wakeman, Andrews, and others, take this conclusion: if mind is immortal, then it is immortal, and if it is not immortal, then it is not immortal, and which ever way it is, so it is by the eternal, immutable, and fixed law of nature. This, you see, makes pray useless—belief will not help you—facts are all that can be safe; how can we obtain them? If possible, lay off all prejudice, superstition, and bigotry; take the past, the present, as we find it through our best minds, past and present. Compare, analyze, and judge for yourself, independent of any pope, priest, or devil.

Friend Macdonald, hav we not gone long enough after Gods and priests? We say far to long! Then let us attend to the culture of our own thought and judgment. When we hav used the interest of the money, now used for so-called religion, we may be wiser and better people. But excuse me, for we had no thought of this epistle when we sat down, only just to say, inclosed please find our due, $3.25, to January 1, 1884.

Hope all delinquents will pay up and thus all be benefited, Yours in truth, M. B. DELANO.

HOBART, IND., October 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a charity reader of the dear old TRUTH SEEKER, but I do not love it any the less because I am not able to pay for it, or because our lamented hero made it a free gift to me, writing me a kindly letter telling me I should hav it as long as I cared for it, even though I were not able to pay for it. I often hope I am going to be in condition to pay up my back indebtedness and subscribe for it, but as often my old enemy, hereditary asthma, comes back with double force, prostrating all my energies, and almost my very life, for months together, and using up all I can possibly earn during my intervals of partial recovery.

But that is not what I picked up my pen to say. I saw in a late number of THE TRUTH SEEKER—some time in September—a letter from J. Hacker, that seemed to me of more than usual importance; that is, asking for something for the children of those who hav outgrown the orthodox Christian ideas.

The Liberal papers and writers appear to hav forgotten that "'Tis education forms the common mind," and address all their endeavors to adults. Sunday-school literature literally floods the land, and it is impossible to find a school book that is not full of the "God idea," until, as my youngest daughter remarked, "One would think the Christians themselvs would be disgusted with them." Can't our TRUTH SEEKER hav at least one page devoted to the little folks? Can't some of those illiberal Liberals, who think no person fit to speak who does not use their peculiar lisp, giv place to some one who can teach the growing youth of our land true Liberalism? There are contributors to your paper who are eminently fitted for writing for such a department.

I am more pleased with Jamieson's remarks on the prohibition question than with anything else he has written for a long time, and hope to see the whole Liberal element take the same stand with regard to the temperance movement. Liberals cannot afford to join the whisky ring. The world looks for better things from them.

LaRoy Sunderland proves more than he intends to in his article on the "wire question." Such things as he reports to hav seen and heard cannot be laughed or sneered down. Facts must be accepted, no matter whether we wish to or not. Because we wish a thing were not true does not prove it false. Those Materialists who denounce the Spiritualists most unsparingly, and say they ought not to be allowed to express their ideas through the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER, are the ones who invariably make the most whine over the intolerance of the churches. "Allow that ye do," would be a good motto for them to learn.

One writer, in speaking of the impression the communion ceremony made upon his child, reminds me of one of my own children. When her father was an Adventist minister he was called upon to immerse in baptism a lot of converts one cold November day. I had to change the robes on the women, and of course got as wet as though I too had been in the river. We had three miles to ride before we got home, and our clothes were frozen stiff upon us. Our three-year-old daughter looked us all over and asked, "Papa, what you been doing in the water?" He replied, "I hav been baptizing some folks." She asked, "What's baptizing?" He told her as well as he could. She thought about it for a while, and then came to me and said, "Mama, who told papa to baptize folks?" I sent her to him for an answer, and he told her, "God commanded it" for the salvation from sin. She wanted to know if there was no other way to be saved, and he said, "No, my child; it is the only way." She took another little while to think about it, and then went and put her elbows on his knee, and looking squarely into his face, said, "Papa, I'll risk it." She is now 28 years of age, has three babies of her own, and says she is still inclined to "risk it."

But this is more than I intended to write. I am sorry Mrs. Bennett has been obliged to retire from the office, as I hoped she would be able to stay for years to come. Wishing unbounded success to the paper, I am Respectfully, ELVIRA L. HULL.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Full River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell,
Livs longest though he soonest die."

Dear Children: Because we love you and are deeply interested in your welfare, we hav undertaken to make for you, from week to week, a little mental picnic. While your papas and mammas gather round the table and discuss the sober questions of theology, politics, and philosophy, we, dear children, will, in our own corner, talk of things as we see them, sing with the birds, laugh with the merry voices of nature, cry when we cannot help it, and gather strength and knowledge from all healthful sources. Thus, I trust, we shall grow, unfold, and develop as truly and beautifully as the lovely flowers that bud and blossom at our feet, and shed their perfume upon the air we breathe. To the end that you may be instructed, entertained, and benefited, this department is opened, and it shall be our aim to make it one of the sunniest and cosiest of corners, where all the great, as well as small, shall delight to linger, and where everybody shall find a loving and most cordial welcome.

Susan H. Wixon.

Ten Little Waiting-Maids.

"Now, let us all go in the barn and play at housekeeping. It will be such fun! Come on." And away the four girls ran—Jennie, Isabel, Emma, and Hattie.

Farmer Thompson's barn was large and airy, and the mow was full of hay. The horses and the oxen were in their stalls, for they were not working that day; and there were two of the cunningest little baby cows—a little brown bossy and a white and red one, cuddled up, each in her own little pen. They hopped up, quickly, when the children came in, and snatched at their fingers, and bobbed their heads against them in a way that made the girls laugh merrily, while the oxen, with their great, wise-looking eyes, seemed to say, "We're glad to see you," as they crunched and munched at the hay in the manger. The horses shook their heads and stamped their feet, and whinnied with delight. "That's the way horses talk, you know," said Isabel, Mr. Thompson's daughter, who was entertaining her young school friends.

"Yes; but you can't understand what they say, can you?" inquired Hattie.

"Of course; Old Whitey, there, says, 'Hello, Belle! giv me a bite of your apple!'" and she reached out her half-eaten apple, which the horse took from her hand and ate with apparent relish.

"Oh, I tell you, horses know a sight—almost as much as folks. And oxen are not so stupid as you might think. There's a great deal—lots of real human character, my papa says, in the animals, if you only try to understand them."

"Certainly," said Jennie, "they are like us, and we are like them in some respects, for we ourselvs are only animals of a higher type, I suppose, because we are governed by reason—or we ought to be—and these animals are guided by instinct."

"Oh, my! oh, sakes alive! Look in this barrel. O Isabel, did you know they were here?—three, four, five little kittens! Bless their little hearts—why, they havn't got their eyes open!" screamed Emma.

"I saw them this morning. I don't think they're very pretty, but maybe they'll grow up handsome." And Isabel passed the kittens around for inspection.

"But come, let us play housekeeping now; and, Jennie, you be the mother, because you are the oldest and biggest."

"If I am the mother," remarked Jennie, "my little girls will come away from those kittens immediately. They will come in the house—which is, for the time being, the hay-rick—and take their patch-work."

They all clambered into the hay-rick—a big wagon with high railing all around, used to bring in hay. I said all, but Emma Kingsley lingered near the barrel that contained the kittens.

"O you darlings!" she exclaimed; and immediately after, she shrieked, "Oh! Ow! ow-w! you nasty old cat, you!"

"What's the matter?" inquired Mother Jennie.

"The old cat scratched me—look! It bleeds—ow! The horrid old kittens!"

"Just now they were 'little darlings.' The cat is neither old nor nasty; but you, my daughter, hav shown a bad temper—equally as bad as the temper of the cat. You were disobedient, too, in not obeying your Mother Jennie, when she called you in. I hope my daughter will try to correct her temper, and be obedient in future. Will she?"

"Yes, Mother Jennie; she will try."

The girls were greatly pleased at this circumstance.

"But my real mamma wouldn't hav spoken so," said Emma.

"How would she hav spoken?" asked Hattie.

"She would hav said, 'Come in here, you torment; come along, before I wring your neck!'"

"She wouldn't do that, though," laughed Isabel.

"Of course not; that is only her way of talking."

"If I should speak my mind, I should say it is a very poor way. I hav no mother, but my Aunt Alice, who has brought me up so far, never speaks like that," remarked Jennie. "But take your patch-work now," she continued; "and while you are working I will talk."

"Will you tell us a story? Oh, do!" exclaimed all, in a breath.

"I'll tell you about the air. Papa told me last evening, and I'll tell it to you."

"Oh, air isn't anything," said Hattie, pouting.

"Isn't it? We couldn't liv without it; we couldn't breathe."

"Truly?"

"Truly; the air is made of two substances, gases, they call them, and their names are oxygen and nitrogen. There are other substances in it, but these two are the principal ones, and, it is that which is called oxygen that makes us liv, and if we could not breath it we would die."

"Right off?"

Yes; right off. The oxygen makes the blood red and beautiful, like the rose that blooms in Isabel's cheeks. The plants breathe, too; they get oxygen in the shape of carbonic acid gas, my papa says; they draw it out of the soil, and then the underneath part of the leaves givs back the real oxygen to the air again. The animals get lots of it when they nibble the grasses and leaves, and they giv out from their mouths carbonic acid gas to the plants, for that is their principal food. So it is a fair giv and take, you see.

"Out here in the country the air is pure and fresh, because all the oxygen that belongs to it is not used up as it is in cities. Papa says that, in cities, there are so many people living close together, so many stores, and houses, markets, and manufactories, so many sewers and gas pipes, so much smoke, so many distilleries, mills, tobacco shops, and so many bad breaths, that the oxygen gets spoiled or used up."

"I suppose," said Emma, "that is why my cousin Jim was so pale when he came to our house this summer? He livs in the city."

"Perhaps so; papa says they do appear pale and delicate in cities, because they hav impure air to breathe, and they get dissipated; that means bad and naughty, because the system craves something to supply the waste, and then some will drink intoxicating liquors. Now, as your sewing is done, that is, you hav sewed two squares, we will all go and play in the pure, sweet air."

"Here, button my shoe, mother Jennie, please," and Emma put her foot in Jennie's lap.

"No, my dear, you hav ten little waiting-maids, all your own, and they will attend to your shoes."

"Ten little waiting-maids!"

"Yes, ten. You hav each ten little waiting-maids given you on purpose to button and unbutton shoes and dresses. They are to wait upon you, and do your bidding. You should be ashamed to ask any one to wait upon you, when you are constantly attended by these nimble little waiters, for they never leave you for an instant. They can not only wait upon you, but they can be very helpful to your mammas and papas."

"We do not understand, truly, what you mean. We do not see any waiting-maids, Jennie. Where are they?"

"Hold up your two hands."

"Oh! you mean fingers and thumbs, don't you?"

"Yes, certainly."

"What a funny idea."

"But it is splendid. O Jennie, I think you are just elegant. Who else would hav thought of that—ten little waiting maids! Four of us girls—forty waiting maids! My!"

"But they must be made useful, or else they are of no account—that's what Aunt Alice says."

"But suppose they are naughty, and won't mind, nor be useful, what then?" asked Isabel.

"Why, then, you must get somebody to tie them up with black strings until you feel that they will be good and useful, and will mind all that is told them."

Just then a great stone came whack against the barn, and startled one little bossy from her sleep; and she jumped up, toddling about on her weak and slender limbs.

"Oh, that's only our Tom," said Isabel, laughing. "He is going to drive up the cows, and he wants to let us know it, so we can wait and see him milk them when he comes. Tom is bashful, but he is a good boy. Old Brindle kicked over the pail yesterday when he was milking in the morning. But she didn't mean to do it, and she looked real sorry, Tom said. Maybe he will let us learn to milk, and then our waiting maids will be ——"

"Ten little milkmaids," said Hattie.

Freethought Works for Children.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles.

Price, 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages, $1.25.

Golden Throne. By Samuel P. Putnam. Author of Prometheus, Gottlieb, Ingersoll and Jesus. A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future. $1.00.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 15 cents.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball. 25 cents.

Alamontada the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by Ira G. Mosher, L.L.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

THE

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

TO THE LIBERAL PUBLIC.

Volume two of the Freethinker's Magazine and Freethought Directory will contain six numbers, of sixty-four pages each, and will be published on the following months of next year: January, March, May, July, September, and November. Each number will be ready for mailing on the 25th of the month previous to its date of issue promptly, and in every respect will be an improvement on the first volume.

The departments for the next volume will be "Editorial," "Communicated," "All Sorts," "Extracts from Letters," "Freethought Directory," "Business Department," and "Advertisments."

The "Extracts from Letters" department will be a very interesting feature of the magazine. The editor will select a few lines from the letters of correspondents—who write to him—such as he thinks will be interesting to the reader.

And we earnestly request our friends to continue to forward the names of out-spoken Freethinkers for the Freethought Directory. The charge for the first insertion of a name and post-office address will be twenty-five cents; after that, nothing.

The subscription price for a year is $1.50; for one one month, 25 cents. Five nnmbers will be sent to one address for a year for seven dollars; for one month, one dollar. From our last year's experience we feel confident that the Freethought public will giv us a generous patronage.

2t45 H. L. GREEN, Salamanca, N. Y.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The Liberal Hymn-Book contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Sienker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound, Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.

BY W. STEWART ROSS.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

HOMEOPATHIC LIBRARY OF SCIENCE.

In paper covers. Two cents each additional for postage.

Price, 15 Cents Each Number.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy. With numerous illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. / No. 12. The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S.

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Thirty-two illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity. Sixty illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

Note.—The preceding numbers are 4to form—like Harpers' Franklin Square Library. The numbers which follow are 8vo., the size of Harpers' Monthly.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford Univ.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.

No. 30. / No. 31. The Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By Prof. John Tyndall.

Poetry.

The Last Prayer.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will giv you rest."

In the silent, star-lit morning a youth knelt down alone
On what he deemed the earthward step of God's eternal throne.
He had turned aside from churches—turned sick at heart away
From the tawdry, gilded shrines where men adored a God of clay.
He had turned from priest and pulpit, death-weary of the din
That rang round rival altars—fair without, all foul within.
He had closed the blood-stained Bible, death-struck with dumb despair.
He had fled the ways of Christian men, for God was never there.
He had left the busy cities and the crowded Southern lands
To seek the God of Nature in the house not made with hands.

A weird, wild waste of moorland lay sleeping 'neath the rays
Of the thousand crystal star-beams that lit the etherways.
Far away across the heather, in the shadow-haunted West,
Gleamed the dimly-shining billows as they rushed o'er ocean's breast.
Eastward rose a bare, bleek hill-crest, crowned with rock and boulder-stone,
Flecked here and there with snow-drifts, here and there with gorse o'ergrown.
Northward moorland rose o'er moorland far away into the night,
Where to the stars one giant-peak upreared its lonely hight.
Southward o'er a wooded valley, 'mid a wrack of broken cloud,
Gleamed the new moon's fitful glances, like dreams through slumber's shroud.

Here to this solemn temple did the weary wanderer come
To breathe one prayer for Faith and Love ere Hope in Doubt grew dumb.
He knelt and prayed with pallid lips and wan and sleepless eyes,
And raised his trembling, icy hands up to the silent skies.
"O thou," he cried, "if thou art God; if thou hast ear to hear;
If thou hast help for human woe, or hope to giv for fear,
Look down, O God! upon me, for I hav sought thee long,
And yearning makes the heart grow faint, and doubts upon me throng.
Great God of truth, if thou art truth, Oh, take this gloom away,
And through the breaking cloud of Doubt shed Faith's celestial ray.
Lo! I hav loved and sought thee long, in fasting and in prayer;
Alas, I hav not found thee, and Faith dies in Despair!
Here lie thy works around me, beneath me and above;
Lo! thou Last given me all of these, and yet denied thy love!
God of the ether-realms of light, God of the star-strewn Space,
Omnipotent, All-merciful, grant me but one last grace.
I ask no earthly blessing, no mansion in the sky;
Let me, O God! once more believe—then trustful let me die.
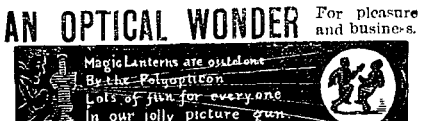
Lo! I hav labored long time, weary and sore oppressed;
Lo! I am heavy laden—speak, Lord, and giv me rest."



. . . . . .

The cloud-wrack rose, the wan moon sank, the dim stars, one by one,
Paled in the growing twilight—shrank from the coming Sun.
Round the distant mountain-summit shone a newborn roseate glow,
Like an angel-presence watching o'er the sleeping world below.
Still knelt the youth; but now no more his prayer the silence broke;
The lips were mute, the hands unclasped, and Hope no longer spoke.
The Love-Star paled—nor cold blue sky nor earth an answer gave;
And fainting Faith sank dying then down to a nameless grave.
The strife was o'er, the love was dead—he rose from the frozen sod,
Stood dumb one awful moment, then spake, THERE IS NO GOD!
Hence hope of heaven—delusiv dream! Lo! I hav loved too well.
Hence hunting shadow-shape of God! hence feverdream of hell!
Farewell, ye wasted years of faith! Hail better, nobler lot!
Hail work and strife in the Field of Life, where no fiend is of fear begot!
Lo! God is dead, and the dream is done which in ignorance began;
And Knowledge givs for the love of God the love and the faith of MAN!

LARA. (Secular Review).

AN OPTICAL WONDER

For pleasure and business.

A NEW, original, cheap lantern, for projecting and enlarging photographs, chromo cards, opaque pictures and objects. Works like magic, and delights and mystifies everybody. Send for our full and free descriptive circular
M. HILL PUB. CO., 129 East 28th St., New York.

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT FREE!

WITH THE

Freethinkers' Badge Pin.

This badge is adapted for the use of all classes of Freethinkers, "Universal Mental Liberty"—the basis of all liberty—the one broad and common platform that Liberals of all shades of opinion are in harmony with, being its device. The cut shows the design and size, but not its beauty. Solid gold, 18k, double thick, $4.00; solid gold 10k, $1.75. Postage paid and packages registered.

9 999 ORDERS WANTED! Through this Munificent Offer.

A 50 cent NEW YEAR'S GIFT with each $1.75 badge, and a $1.50 girt with each $4.00 badge. Orders entered on my book in the order in which they are received, and to each hundredth order a GRAND GIFT worth $13. Badge and gift to different addresses if desired. Descriptiv circular of badge free. Remit by post-office money order or registered letter. Mention this paper.

Address the badge originator and patentee,
LUCY L. CHURCHILL,
2t44eow West Richfield, Summit Co., Ohio.

N.B. This offer only holds good till Dec. 10, 1883.

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS

BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts. For sale at this office.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, Clinton Pl., N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By Prof. John Tyndall. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50

II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Esq. 12m ..... Cloth, 1 50

III. Foods. By Edward Smith.....Cloth, 1 75

IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 12mo.....Cloth; 1 50

V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 50

VI. The New Chemistry, By Prof. Josiah C. Cooke, Jr. of Harvard University. 12mo.....Cloth, 2 00

VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Balfour Stewart. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 12mo. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1 75

IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M. D. 12mo .....Cloth, 1 50

X. The Science of Law. By Prof. Sheldon Amos. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 75

XI. Animal Mechanism. A Treatise on Terrestrial and Aerial Locomotion. By E. J Marey. With 117 Illustrations. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 75

XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By John William Draper. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 50

XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 2 00

XV. Fungi: their Nature and Uses. By M. C Cooke. Edited by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XVI. The Life and Growth of Language; an Outline of Linguistic Science. By Wm. Dwight Whitney. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XVII. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons. 12mo.....Cloth. 1 75

XVIII. The Nature of Light, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel. With 188 Illustrations, and a Plate of Spectra in Chromolithography. 12mo....Cloth, 2 00

XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesamates. By P. J. Van Beneden. With 83 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XX. On Fermentation. By P. Schutzenberger. With 28 Illustrations. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Prof. Bernstein, of the University of Halle. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 75

XXII. The Theory of Sound its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J Norman Lockyer. Illustrated. 12mo.....Cloth, 2 50

XXIV. A History of the Growth of the Steam-Engine. By Robert H. Thurston With 193 Illustrations. 12mo.....Cloth, 2 50

XXV Education as a Science. By Alexander Bain. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 75

XXVI. Modern Chromatics with Applications to Art and Industry. By Ogden N Rood. With 130 Illustrations 12mo .....Cloth, 2 00

XXVII The Human Species. By A. de Quatrefages, Professor of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History, Paris 12mo.....Cloth, 2 00

XXVIII. The Crayfish; an Introduction to the Study of Zoology By Prof. T. H. Huxley. With 82 Illustrations. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 75

XXIX The Atomic Theory. By Ad. Wurtz, Membre de l'Institut, etc. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 50

XXX. Animal Life as Affected by the Natural Conditions of Existence. By Karl Semper, Professor of the University of Wurzburg. With 2 Maps and 106 Woodcuts. 12mo.....Cloth, 2 00

XXXI. Light: An Exposition of the Principles of Monochromatic and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, author of "Elements of Geology," etc. With Illustrations. 2mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XXXII. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. J. Rosenthal, Professor of Physiology at the University of Erlangen. With 75 Woodcuts. 2mo..... .....Cloth, 1 50

XXXIII. Illusions. A Psychological Study. By James Sully. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XXXIV. The Sun. By C. A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Astronomy in the College of New Jersey. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXXV. Volcanoes: What they Are and what they Teach. By J. W. Judd, Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines. With 96 Illustrations. 12mo.....Cloth, 2 00

XXXVI. Suicide: An Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics. By Henry Morselli, M D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXXVII. The Formation of Vegetable Mould, through the Action of Worms. With Observations on their Habits. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXXVIII. The Concepts and Theories of Modern Physics. By J. B. Stallo. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 75

XXXIX. The Brain and its Functions. By J. Luys, Physician to the Hospice de la Salpetriere. 12mo..... .....Cloth, 1 50

XL. Myth and Science: An Essay. By Tito Vignoli. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XLI. Diseases of the Memory: An Essay in the Positive Psychology By T. H. Ribot, author of "Heredity." From the French, by William Huntington Smith. 12mo.....Cloth, 1 50

XLII. Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., F R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., etc 12mo.....Cloth. 2 00

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS FINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.
A. ATWOOD, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

HAV YOU READ IT?

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL.

THE DANISH CURE EXPLAINED

BY WILHELMINE D. SCHOTT,

Practitioner of the Danish Cure.

WITH PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; large type, widely spaced; extra cloth, black and gold side and back stamps; 12mo., 319 pp.; $1.50.

A VERY APPROPRIATE GIFT BOOK.

It tells you what physicians should tell their patients, but do not: How to avoid contracting "doctors' bills;" how to hav good health without taking medicins. Hints on every subject pertaining to the health of women and children.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to giv a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick. She considers Animal Electricity, used as directed in this book, a very important curativ agent.

Although written primarily for women, this book will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, Nature will remove the difficulty without other aid.

Send to THE TRUTH SEEKER for circular and contents.

Photographs of T. Winter,

The Great Western Materialist, now on sale at 265 West Eighth street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Card size, 50 cents; cabinet size, $1. Mailed to address on prepayment. 4t43

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR

OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,

STYLED

Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland. Me.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

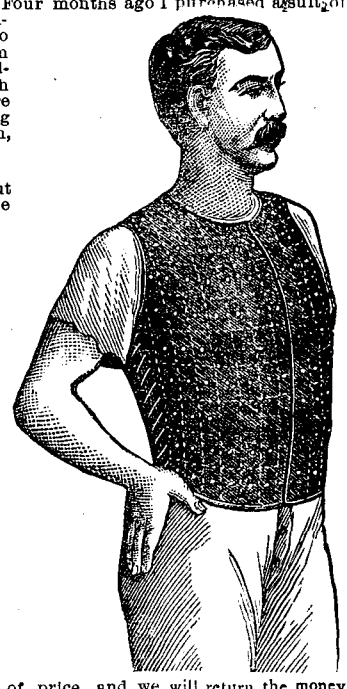
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

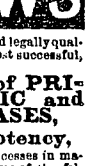
Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6m 15

DR. FELLOWS

HOPE



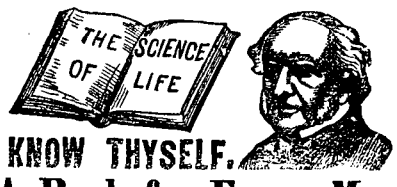
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in out. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, as proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now. Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y33

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. W. Va.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

50 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

G. A. Lomas, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

SCIENCE is the handmaid to knowledge; science has done more to impart true knowledge to mankind than all other agencies combined. Demonstrated science may be regarded as the only true source of knowledge—it is knowledge.—D. M. Bennett.

A DIRGE.

With pallid cheeks and wringing hands,
And dusky garments sad and sere,
The weary winds from Northern lands
Hav come to sob at Autumn's bier;
Upon her robe of brilliant dyes,
Behold, in chilly splendor lies
The tribute of a frozen tear.

Come, Winter, come and drop the pall
That only thou knowst how to spread;
In tender silence let it fall
In flawless folds from foot to head;
Within our heart's most sacred shrine,
And guarded by a love divine,
Shall liv the memory of the dead!

—Samuel Minturn Peck.

AS in a body when the blood is fresh, the spirits pure and vigorous, not only to vital but to rational faculties, and there in the acutest and pertest operations of wit and subtilty, it argues in what good plight and constitution the body is; so when the cheerfulness of the people is so sprightly up, as it has not only wherewith to guard well its own freedom and safety, but to spare and to bestow upon the solidest and sublimest points of controversy, and new invention, it betokens us not degenerated, nor drooping to a faded decay, by casting off the old and wrinkled skin of corruption to outliv these pangs, and wax young again, entering the glorious ways of truth and prosperous virtue, destined to become great and honorable in these latter ages. Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after a sleep and shaking her invincible locks; methinks I see her as an eagle nursing her mighty youth and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full midday beam, purging and unscaling her long abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance; while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about, amazed at what she means, and in their curious gabble would prognosticate a year of sects and schisms.—Milton's Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

WERE there no advantage to be reaped from the study of philosophy, beyond the gratification of an innocent curiosity, yet ought not even this to be despised; as being an accession to those few safe and harmless pleasures which are bestowed on the human race. The sweetest and most inoffensiv path of life leads through the avenues of science and learning; and whoever can either remove any obstructions in this way or open up any new prospect, ought so far to be esteemed a benefactor to mankind. And though these researches may appear painful and fatiguing, it is with some minds as with some bodies, while being endowed with vigorous and florid health, require severe exercise, and reap a pleasure from what, to the generality of mankind, may seem burdensome and laborious. Obscurity, indeed, is painful to the mind as well as to the eye; but en fumer dan lucem—to bring light from obscurity by whatever labor, must needs be delightful and rejoicing.—Hume's Essays.

MR. THOMSON'S poem, "A Voice from the Nile," has his usual merits and defects. Each line might be criticised, but the general impression of his melancholy monotone is very impressiv. Old Nile exults in his durability, as compared with the ephemeral stability of man, who changes his language, and even his creed, while the river flows on forever. Nile has seen the old creed of Egypt, and the Greek creed of the Ptolemies, and the Christianity of Cyril, and the faith of Mohammed, and still flows on, making and fertilizing Egypt as of yore;

So the men change along my changeless stream,
Aud change their faiths; but I yield all alike
Sweet water for their drinking, sweet as wine,
And pure, sweet water for their lustral rites:
And thirty generations of my corn
Outlast a generation of my men,
And thirty generations of my men
Outlast a generation of their gods.
O admirable, pitiable man—
My child, yet alien in my family!

One cannot forget, nevertheless, that, as Louis Blanc said, "Edifices hav only duration; it is ruins that hav eternity." The thing which can change for the better is, in that capacity, nobler than the water which can but remain the same.—London Spectator.

GIVING alms to common beggars is naturally praised, because it seems to carry relief to the distressed and indigent; but when we observe the encouragement thence arising to idleness and debauchery, we suspect that species of charity rather a weakness [if not a crime] than a virtue. . . . Liberality in princes is regarded as a mark of beneficence; but when it occurs that the homely bread of the honest and industrious is often thereby converted into delicious cater for the idle and the prodigal, we soon retract our idle praises. The regrets of a prince, for having lost a day, were noble and generous; but had he intended to hav spent it in acts of generosity to his greedy courtiers, it was better lost than misemployed after that manner.—Hume's Principles of Morals.

GIV a man good books and you make him a denizen of all nations—a contemporary of all ages. The world has been created for him. It is hardly possible but the character should take a higher and better tone from the constant habit of associating in thought with a class of thinkers, to say the least of it, above the average of humanity. It is morally impossible but the manners should take a tinge of good breeding and civilization from having constantly before one's eyes the way in which the best bred and best informed men hav talked and conducted themselvs in their intercourse with each other. There is a gentle, but perfectly irresistible, coercion in a habit of reading, well directed, over the whole tenor of a man's character and conduct, which is not the less effectual because it works insensibly and because it is really the last thing he dreams of.—Sir John Herschel.

Odds and Ends.

THE Mississippi river is very low, and cannot leave its bed.

THERE is a farmer in Pittsburg mean enough to call his daughter Misery, because she loves company.

MISS A. (to Miss B., who is accompanied by a little dog with a stumpy tail): "I beg pardon; does this sweet little bob-tail belong to you?" Miss B.: "Oh, no, miss, that is the dog's."

WE read in an exchange of a young lady having been made crazy by a sudden kiss. This should teach young ladies to be constantly expecting something of that kind, and to be prepared for it when it comes.

PROFESSOR to class in surgery: "The right leg of the patient, as you see, is shorter than the left, in consequence of which he limps. Now, what would you do in a case of this kind?" Bright student: "Limp, too."

A LITTLE fellow lately asked his parents to take him to church with them. They said he must wait till he was older. "Well," was his shrewd suggestion in response, "you'd better take me now, for when I get bigger I may not want to go."

A CHINAMAN who was called as a witness in Queensland was asked how he would be sworn, when he replied, "Me no care; clack 'im saucer, kill 'im hen, blow out 'im matchee, smell 'im book, allee samee." He was allowed to smell 'im book."

AN English country paper contains the following curious instance of mispunctuation: "Lord Palmerston then entered on his head, a white hat upon his feet, large but well-polished boots upon his brow, a dark cloud in his hand, his faithful walking-stick in his eye, a menacing glare saying nothing."

A COMMERCIAL traveler, having left a shirt at an inn, wrote to the chambermaid to forward it to him. This produced the following:

"I hope, dear sir, you'll not feel hurt,
I'll frankly tell you all about it;
I've made a shift with your old shirt,
And you must make a shift without it."

THE victory was won, and General Wolfe lay dying on the Heights of Abraham. Hearing the shouts of the soldiers, "They fly! they fly!" the general stood on his elbow and anxiously asked, "Who fly?" "Hoss fly," replied the sergeant near by, and Wolfe, recognizing the forerunner of the Amerlean paragrapher, was glad to lie down and die before the batch of 1883 came along.

A FEW days ago a lady, with a little girl just at that age where children hav an idea that they hav a right to say what they please and to whom they please, took lodgings at a certain Houston boarding-house, where there was also stopping a young man a little after the dude order. At the dinner table this young man, seeking to make himself as agreeable as possible, began a conversation with the little girl by asking her, "Where were you born, honey?" "What do you want to know that for?" "Oh, I just wanted to know where you came from. Where were you born?" "Well, I'll tell you if you want to know so bad. I was born in the bed." "Oh, no, I don't mean that," explained the young man. "I want to know where you was born." "I was born in the bed, I tell you, and that's enough for you to know!" The laugh went round the table at the young man's expense.

IN THE FALL.

In the fall the little school-boy
Dreams about his airy sled;
In the fall the golden leaflet
Makes the cow a pleasant bed.

In the fall within the forest
Not a happy robin toots;
In the fall the merry farmer
Buys a pair of cowhide boots.

In the fall the politician
Shakes the hand of every one;
In the fall the happy urchin
Blows his thumb off with a gun.

In the fall the largest bullock
At the fair receives the prize;
In the fall the farmer's fancy
Turns to thoughts of pumpkin-pies.

In the fall the comic lecture
Blossoms sweetly in the land;
In the fall we hear the tooting
Of no roaming German band.

A BOGUS tiger: The Great Inter-Oshun Syclopian Sircus was in town, and they had a Minagery and the tiger got loos and the people all over town got scart and there was dead oodles of fun and climbing out of the way. Old man mcEvans he herd of it but he wasn't scart because he livs in the other end of town and he didnt think no tiger wood go out there. He was sleeping on his galry and Mira was reeding a book up-stairs when Jim Hinkle & Sam Richie saw them and they put up a Job on the old man. They coaxt his big yeller dog round to the back of the hous with a peece of pie—and they had black paint in a buket and they painted black stripes on the dog and Sam wanted to call it a Zebra but Jim said theyd pretend it was a tiger. When theyd got it all reddy they throo the peece of pie on the old mans nee when he was sleeping on the galry and the pie woke him up and he saw the yeller dog that he thot was a tiger coming for him and he yelled polesce and he thot his end had come and Mira she screemed fire and Jim went to run away and he was shouting Mad Tiger and he fell down and Sam triped over him and spild the paint on his head and the naybors came out with shot-guns and blazed away at the tiger and shot a street car the first blaze and a man kild the tiger, not the sure enough tiger you no, but the yeller dog with a fense rale on the hed; and when they found that it was no tiger but mcEvanses dog you shood hav seen poor old man mcEvans pranze around and he just made the air bloo. It beat the sircus but it was a shame for the dog is ded and Mira sez her harts broke and the old man split his close and hes now laying for them boys and he sez when he catches them he'll put enuff stripes on them to make a tiger ashamed of hisself.

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker,

Founded by D. M. Bennett.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It givs all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and givs everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winsted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

TERMS FOR BALANCE OF YEAR:

To all who will settle all arrearages and pay for the year 1884 in advance, we will allow the price for 1884 to be the same as for 1883—$2.50.

To all who renew for one year from next January, or thereafter, before January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To all new subscribers who send in their subscriptions previous to January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

TERMS FOR 1884:

Single subscription, - - -	$3 00
One subscription two years, -	5 00
Two new subscribers, - -	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance, -	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance, -	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance, -	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, -	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3), will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other Liberal paper. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York City.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movements; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

Crimes of Preachers

IN THE

UNITED STATES AND CANADA,

From May, 1876 to May, 1883.

THIRD EDITION.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS, AND WITH PREVIOUS TRANSLATIONS DILIGENTLY COMPARED AND REVISED.

By M. E. BILLINGS,

AUTHOR OF

"PREVENTION OF CRIME," ETC., "UNHOLY BIBLE," "HOLY MEN AND WOMEN OF THE BIBLE," "HOLY CROSS," AND MANY OTHER LIBERAL WORKS.

"By their fruits shall ye know them! Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

"It is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved. It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call."—EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER.

God and the State.

BY

MICHAEL BAKOUNINE

Founder of Nihilism and Apostle of Anarchy.

WITH A PREFACE BY
CARLO CAFIERO AND ELISEE RECLUS.

Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER,
(Editor of Liberty.)

52 pages, octavo. Price 15 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PLAIN HOME TALK,

EMBRACING

Medical Common Sense.

BY E. B. FOOTE, M.D.

This book is a plain talk about the human system, the habits of men and women, the causes and prevention of disease, our sexual relations and social natures. It is medical common sense applied to causes, prevention, and cure of chronic diseases, the natural relations of men and women to each other, society, love, marriage, parentage etc. Embellished with two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.
33 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 45. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 17, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

An Irish parish priest, Father Douey, of Loughrea, on removing to another parish, sold his farm to one of his old flock named Dervin. The new priest, Father Callahan, fancied it, and, the purchaser being unwilling to giv it up, large numbers of people collected and stoned Dervin out of the place, shouting that the priest should hav the land. The military were called out and arrests made. The farmers sided with Dervin.

The Romans under the republic were prohibitionists after a fashion. Men of honorable family were forbid by law to drink wine before the age of thirty, or to drink to excess; while for women of any condition, free or slave, to touch wine except on some solemn occasion, as a sacrifice, was an offense visited by severe penalties. Hence originated the custom of girls kissing their parents on their lips as a means of discovery whether they had been sampling the contents of the family amphoræ. But the law, as affecting women, was in time so far modified that they were permitted to drink wine made from boiled must or raisins.

A man known to other men as Jeremiah Dwyer, and to himself as "The Prophet," was arrested in Australia, a week or two ago, on a charge of theft. Jerry in his defense casually mentioned "that he was the representativ of no less than twelve lost tribes and that all the churches were against him, and that he was deputed by the Lord to begin a crusade against them with burning coals." According to this statement, there are two more lost tribes. So that all the tribes are lost. We always thought they would be. But we don't wonder now why prophets were unpopular in Judea. Jerry is now in the Gladesville Asylum. These are the days of little faith.—Bulletin.

A celebrated German professor, Gherke, has put forward a new origin of the human race. He says that the aboriginal Americans and the people of the north of Europe are descended from bears. Toward the end of the glacial season these bears floated south on icebergs. They could not return, and were forced to make the best of their quarters. Gradually they shed their furry coat, and in order to keep one pair of feet dry they walked on their hind legs. After the lapse of innumerable years these bears, undergoing the process of modification, ultimately were developed in the form of a man. The professor bases his theory or argument on structural similarities between the man and the bear.

Russia appears to be losing her pre-eminence as the granary of Europe in face of such competing countries as America and India, but whether or not she can yet claim to be a great manufacturing country may be seen from the fact that, according to statistics lately compiled in the Ministry of Finance, there are just 17,176 large manufactories and works of all kinds in the fifty-two provinces—an extent of land as big as the rest of Europe—with not more than 800,000 work people employed. This total does not include 15,272 small establishments of the peasants of not more than five workers to each, where chiefly articles of domestic use are wrought, and has been calculated for the purpose of regulating infant and female labor in works and factories.

The following is a true story if Peck's Sun is a veracious journal: "Dr. Miller, of Oconomowoe, is a great joker. The local newspawer announced recently that the doctor had found a chicken thief on his premises one night, and let him go with a reprimand, after identifying him. The doctor was overrun with visitors who wanted to know the name of the thief, but he would not tell. A truly good man came to the doctor and insisted on being told, but the doctor would not giv down the information, when the man asked the doctor why he would not tell. Taking the truly good visitor one side he whispered to him, "It won't do to tell who the chicken thief is, for he is a member of our church." The truly good man went away feeling as though he should burst with curiosity, but the doctor will not giv the thief away."

The wise man's duty, says the Melbourne Bulletin, in all this raging storm of theologic contest—of conflicting dicta and clashing dogmata—is simply to do his duty as an inhabitant of this world. Then, if there be another or other worlds, he who has done his duty here will (the odds are) be best fitted for doing it there. And if there be none other, he will at least hav done what he could; acted like a man, instead of humbugging around in fanciful preparation for a non-existent state of angelhood. Faith in this world, that it is good and may be made better, combined with a resolution to stand or fall by the nobler hypothesis, is better than the bastard faith of the theologian, which is nothing more than a willingness to assent to vague assertions on insufficient evidence. In this sense, Thomas Paine's "The world is my country, to do good my religion," is a pregnant text.

If Jehovah had not proved a cat's-paw to kings, says Saladin in the Secular Review, he would now be of as little account as Odin. Kingcraft has looked down upon the birth and death of many gods. They hav all been useful to it, and it takes care that they hav tremendous longevity and die hard. Do you say that both Christianity and kingcraft are evolutionary phases? I reply that their conjunction is an act of flagitious harlotry, cursing mankind with mental St. Vitus's dance and moral scrofula. If Christianity, adulterously tied to the state, be an evolutionary mode, so toward it are my hate and hostility. It has had the foremost races of the world to work with, and in eighteen hundred years it has left them so that an average dog can well afford to look down upon an average man. "Clyde," the colley, may thank his stars he is not Mr. John Smith, the manikin.

The Bishop of Manchester thinks it was a great pity that "a letter which Mr. Darwin wrote just before his death, when he was enfeebled by disease, and in which he said he could find no evidence for a life beyond the grave, should hav been published." Why? asks Mrs. Besant. In the first place, the letter was written in June, 1879; Darwin died on April 19, 1882; so that Dr. Fraser's "just before" equals nearly three years. Is it right, from the Christian point of view, to make gross misrepresentation of this sort, merely in order to deceive ignorant people into the belief that Mr. Darwin's power of judgment was touched by approaching death when he wrote? After writing that letter, Mr. Darwin published his book on "Worms;" there is little sign of failing power of thought in that book. Dr. Fraser, in dealing with unbelief, seems to lose all sense of truth and honesty.

An old Roman town has been found in Tunis by Lieut. Massenati. The exact spot of the discovery is near Fabella, and it is believed from the extent of the ruins that they form what was once the capital of the island many years before the Christian era. The sight is said to be most impressiv. The remains of a great temple hav been brought to light near the seashore. They are of marble, and of singular architectural richness, composed in parts of huge blocks measuring more than fifty square yards at their base. Immense columns of red and green marble form the eastern entrance, and there is a square inclosure surrounded with white marble friezes, supported by twisted columns. Numbers of statues, sculptured in Egyptian granit, were lying upon the ground, and it was remarked that, while they were all decapitated, not a single head was to be found.

The Richmond Herald has had a discussion with Dr. Henderson. The Herald admits its defeat in this way: Dr. Henderson is a philologist. He knocked us to pieces on our use of the word monopoly. We spoke of the friends of the "new movement" making a monopoly of theological education. But our critical friend says that according to the dictionaries, monopoly means "the wholesale trade in dry goods." After all, we were not so far out of the track, for if these dreary little theological shops, of which Dr. Henderson appears as the champion, should undertake a wholesale trade in theology, they will furnish our ministry with dry goods in abundance, and that of the dryest sort. Upon reflection, we do not thing it worth while to correct our use of the word. Wherever in our editorial we speak of the new movement attempting a monopoly in theological education, just remember that we mean an attempt to run a wholesale trade in dry goods.

The Dean of Bangor, England, speaking the other day at a meeting held to further the establishment of courses of instruction in practical cookery in the elementary schools, said that if he had his own way there would be much less tea drinking among people of all classes. Oatmeal and milk produced strong, hearty, good-tempered men and women, whereas excessiv tea drinking created a generation of nervous, discontented people, who were forever complaining of the existing order of the universe, scolding their neighbors, and sighing after the impossible. In fact, he suspected that over-much tea drinking, by destroying the calmness of the nerves, was acting as a dangerous revolutionary force in England. Tea drinking renewed three or four times a day made men and women feel weak, and the result was that the tea kettle went before the gin bottle, and the physical and nervous weakness that had its origin in the bad cookery of an ignorant wife ended in ruin, intemperance, and disease.

The much-married George Q. Cannon, the Mormon elder who was bounced out of a seat in the last Congress, has been "interviewed" almost daily for a week past. Elder Cannon's expositions of Mormonism, says the Herald, are worth consideration, for he is a representative Mormon and is indicated as the probable successor of John Taylor, the present head of the sect, when that aged sinner follows Brigham Young to a warmer territory than Utah is in winter. Elder Cannon defies the federal government to prevent polygamy, and is sarcastic concerning the failure of the Edmunds law. "We believe that polgyamy is a divine institution," he says; and he adds that the combat is between God and the Mormons on the one side and the Constitution and force of the United States on the other side. "Purity," Elder Cannon declares, is the distinctiv feature of the religious ceremonial of Mormonism. "No ceremony," he says, "can be purer than the marriage in the 'Endowment House.'" If this is so, Mormon manners must hav been cleansed of late or else Elder Cannon's standard of "purity" is peculiar. There are other Mormon elders who hav confessed to the American public that the ceremonies in the "Endowment House" often are filthy beyond description. The costumes worn in them, which Elder Cannon calls "temple clothing," are described by these others as merely shirts and drawers combined into a single garment with some curious emblems wrought upon them, and in Elder John Hyde's time "in the lectures which used to be delivered after the initiations the most disgusting language ever heard was reveled in" and "duties the most secret and sacred were not only plainly but filthily spoken of." "You are under oath and can't tell it," was the customary exhortation of the presiding Mormon dignitary. If all this nastiness has been dispensed with, as Elder Cannon would now hav the public believe, something has been accomplished in the line of decency. A great deal more, to be sure, remains to be achieved in the line of loyalty to the country which owns Utah territory and of obedience to the laws of Congress. Elder Hide asserts that in the endowment "mysteries" Mormons are "sworn to cherish constant enmity toward the United States," "to renounce all allegiance and refuse all submission;" and Elder Cannon's defiance of the United States to prevent polygamy certainly is in the line of this treasonable obligation.

News of the Week.

Ex-Governor Randolph, of New Jersey, died on the 7th.

The Brooklyn Turn Verein celebrated its thirtieth anniversary on the 11th.

Some medical students at Syracuse, N. Y., hav been convicted of grave robbery.

New York saw its first snow for the season on the 12th. Cold weather is prevalent.

The anniversary of the poet Schiller's birth was celebrated by a large number of Germans in this city on Sunday last.

Gen. Butler believes that he was defeated, in his late campaign, by corrupt means. He promises some day to produce the direct evidence.

The London police claim to hav discovered that the recent explosions in the underground railways of that city were the work of New York dynamiters.

Shenandoah, Pa., was swept by fire on the 12th, and $1,000,000 worth of property destroyed. Two hundred and fifty families are reported homeless.

A man at Lynn, Mass., has just beaten the best dumbbell record. He put a fifty-pound dumbbell above his head at arm's length sixty times in succession.

The ivory tusk of a mastodon was unearthed at Painesville, Ohio, on the 10th. The tusk is three feet in diameter and is in a good state of preservation.

The corn crop of the country this year is 1,600,000,000 bushels, which is 40,000,000 less than last year. The potato crop is above the average, amounting to 175,000,000 bushels.

Mortimer Daneher has just died at Derryvane, Minn., aged 121 years. He belonged to a family that was remarkable for the age of its members, the youngest of whom died at eighty.

The district attorney at Troy, N. Y., holds that a divorce granted by a Jewish church tribunal is not legal, and threatens prosecution to a Jew who has obtained such a divorce and contemplates remarriage.

Most of the pastors of this city talked last Sunday about Martin Luther, the 400th anniversary of whose birth came on Saturday, the 10th. Some of them eulogized the great reformer and others criticised him adversely.

One hundred and ten persons were arraigned before the Tombs justice in this city just after election and sentenced for vagrancy. They had been supported for the previous month at the expense of politicians who wished to secure their votes.

Three counterfeiters were arrested in this city on the 11th who were on the point of launching some fifty thousand dollars in counterfeit bonds upon the market. One of the prisoners is Brockway, one of the most skilful and dangerous counterfeiters in the world.

Henry Gilbert, a Christian of great piety and zeal, and a leader of the prayer-meetings at Oxford, N. Y., is in jail at Goshen for burglary. He has been stealing for some time, but has not been suspected by his neighbors, who labored under the mistaken notion that a good Christian is necessarily honest.

Monday, the 26th, is to be celebrated as the centennial anniversary of the British evacuation of New York. The anniversary occurs on the 25th, but as that day is Sunday, it is considered too good, or not good enough, for the occasion. An Evacuation centenary medal has been struck in Philadelphia.

Ammie Cheever was found murdered on his own woodpile, in Dingham, Pa., on Oct. 27th. His grandmother, at Milford, on the forenoon of that day, suddenly arose from her chair and shrieked, "Ammie is killed! Ammie is killed!" She could not be quieted. A few hours later the news of his death was received. It is a curious coincidence.

Communications.

Facts and Fallacies in Regard to the New Testament.

The New Testament is claimed to be the infallible, inspired word of God, miraculously preserved and handed down to us in all its truth and purity, through the special interposition and mercy of God. To question this is regarded as terrible wickedness; to simply imply a doubt will call forth fierce denunciations; to refuse to devoutly believe it is to be regarded as one in whom all goodness, truth, or virtue hath ceased to exist.

Yet it is beyond all question, if the New Testament is not inspired, if it has not been miraculously preserved exactly as God first gave it in the original, if our English version of the four gospels is not perfect and entire—the inspired word of God—then Christianity has no claim to our reverence, more than any other tissue of superstitious fables.

We claim it is the bounden duty of all people, of whatever shade of opinion, to patiently and thoroughly investigate this matter, for it is claimed to affect our present and eternal welfare, and it most certainly does very materially affect our own and our children's happiness in this present world.

While it is generally admitted by Christians that the Old Testament contains much that is undesirable, it is insisted that the New Testament is the revelation of the new and better way; the plan of salvation through Jesus, the only sure hope of immortality, the sole means of securing present peace and eternal joy.

Let us, then, carefully and respectfully examin the claims of the New Testament, and "nothing extenuate nor aught set down in malice," and, to avoid the possibility of prejudice or misrepresentation, confine ourselvs exclusivly to the testimonies of the best accredited and most devout advocates. We will make extracts, quoting the admissions made by advocates of Bible sanctity while laboring to establish its genuinness, and confine our extracts to such works as are in general use, and can be most readily referred to.

Among accepted authorities, none are more relied on than Smith's Bible Dictionary, E. Cone Bissell's "Historic Origin of the Bible," Dean Alford's "How to Study the New Testament," and Mosheim's "Ecclesiastical History."

The original manuscripts of the New Testament:

"It does not appear that any special care was taken in the first age to preserve the books of the New Testament from the various injuries of time, or to insure perfect accuracy of transcription."

"The original copies seem to hav soon perished. It is certainly remarkable that in the controversies at the close of the second century, which often turned upon disputed readings of scripture, no appeal was made to the apostolic originals."

"Partly owing to the destruction in the time of the Diocletian persecution (A.D. 303), but still more from the natural effects of time, no manuscripts of the New Testament of the first three centuries remain."

"Some of the oldest extant were certainly copied from others, which dated from within this period; but as yet no one can be placed further back than the time of Constantine."

"Express statements of readings which are found in some of the most ancient Christian writers are indeed the first direct evidence which we hav, and are consequently of the highest importance. But till the last quarter of the second century this source of information fails us—not only are the remains of Christian literature up to that time extremely scanty, but the practice of verbal quotation from the New Testament was not yet prevalent."

"History affords no trace of the pure apostolic originals" (Smith's Bible Dictionary, Art. New Testament).

"These gospels, so important to the church, hav not come to us in one undisputed form. We hav no authorized copy of them in their original language, so that we may know in what precise words they were originally written. The authorities from which we derive their sacred text are various ancient copies written by hand on parchment. Of the gospels there are more than five hundred of these manuscripts, of various ages, from the fourth century after Christ, to the fifteenth, when printing superseded manual writing for publication of books."

Of these five hundred, and more, no two are in all parts alike; probably in no two of the more ancient can even a few consecutiv verses be found in which all the words agree.

"It is not a word more than the truth to say that the New Testament abounds with errors and inadequate renderings" (Dean Alford's How to Study the New Testament).

Readers, think of these facts, admitted by the highest Christian authorities, and remember the truth of the claims of Christianity depends upon the fidelity of our version of the New Testament to the original manuscripts.

Who can dispute the declaration of Dr. Tischendorf?—"If the New Testament is defectiv the church itself is in error, and must be given up as a deception."

Can the ancient manuscripts be relied on?

"Charges of corrupting the sacred text are urged on both sides with great acrimony. Two chief causes contributed especially to corrupt the text of the gospels—the attempts to harmonize parallel narrativs, and the influence of tradition."

"It is impossible to exactly estimate the number of variations which exist in different copies, but it cannot be less than 120,000."

"Probably there are not more than 1,600 to 2,000 places in which the true reading is a matter of uncertainty" (Smith's Bible Dict., Art. New Testament).

It is admitted there are over sixteen hundred errors or doubtful renderings; yet if we do not reverentially believe the whole of the New Testament, we shall be lost. "He that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi, 16).

How did we obtain our English version of the New Testament, and what are the evidences of its reliability?

"The Latin Vulgate and the Hebrew text of the Old Testament had been published some time before any part of the original Greek of the New Testament. The hymns of Zacharias and the Virgin were appended to a Venetian edition of a psalter of 1486. Eighteen years afterward (1504) the first six chapters of St. John's gospel were added to an edition of the poems of Gregory of Nazianzus, published by 'Aldus'" (Smith's Bible Dict.).

Thus we find the writings of poets and apostles were regarded as of equal sanctity and authority, one as much divinely inspired as the other.

The glory of publishing the first Greek testament is due to Cardinal Ximines. It was published July 10, 1517.

So sacred is the holy Bible that at family devotion, no matter how great the hurry or how long the chapter, it must be read to the end. Many believe the division into chapter and verse is all of divine arrangement.

Yet there was no division of the Bible into chapters and verses until 1240; no punctuation until the sixteenth century. Punctuation was the invention of one Mantius, a printer of Venice. In the early manuscripts there is neither punctuation nor any space between the letters—wordsallruntogetherthus.

Hugo de Santo Caro, a Dominican monk—afterwards Cardinal Hugo Cardinalis—in 1240, made a concordance of the vulgar Latin Bible. There was no division of verses, but A, B, C, D, E, F, G placed in the margin at equal distances.

Rabbi Mordica (Isaac Nathan), about 1430, made a concordance for the Hebrew Bible. He finished the work in 1445. He numbered the divisions as verses.

Vatalibius soon after published the Latin Bible with chapter and verse.

So Jews got division into chapters from Christians. Christians got division into verses from the Jews. Robert Stephens, the famous printer, who died at Geneva, 1559, was the first who made division of the chapters of the New Testament into verses. E. Cone Bissell, in his "Historic Origin of the Bible," says: "The first attempts to translate the Bible into English, like the earliest Saxon versions, were simply metrical paraphrases, often distorting the very facts of scripture."

The whole Bible was first given in English by Wyclif, in 1380. Wyclif was a Roman Catholic priest. The church bitterly denounced his translation as heretical, false, and unreliable.

"In 1428, Pope Martin V. commanded 'Fleming,' bishop of Lincoln, to execute the decree of the council of Constance, that the bones of Wyclif be burnt. This was carried into effect, and the ashes thrown into the Swift."

"Wyclif's translation of the scriptures was made from a translation of Jerome. Even if he had understood Greek, it is not likely that he could hav found in all England a copy of the Greek text accessible from which to make his translation."

"Jerome was born 330, and died 420 A.D. He revised the common Latin translation of the Bible, called the Vulgate."

"It is about 200 years from the death of the apostle John to the first manuscript we hav of the New Testament."

"The Vulgate and the version of Jerome, although regarded as one and the same, were far from being identical. A mixed and corrupt text had sprung up through persistent efforts on the part of Jerome's successors to bring his version into harmony with those which had preceded it, and particularly by importing into it certain terms and expressions from the more ancient versions which Jerome had especially excluded."

"This unauthorized and unwarranted procedure introduced the greatest confusion, from the fact that in the New Testament scripture the Vulgate was not a new translation from any original, but itself a revision of preceding versions brought into supposed harmony with the original Greek."

"Without doubt Wyclif used the text of the Vulgate current in his time" (E. Cone Bissell, Hist. Origin of Bible).

The authorized version really began with William Tyndale, born 1484, one hundred years after the death of Wyclif. Tyndale was ordained priest March 11, 1502; became friar of monastery at Greenwich, 1508. To prove how little Christianity depended on the Bible, we copy the following from E. Cone Bissell's "Historic Origin of the Bible:"

"William Tyndale at the table of his patron, Sir John Walsh, in controversy with a brother Catholic priest, who said, 'It was better to be without God's law than the pope's,' indignantly replied, 'I defy the pope and all his laws; if God will spare my life, ere many years I will cause a boy that drives a plow to know more of the scriptures than the pope does."

"Tyndale, in 1524, fled from England to Hamburg, and lived on ten pounds a year (equal to about $700 at the present time) paid him by Sir Humphrey Mumouth, to pray for the souls of his father and mother."

"Sir Thomas More obtained a special dispensation to be allowed to read the heretical work. He declared the Tyndale version so changed and corrupted from the good and wholesome doctrins of Christ to their own devilish heresies as to be quite another thing."

("Sir Thomas More was one of the most distinguished scholars of his day—the chancellor of King Henry VIII."

("Erasmus wrote of him, 'With More you might imagin yourself in the academy of Plato.' He was steadfast to his convictions of right, and was beheaded July 6, 1535, and met his fate with intrepidity and even cheerfulness."—Cyc. Biblical The. and Eccl. Lit., by Rev. J. McClintock, D.D., and J. Strong, S. T. D. Harper, 1876).

"Emissaries of the prelates seized and burnt all copies of the Bible or any parts of scripture found among the people, and finding this did not suppress it, burnt at the stake the possessors as well as the Bibles."

In 1530 six editions of the New Testament in English had been published from various places on the continent. Three of them were pirated editions on the basis of Tyndale's, and had been carried in shiploads of wheat, bales of goods, and by other methods, to their destinations, and were there covertly distributed.

The surreptitious editions were published by certain Dutch printers at Antwerp merely for the purpose of gain, the text of Tyndale having been boldly appropriated, as also ignorantly mutilated. Another or fourth edition these unscrupulous tradesmen put forth in 1534, on which they employed George Joye, an Englishman, in order that the more prominent errors in former editions might be corrected.

Joye took unwarrantable liberties with the text, and sent it forth as the work of Tyndale himself. Tyndale complained bitterly of this. He writes, "But I neither can nor will suffer any man that he shall go take my translation, correct it without name, and make such changing as I myself durst not do" (E. Cone Bissell, His. Orig. Bible).

The whole Bible in English was given by Coverdale in 1538. Of this version, the "History of the English Bible," page 258, says:

"Westcott, in collating the text of the first epistle of John with the text of Tyndale's version of 1534 has discovered but seventy-one differences. Of these, forty-three are traced to Coverdale's earlier version, seventeen to the Vulgate where Coverdale had not previously followed it, and eleven to other sources. Smoothness of translation had been one of the special aims of Coverdale, sometimes, it is feared, attained at the sacrifice of the higher excellence of scrupulous accuracy."

Mary ascended the throne of England July 6, 1553. Her influence was as bitterly hostil as Edward's had been propitious to the freedom of the scriptures. Not a single copy of the Bible found its way to the press during her sovereignty. The public use of the same in the churches, moreover, was prohibited, and such as were already found there were burnt.

The next version of the New Testament was the Geneva, which made its appearance June 10, 1557. Its chief translator was William Whittingham, who married Calvin's sister. An introduction was written by Calvin. From the beginning this version became pre-eminently the household edition of the Bible, and was immensely popular.

"The New Testament of the completed Bible of 1560 was so much changed from the original version of Whittingham—which is the one printed in Bagster's Hexaple—as to be regarded by some as almost a new recession" (Craik's Hints and Suggest., p. 43).

"In the reign of Charles I., however, Archbishop Laud made the vending, binding, or importation of the book a high commission crime, on the ground that it was opposed to the established order and the version authorized."

"In 1564 Archbishop Parker engaged fifteen learned men, eight of whom were bishops, to make a new version. The reason for this is declared to be that the Geneva version was obviously anti-Episcopal; and the plain defects of the great Bible now became more glaring in the midst of sharp contention, while yet it remained the only Bible really authorized to be read in churches" (E. Cone Bissell, His. Orig. Bible).

Bishop Ellicott says of the work, that it never succeeded in thoroughly commanding the respect of scholars, or in securing the sympathies of the people, maintaining its authority during the forty-three years of its own existence more by external authority than any merit of its own" (Ellicott on Revis., p. 34).

The one fact of special importance in connection with this recession is that it was made, by King James' appointment, the basis of our present authorized version.

The King James's, our present version:

"It is quite likely that James, who exulted in what he called 'kingcraft,' was shrewd enough to see that by a new version of the scriptures, royally sanctioned and patronized, he might the better control the troublesome elements opposed to his supremacy in ecclesiastical matters, and make of it an instrument to perpetuate the same. 'Bancroft'—'my lord of London,' who is probably the one referred to in the preface as chief overseer of the work, was publicly charged at the time with having altered the version on his own sole authority in fourteen places, the rendering of 1 Peter, ii, 13, to the king as supreme being instanced as one of them."

"Whatever else James I. might tolerate, he would not allow any weakening of the doctrin of the supremacy of kings. And no other version of the English Bible betrayed such definit leaning toward that tenet as the one made under his direction" (E. Cone Bissell, His. Orig. Bible).

So far from any divine interposition in the preservation of the New Testament, the truth is not alone admitted, but positivly declared by the most able and reliable advocates of New Testament sanctity, that the originals do not exist—did not even as early as the second century; that hundreds of holy books were written. From among these the four so-called gospels (two of which are not even pretended to hav been written by disciples) are chosen as the most sacred par excellence.

The theory of inspiration is that the books of the New Testament are, in whole, and in every part, every word, historically true, and that they reflect faithfully the life, teaching, and character of Christ; that in them God has revealed himself and his plan of salvation fully to man. To doubt this is to be damned. Let every translator of what are claimed to be the best and most ancient copies of the original manuscripts denounce all other translators as perverting, altering, and interpolating, to suit their own heretical notions.

From the extraordinary claims made, the terrible consequences threatened, namely, eternal damnation to those who do not believe, the New Testament should not alone giv all the evidences of truth and genuinness we demand for other books or histories, but should furnish such abundant, positiv evidence of divine inspiration as would leave no room for doubt.

We find the best accredited, the most learned and highly esteemed Christian historians admit there is no evidence of the genuinness, truth, reliability, or inspiration of any existing version of the New Testament, as a whole. We therefore next propose to briefly examin the claims of each of the four gospels, the characters of the writers and early fathers, and, finally, the much-relied-on claim of internal evidence being their most positiv proof of the divine inspiration of the New Testament scriptures.

Rochester, N. Y. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

Modern Mysticism.

"Mr. Sunderland talks so inconclusivly about those spiritual wires" (David Bruce, Nov. 3d).

Mr. Bruce assumed to hav made a "discovery" unknown to the scientific world. I proved and showed how he was deceived. I told frankly how I myself had plied at these same "wires" for sixty years, and had never succeeded in finding out who was at the other end, either of gods or ghosts. Mr. Bruce still insists that if I try I can discover who is at the other end, as he has done. Yes, indeed; he has discovered by faith. I admit this. And the Christian sees and discovers the holy ghost overshadowing Mary by faith. By the "eye of faith" he sees that old boss devil going about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour.

Now what shall I do more? I admit the miracle, but I do not know the forms of force by which it was wrought. Nor does any other man know how it was done, nor by whom. The invisible does not know how it is done—nay, it has no external eyes, nor ears, nor has it any name, nor does it sustain any relation to me, or to this world, until it comes in contact with the living brain of a human medium which generates all the ideas I get through these modern wires. I hav no faith by which I can see (like Mr. Bruce and the Christians) how an invisibility can be cross-examined. I hav no faith to tell me how, as the Methodist sings, "God is seen by mortal eye." Whereas the eye of Mr. Bruce's faith can "see the unseen" (Heb. xii, 1). He can see how an invisible criminal can be caught; and he ought to arrest a dozen which hav caused the deaths of as many mediums that committed murder and suicide, whom I will name to him if he wants to know. And Mr. Bruce—good man that he is—should inform me by what science known to this world (except the power of faith) I can recognize any spirit as sustaining a legitimate relation with this external world.

I deny that there is any faculty but faith, in any human mind, for knowing what any god or ghost is, or who it is. And Mr. Bruce's reply to the issues I raised in my article of October 20th is sufficient to show that he does not know who is at the other end of the wires. How else am I and my friends to account for his utter failure to notice one of the issues I raised? His spirits are utter know-nothings of this external world, without the brains of a human medium. And, even admitting that they ever did inhabit human bodies like ours, then it follows that death annihilated all the social relations they ever held with this life. Hence they do not belong to this world.

And while I speak of Christianity as a fraud upon human credulity and ignorance, I do not think so of Spiritualism; as this movement, in its trances, is above the trances of the Bible, and the so-called inspiration of its mediumistic speakers is, I believe, superior to that of Abraham, David, Peter, or Paul.

And then, again, we should bear in mind that a very small percentage of modern mediums giv what are called "tests"—scarcely one in a thousand. And it is only of the tests, as to names, dates, and relations, that I speak, as these I hav proved to be fraudulent. All are made by clairvoyance to please, and gratify the parties interested.

It may be stated as a characteristic fact of all the gods and the ghosts, that they know nothing of our sufferings or our wants, without the brains of a priest or a medium. And never since I doffed the Methodist coat hav I attempted to interfere with a Christian's faith; nor since I became satisfied, in 1852, as to the fraud in all the so-called tests of modern mediums, hav I attempted to change the views of any Spiritualists. We are, all of us, on the same footing, as each of us believes what he thinks is true. And I never found any fault with any invisible nondescript for telling me a lie.

Mr. Bruce charges me with having blundered; but I cannot see how it may hav augmented his own faith in the unknown, or his logic as to what I know, when he attempts, as he has done, to depreciate my conclusions by suggesting that my age has incapacitated me for any sound argument. However green he may be, or however old, he has blundered egregiously in what he has stated about my scientific lectures. I never lectured on "Mesmerism." I never believed in that theory, nor approved of its methods. This I can now prove by the testimony of Professor Elizur Wright, a man well known to the Liberal world:

"LaRoy Sunderland is well known as transcending all who hav attempted to explain to us the mysteries of the human mind. No lecturer has ever attracted such crowds or held them by such a spell. No one has ever produced results so magical, doing with no visible means far more than all others hav done with them" (Boston Chronotype, Nov. 10, 1847).

I had, indeed, a similar testimony from Horace Greeley, in New York, and also from editors and my audiences in all the cities where I lectured; and proved by experiment the error of mesmerism and the fraud of Christianity. And I am not willing to believe that many thoughtful, intelligent people who attended my lectures could hav so greatly blundered in understanding their drift as Mr. Bruce seems to hav done. LAROY SUNDERLAND.

Quincy, Mass., Nov. 3, N.E. 108.

Killed by the Spiritualists.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your paper of November 3d, Dr. Robert Ingersoll, in diagnosing the case of the sick state of Ohio, as seen in the returns of the late election, attributes the paralysis of the 9th of October to prohibition. But Dr. Ingersoll is like the doctors who hastened Garfield to his death. He does not understand the case. It was the Russell law that laid out the Republican party on the cooling-board, and put cents on its eyes. The short-sighted, impracticable preachers who control the Republican party cooked up last year the Russell bill, taxing Spiritualist mediums $300 annually for exercising their vocation in cities of the first class in the state of Ohio. Whether Spiritualism be true or false, these mediums sustain to their assemblies and associations the same relation that preachers sustain to their congregations. Now, what would be thought of a legislature that would enact a law taxing Presbyterian and other ministers $300 per annum for exercising their vocation of preaching the everlasting gospel? Well, what is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander. It is estimated that there are 30,000 voting Spiritualists in Ohio. Knock off 10,000. This leaves 20,000. They are among the most intelligent and self-respecting people, and nine-tenths of them hav always voted the Republican ticket. But the Russell law not only put the official contempt of the state upon the Spiritualists and their religion, but began a persecution of them by fine, cowardly calling it a tax, and imprisonment, if the tax were not paid. This whole policy was gotten up by the clergy, who, as is their wont, cooked up the bill surreptitiously, through their unprincipled agents; and the Spiritualists, finding it out, found out at the same time that they had power and pluck enough to resent the outrage and trample the priest-ridden party into the dust of defeat. Last spring the Cleveland Leader began a persecution against Judge Hoadly, the Democratic nominee for governor, because he was an Infidel. But it soon learned that if it did toady to the priesthood it was not a mouth-piece of the people on the reserve, and it had, accordingly, to eat a big dish of humble pie.

Col. Ingersoll thinks the Republicans who killed their own party will come back next year and resurrect it by giving the state to the presidential Republican nominee. Not a bit of it. The Spiritualists see that this viper of persecution is as venomous as it ever was; and that while it was scotched last month it was not killed. The Republican party has completely degenerated, and has forfeited the confidence of those citizens who love their country and the rights of man better than a political party. The secret of this degeneracy and insanity is that it has become the cat's-paw of the preachers who, not able to govern the people by reason in their pulpits, seek to do it by legislation. Prohibition had a great deal to do with the October somersault; but the Spiritualists of Ohio, who are all Infidels and anti-church, had gumption enough to see that the Russell law was the first step of a movement which, if not arrested, would ultimate in sending every Infidel to jail, and putting God and a theological creed into the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Editor, I hav been a Republican ever since the party was formed. But when the clergy and the church put out the feeler of the Russell law, I saw clearly where it would end, and am determined to do my utmost in dismissing the Republican party from power, and giving the Democrats a trial. All organizations of men who hav the handling of large sums of money necessarily become corrupt. The Republican party hav accepted their clerical masters, as is proved by the elections in Ohio and Iowa, and this, in addition to its treason to its original principles, makes it the duty of every man who loves freedom to assist in finishing the work begun by the Spiritualists of Ohio. RADICAL.

The Funerals of Unbelievers.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER of to-day an interesting, though brief, account of the measures taken by an Infidel to prevent his friends (?) from having religious exercises over his body after his death, in defiance of his desire. I hav frequently stated, in conversation with friends, that I emphatically desired to hav no religious services or speech by any Christian minister, in connection with my death or burial; that I had instructed my family to this effect, and that a good many years ago I wrote out, after careful and conscientious thought on the subject, some "directions for my funeral," embodying my views, which are filed away in a known, accessible place, labeled "To be opened immediately after my death."

It occurs to me, however, that my desires are more likely to be regarded if I here state these facts, thereby giving my views and positiv instructions a sufficient degree of publicity to make it highly improbable that they will be violated after my death.

In case these instructions are disregarded, I request that the widest publicity be given to the fact of their violation, to the disgrace of whoever may be justly chargeable with such ungenerous act. It is, of course, unimportant to the dead man whether a contemptible clergyman indulges in a mixture of cant and ignorance over his remains or not, but I think it is the duty of every Atheist and Infidel to do what he reasonably can to bring the Christian religion into ridicule and contempt, and one easy way for him to do this is to positivly refuse, as I hav done, to hav any Christian performance over his body.

If I ever change my views on this subject I will communicate the fact of such change to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I doubt not that he will hav the goodness to publish such fact. I am not likely to trouble him, however; having had precisely the same views in regard to this matter for many years, I do not think I am likely to change them now.

PHILIP G. PEABODY.

48 Wall street, New York, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1883.

Ministers Influencing Our Laws.

We hav several times in these columns had occasion to refer to the fact that the laws of the country are dictated by the clergy. For this we hav been pooh-poohed alike by the "dumb driven cattle" of the church, and the genus "dude" amongst the Liberals. But now comes an unexpected confirmation of our assertion.

Recently, at a meeting of the dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal church in Philadelphia, Rev. Mr. Dike stated that "public opinion, first from the pulpit and then through the press is what influences the average legislature more than anything else."

"First from the pulpit." Ah, yes! Time was when everything had to first pass the ordeal of the pulpit, but the clergy are fast losing their grip upon the law-making power, and this is what renders them so desperate. That is why they are in such a hurry to get their God into the Constitution while it is possible, for they see the handwriting upon the wall and realize that the scepter is departing from Judah, and are rendered desperate by the prospect. The fact, however, remains that ecclesiastics conceived and procured the passage of the laws, with a few exceptions, under which we now liv. The question of the hour is: Shall they dictate the laws of the future?

The Liberal Club.

The lecture at the last meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was something that inert paper and ink are incompetent to describe. Mr. S. P. Putnam delivered it. Those who hav seen Mr. Putnam in the private capacity of a law-abiding citizen know him to be a jocund and sprightly reveler in the joys of existence, artless of manner, ebullient of spirit, and jovial of disposition. They would hardly judge him to be capable of the sustained intellectual effort which the exigencies of an hour and a half's speech demand. Friday evening, the 9th, saw him transfigured, so to speak, and setting forth with great eloquence the fundamental principles of anarchy. For he is an anarchist—a godless, churchless, stateless, lawless anarchist. Society, he said, did not exist. It was a myth. The church and state were relics of a barbaric past, born of ignorance and fear and brute force. Give us freedom of thought. Yet freedom of thought is born to blush unseen unless we hav freedom of speech, and freedom of speech is nipped in the bud if it be not supplemented with freedom of action. The church would control our thoughts and the state our actions. Away with both. The anarchist will brook no authority except that which is accepted in freedom. Enforced equality among men is a humbug. Liberty first; equality if you can achieve it as an outcome of that liberty. Liberty is the means, not the end. The state is untrustworthy and cruel. It has been guilty of every enormity. It is a giant monopolist. It uses brute force in order to compete with private enterprise. Even the post-office has to protect itself by law from individual competition. The state has made fishing or attending a theater on Sunday a crime. It is a tyrant and a usurper. The state must go.

These were some of the points maintained by Mr. Putnam. The audience could admire but not always applaud. Few could agree with him, yet nevertheless it was quite engaging to hear him talk.

Mr. Wakeman announced that the remarkable lecture was open to discussion, and Lawyer Seering succeeded in securing the floor first. Whatever ideas Mr. Seering may hav gathered while listening to the lecture appeared to hav immediately dispersed when he took the platform. A mist settled around him and thickened into a fog. He showed signs of getting stuck. Some one in the audience snickered. Somebody else called "Time." The chairman rapped for order. Mr. Seering gathered his resources for a final effort and recited a poem on "Duty," which closed his speech in quite a satisfactory manner. Mr. Seering is an able and thoughtful writer. He is the author of a work on "Humanity and the Progress of International Law," but extemporaneous speaking is not an accomplishment in which he excels. He could say with Moses, "O my Lord, I am slow of speech."

Mr. Langerfelt, who has been spoken of descriptivly as the freshest man in the club, referred to Mr. Putnam's lecture as "funny business" and poetastering. Mr. Langerfelt speaks in the "don't-you-forgit-it" style. He is tolerably earnest in the advocacy of Socialistic ideas, and wants verifiable experience as a basis for any new dispensation that may take place in governmental affairs.

Mr. King made a fine effort in the way of a speech, and the audience laughed appropriately. He is so well known to be a humorist, as well as a philosopher, that it is not always easy to tell when to laugh and when to assume a look of immense wisdom. The people of the club hav taken his measure and are acquainted with his methods, so no one smiled at his profound remarks on the continuity and solidarity of man, which a stranger might hav mistaken for pleasantries.

Mr. Andrews, as usual, made a strong speech. He said that he had been reproached with agreeing with the speakers on both sides of the question at dispute between Anarchists and Socialists. He could not help it. He never saw anything without two sides. He indorsed the affirmations of the speakers but not the negations. Individuality lay at the foundation of the social structure, but was not the capsheaf. A man looking only at one side may be an advocate, but the advocate is not the judge. He only who recognizes the all-sidedness of every question in science and philosophy is competent to form an opinion; and the arguments of the extremists in both directions on the subject of anarchy and Socialism should be presented and considered. Individual freedom must be granted first, and then society may claim all the rights consistent with that freedom. This is Mr. Andrews's favorit topic, and the reader must bear in mind the fact that few hav been able to correctly represent his views upon it. He himself is familiar with all its subtleties, and is perhaps the only person who can manipulate one of these to any considerable extent without coming in collision with another. Therefore the present writer disclaims all responsibility for the foregoing statements.

Mr. Cohen claimed that none of Mr. Putnam's critics had touched upon the issues raised. Mr. Cohen is the advocate of a peculiar political scheme which he hopes at some time to elaborate before the club.

Mr. Putnam, who had rested and refreshed himself while the other speakers were demolishing his lecture, sprang at the subject with renewed vigor. Anarchy was a high hope for the race. Those who had no conceptions of better things for humanity might rest contented with what the law allows them. He had an ideal in view, and that ideal was what the world calls anarchy.

By the absence of Mr. Shook the club was deprived of the valuable addition to the knowledge on the subject of anarchy which that gentleman is known to possess—a loss which, though keenly felt, was not referred to. Next Friday evening, the 16th, Mr. Wakeman, in the absence of Mr. Appleton, will speak on matters connected with the same general topic.

The Boston Liberal Club.

Mr. Ellis B. McKenzie had, to-day, another opportunity of presenting his views upon "The Failure of Democracy in America." Although he wished the matter to be well discussed, he thought that the age of discussion was rapidly drawing to a close. Having lasted three hundred years, and produced the French and American revolutions, its career was almost ended; and the empirical method which it adopted was in turn to be replaced by the positiv and constructiv method. The proper road to this transition was by cultivating and giving impetus to the spontaneous social activities. This, however, was impossible under the government of a compulsiv state, whether monarchic, aristocratic, or democratic. Social evolution must follow the line of least resistance, and only under liberty can it ascertain the direction of that line.

The discussion was opened by Dr. E. V. Wright, who, having just returned from an extensiv electioneering crusade in behalf of anti-monopoly, had had a good opportunity of testing the workings of democracy. The conclusion arrived at by him was, that all the governmental shortcomings arose from the absence of democracy. The age of discussion was not passed. It never would be passed, for the agitation of thought was the beginning of wisdom. We must educate the people. The church, which was the foe to education, was at the root of the evil. He had confidence in the people, if we can educate them and get them free from church domination.

Dr. J. H. Swain had never heard a politician speak who did not profess to hav confidence in the people, but seeing how ignorant the people were, he could not but be surprised that such confidence existed. The subject of the lecture was then left to take care of itself, and the speaker turned to the abstract question of whether democracy, as a system of government, was a failure or not. He concluded that it was, evidently under the impression that he was supporting Mr. McKenzie. The latter gentleman, however, afterward repudiated this idea, and held to his original argument, that the application of that system in this country had proved a failure.

Mr. L. F. Hodge reiterated the position of Dr. Wright, and maintained that one could not, from a representativ despotism, such as that which we hav here to day, form an argument as to the value of democratic institutions. The Declaration of American Independence had nothing democratic about it except its opening sentence, and that was an untruth, for the people had nothing whatever to do with the matter. In the last analysis the people were truly the governing power, through the influence of public opinion, but this was the same in the most despotic country as in this.

Mr. David Kirkwood maintained that the democratic idea was the only true one, and under its application alone could those who were now citizens be allowed to express their opinions. The United States was to-day the most free, and the furthest advanced in civilization of all the countries of the world. Its goverment was not without faults, but these existed not through the application of the democratic idea, but in consequence of that idea not being properly understood.

Mr. J. M. L. Babcock also had faith in the people, but only in a certain class. He had no confidence at all in people of wealth, and refinement, and culture. He would sooner trust himself and his fortunes to a mob of roughs than to one of culture. He was under no doubt whatever that all the ills that existed could be remedied by universal suffrage.

After this speaker, Mr. Joel S. Dinsmore took the floor, and made some desultory remarks. By the manner in which he from time to time looked at the essayist, it was understood that he was demolishing that gentleman and his arguments. The skill and rapidity with which he skipped from one subject to another precluded the possibility of holding him long enough to get any clear idea of what he was talking about. He continued, however, until the expiration of his ten minutes, when he was literally knocked out of time by Mr. Ernest Mendum, the chairman.

Mr. McKenzie took the floor to reply, maintaining the function of the state is negativ entirely, and that when it enters into the domain of construction it is a usurper. Its only legitimate office was that of a police officer, to arrest an individual's attempt to curtail the liberty of another. Every function which it assumes ought to be thrown open to free competition, and under the exercise of that law the higher and better social form will persist, and push all inferior forms from the field.

It was intended to change the subject for next Sunday, but by request it was decided that it should on that occasion be presented in another form by Dr. E. V. Wright. That gentleman will take as his title "Democracy vs. Anarchistic Despotism," and promises to treat the subject from an aspect altogether different from that which has been presented.

Work to Do.

[The following appears in the Australia Liberal, but it is equally applicable to this country, and we commend the suggestion to our friends.]

It is often asked, What good does Freethought do? What work has it undertaken? And I propose to partially answer the question, and at the same time point out to Freethinkers what work still remains to be done.

Freethought, and by that term I mean Infidelity in the accepted theology of the day, has been the outcome of the absurdities of the church. It has been the revolution in the minds of thoughtful men and women which has taken place as regards the dogmas laid down by men in past ages, and added to or taken from as occasion might demand it, by the fanatical of succeeding generations. I do not wish to claim in this article the scientific Freethinkers who are continually benefiting their fellow-men, and who hav continually flown in the face of the church and suffered, many times, death for their—then supposed erroneous—teachings, which future years corroborated and the church afterward accepted. These, perhaps, I might well claim, but such is not my purpose.

For my answer, we must look at the religious social side of humanity, and contrast the true Infidel with the true churchman of the day. Here I claim for Freethought the making of a better man, a more honest man, a more self-reliant man, and by so much as each individual man or woman is improved, by just so much is society improved.

Your true modern churchman will not hav his faith molested. What was good enough for his father is good enough for him; but Freethought comes stepping along with giant strides and now makes a conquest here and then there—one day a Charles Strong shakes the walls of ecclesiasticism by his "heretical" sermons, and another day a "Chief-Justice" Higinbotham makes the church tremble with some scripture truths. So the broadening of the social mind goes on, until the shackles of ecclesiastical dogma are broken, and the escaped man stands forth a pronounced Freethinker.

It seems wonderful to look back and recognize among the old past—as it were, the chrysalis from which the butterfly has just emerged—clever men, scholars of repute, still clinging to the ropes and rigging of the sinking ship, Christianity. Can such men, for instance, as the bishop of Melbourne, truly believe in the Thirty-Nine Articles or the Athanasian Creed? Is it possible that they still count the Bible as a divinely inspired book? It would seem so; though we rub our mental eyes and look again. Hav they not seen for themselvs the changes the church has been forced to undergo, and yet it is a continuation of the same church that once burnt men and women for Christ's sake. If then, as they must acknowledge, the church of to-day does not profess the tenets of the church of yesterday, it follows, per se, that the church of to-day has no antiquity, no authority, but is altogether a thing of the hour, built up and supported by fanatical, narrow-minded men.

What now is left of Christianity—the Christianity, say, of two or three hundred years ago? What does the church of to-day say? The devil is a myth, and the hell of the old version is the hades of the new. The New Testament has been revised to suit the times, and the verse in St. John's gospel regarding the trinity expunged as a fraud. Strong doubts are creeping in, even into the church, as to the authenticity of the gospels, and gradually one can see the fabric breaking up. This, then, has been the work, or rather some of the work of Freethought—the replacing of the false with the true.

I therefore look to Freethinkers for the improvement in the social affairs of the world, the lessening of crime, and the educating of the poorer classes, who hav not the means of finding out for themselvs the hygienic principles by which their surroundings being bettered they will be able to improve their health, and consequently do more work and get better pay for it.

It may be said that the church does this. I admit it to a certain extent, and to this extent the church has been of some use; but now Freethought is rapidly supplanting her as the world grows wiser; Freethought having grasped the plow of religious reform, must not turn back, but must proceed with the work of social reform.

It is time that the evils of drink should receive a material check. Every Freethinker should therefore discourage the employment of girls in the bars of public houses, as not only degrading the beauty of humanity, but pandering to the tastes of young men who thus early get into bad social habits, and eventually become more or less a curse on society. In my opinion, considering the evils arising from intoxicating liquor, so heavy a tax should be placed on it as to preclude the poor man from getting his ruin so easily. Every impediment should be placed in the way of the opening of public houses, the cost of licenses should be quadrupled to prevent some of the low dens that infest our back streets from being opened. The more respectable publican would take measures to prevent such scenes of vice as I hav been witness to, and can any one doubt for a moment that any preventiv measures would hav a good effect on society.

I spoke of the "poor man" being saved from himself by making drink too costly for him, and I do not wish to be misunderstood in what I mean. If drink could possibly do him any good, if the glass of ale or porter was really necessary to his existence, let him hav it as cheaply as possible; but where it is the reverse, I say again prevent him, where he has not the strength of mind of his own, from ruining himself.

It is an easy transition to pass from public-house bars to places of amusement, because it is the lack of some such popular resorts that drives the hard-working man, on his Saturday night pay-day, to sit in the public-house bar smoking pipe after pipe, and drinking glass after glass.

Freethinkers should stir themselvs up over this thing, and something could be provided. Freethought reading-rooms could be opened in the principal back streets of the city. You do not want to open a hall away from these centers of poverty, but go right into the very heart of them and get the largest room or rooms to be had, and there open free reading-rooms supplied with such literature as can be got together. Giv simple lectures on health and pure air. Advise the people to get out into the sunshine in the country. Promote picnics on a cheap scale, and start a fund to help on the education of poor children. CYRIL HAVILAND.

The Truth About It.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Re the correspondence concerning Rev. C. J. Whitmore's unveracious tract, "What Becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" I can giv you a little first-hand information with reference to one "case," No. 8. "D. K. F." was David Knell Fraser, a writer possessed of more industry than talent. He compiled a large number of mediocre articles for the National Reformer, and was for some years private secretary to Mr. Geo. J. Holyoake. That gentleman, for some reason or reasons of which I know nothing, dispensed with his services, and, thrown upon his own resources, poor Fraser became connected, as a clerk, with a firm of swindlers whose business it was to procure advertisments for bogus newspapers. The principals of the firm were convicted and sentenced, and Fraser became destitute. In conversation with me he excused his connection with the swindlers by quoting the very elegant adage, "A hungry dog will eat dirty pudding." He borrowed small sums from me, and spent them in drink. Then he was "converted," and read his "recantation" in a small chapel in a London back street. Whitmore presided on the occasion, and I shall never forget poor Fraser's shame-faced demeanor as he went through the farce (for such I firmly believe it to hav been) of "recanting" views with which he had only indirectly been associated. Several members of the Freethought body attended this precious performance, and took part in the discussion. Fraser seemed glad when the (to him) degrading ceremony was over; and I could not help thinking that he had paid very dearly for the loaves and fishes that orthodoxy bought him with. I believe (but do not know) that some small appointment was procured for him by his "Christian friends." He died not very long after his "recantation."

I knew poor Fraser well. He was, as I hav said, an industrious compiler; but he had no ability or originality as a writer. He was a vain and indolent man, and had not sufficient moral fiber to bear up against temporary misfortune. So far as I know, he never professed or advocated Atheistic views, and it was principally his articles on "Our Aristocracy," in the National Reformer, that brought him into such notice as he gained. GEO. STANDRING.

Republican Office, Finsbury st., London, England.

Thanksgiving Day.

OPEN LETTER TO PRESIDENT ARTHUR.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT: I see by the papers that you kindly hav appointed the 29th day of this month as a day of prayer and thanks to "Almighty God" for favors received. The corn crop has been a failure on account of too much rain, and the crop of wheat has been very poor indeed. But I am willing to admit that if report be true the devil still livs and that his health has been such as to enable him to put in a larger amount of work. But I can't see why I should feel thankful for that.

Lightning knocked a $250 chunk out of the top of our Methodist church, and a minister, who is said to be doing business for God, foolishly and unjustly made me a large amount of trouble and costs by suing me for ten thousand dollars. If the principal is responsible for the acts of his servants, I cannot, under the circumstances, feel very devotional at this time. So I trust, my dear president, that you will excuse me if I shall take the liberty of being governed by my own good judgment as to what I shall do or not do, upon the 29th inst.

However, as has been my custom in the past, I shall endeavor to at least send a good chicken, if not a turkey, to some poor woman that she may rejoice upon that day. And as I ask for no thanks for myself, she can, if she feels like it, thank the one whom she thinks best, and with your permission, Mr. President, she shall select her own time and place for the performance of that which she may consider to be her duty. M. BABCOCK.

St. John's, Mich., Nov. 8, 1883.

Book Notes.

Dio Lewis's Monthly for November is before us. We notice it with pleasure and would have done so before if the doctor had sought us out and presented us with a copy. The present number consists of about fifteen contributed articles and a dozen editorials on the general subjects of health and happiness The Monthly is printed in large type on the best of paper, and sells for 25 cents per number. Dr. Lewis got considerably warmed up at a recent meeting of the Liberal Club, and it is hoped that in the December number of the Monthly he will tell the world what he thinks of that body as a whole.

THE Commercial Traveler's Magazine for December is a valuable number of that periodical, and presents an attractiv table of contents, backed up by nearly a hundred pages of interesting reading matter. It is also illustrated with considerable skill, the frontispiece being particularly fine. This represents "An Alpine Lurelei." Very few people know what a Lurelei is, but this one explains itself. A snow-mymph is represented, clothed more in nothing than anything else, seated on a rock beneath an overhanging ledge. Beside her lies a chamois hunter asleep. This cut is explained by a poem underneath. It appears that the wearied hunter relapsed into slumber; the snow-nymph came and watched over him: he dreamed of her and woke; she dropped a white flower and fled; he pursued her—

——"None e'er shall know
How high, how far, for he to earth below
Hath ne'er returned to say."

This picture will bear looking at for some time without wearying the eye. The magazine has also various stories, complete and continued, illustrated and otherwise, all good. Its "Sample" room is a department where all the funny incidents which ever happened, or ever will, to commercial travelers are told in chaste and appropriate language. There are other departments which may be investigated by purchasing the Magazine. Price 25 cents per copy.

AN action calling for attention from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals occurred Sunday week in this city. A Methodist church was reopened, and a large audience was specially invited. There were two pastors on the platform, one of whom announced that they wanted nearly four thousand dollars to pay for the repairs made during the summer. Three hundred and eighty-nine dollars was soon raised, the contributions being swelled by three little girls who gave four cents—all they had. The preacher announced that he was going to hav six hundred dollars out of that congregation or the congregation were going without their Sunday dinners. He told the story how he had kept the congregation of a Swedish church from noon until nearly midnight until a debt of four thousand five hundred dollars was paid, and of a pastor who preached three hours and a half, and then remarked to a brother preacher, "I'm as fresh as ever, but it would do your heart good to see how tired that congregation is." "That doesn't apply to me," he added, "for I'm a bit tired." This story brought the church down. "Here's a gentleman," cried his assistant, "who says he'll giv ten dollars if you'll let them go home to dinner." The ten dollars was accepted, and the congregation went to dinner. Where is Mr. Bergh?

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS H. S. LAKE and Mr. W. F. Peck will speak for the Liberal Society of Ottumwa, Iowa, during December. They would like to make engagements in the South. Address them for the remainder of this month at Vinton, Iowa.

H. L. GREEN addressed a large meeting at Port Allegany, Pa., on Friday evening, the 9th inst. The Liberals there are organizing a Liberal Lecture Society, and propose to hav a number of lectures from various Freethought speakers during the coming winter.

GERALD MASSEY is delivering a series of lectures in this city, at Chickering Hall. The first was on Friday evening, Nov. 16th; the second will be on Monday evening, Nov. 19th; the third on the 22d, and the fourth on the 28th. Course tickets, $1.50 and $2.00. Single tickets, 75 cents and $1.00. General admission, 50 cents.

MRS MATTIE E HULL is lecturing in Ottumwa, Iowa, on the Sundays of the present month, and will make engagements for week-day evening lectures within a reasonable distance of the above-named place. She can be secured for a few lectures en route to Chicago via the Northwestern or Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy railroads, early in December. Parties desiring her services should address her immediately at Ottumwa, Iowa. Permanent address 1289 Lincoln avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

FROM the Denison Sunday Gazeteer we learn that the Liberals of Texas held a convention on Sunday, Oct. 28th, in accordance with announcement previously made. The members of the Religious and Benevolent Association of Waco had the arrangements in charge, and the ladies decorated the district court-room in the court-house, where the meetings were held, in a neat and appropriate manner. The convention was called to order by J. D. Shaw, pastor of the local association above referred to, who placed in nomination for temporary chairman Dr. L. J. Russell, the well-known Liberal of Bell county, and he was unanimously elected. Mr. R. M. Chinn, of Temple, Bell county, was elected secretary. On taking the chair, Dr. Russell explained the object of the meeting, which was, in brief, to consider the propriety of organizing a State Liberal Organization. There was a free and friendly interchange of views by delegates from various parts of the state on the subject, which finally culminated in a resolution being adopted authorizing the chairman to appoint a committee of three to draft a set of resolutions on state organization; and the chair named Messrs. Corning, of McClellan; Shaw of Waco; and Lunnelly, of Temple, as such committee, after which a recess was taken. On reassembling in the afternoon, the committee on resolutions submitted a preamble and resolutions, the substance of which was that it was not considered advisable to perfect a state organization at present, but recommending that a convention of the Liberals of Texas be called at some convenient point, not later than September, 1884, the time and place to be settled by a committee of three to be appointed for that purpose; and also recommending community organizations for social and benevolent purposes, the purchase of libraries, employment of lecturers, etc. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

WE can chronicle nothing but success for Messrs. Watts and Chainey. On the 5th Mr. Watts wrote us:

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 5, 1883.

DEAR MACDONALD: We are still getting on all right, although we hav lost several good engagements through the failure of the trains to connect. I read THE TRUTH SEEKER every week. It is an excellent paper, and reflects the highest credit upon its editor.

Giv my kind regards to friend Putnam. I shall be glad to hail you both next month in New York city. With best wishes, Yours fraternally, CHARLES WATTS.

The papers in the towns in which these gentlemen hav lectured speak in the best terms of them. The Independent American of Creston, Iowa, where they lectured on the 25th ult., givs them a good report, and speaks regretfully of the cutting of Mr. Chainey's lecture for brevity's sake. The Commoner, of the same place, is very enthusiastic, making its readers acquainted with them in this way:

"These gentlemen are Liberals of a shade somewhat lighter than Colonel Ingersoll. Mr. Chainey, though a young man, is one of the most widely known Liberalists in the country. His subject Sunday afternoon was 'The Clergy.' It was a radical criticism, in which Mr Chainey endeavored to show that the clergy are not needed in our civilization, but a positiv hindrance to progress. Whatever may hav been the estimate of Mr. Chainey's argument, it must be conceded that his lecture was one of the most brilliant oratorical efforts ever delivered in Creston. We doubt if any lecturer other than Colonel Ingersoll could use so much of beautiful metaphor as Mr. Chainey showed in his Sunday afternoon lecture.

"Mr. Chas. Watts, of London, is a fine specimen of the hale and jolly Englishman. At the outset of his lecture on 'The Fallacies of Popular Theology,' he provoked laughter, and throughout his lecture he kept his audience in a broad grin with his keen sarcasm and wit. As editor of the London Secular Review, Mr. Watts has achieved fame, and in his lecture Sunday he proved himself to be a man of more than ordinary mental acquirements.

"In the evening the opera house was crowded with a large and intelligent audience. Mr. Watts opened the meeting with a discussion of the subject, 'The Positiv Principles of Liberalism.' It was a masterly address, glowing with eloquence, sparkling with wit and sarcasm, and showing the deepest thought. Mr Chainey followed with one of his brilliant addresses, upon the subject, 'Humanity vs. Christianity.'"

On the 4th inst. the Liberal League of Pittsburgh had, the Times of that place says, "a big day of it" with these two champions on the platform. The attendance was very large, both afternoon and evening, and the audiences were fully satisfied. As will be seen by Mr. Watts's letter, he and Mr. Chainey will visit New York early in December. We hope they will be greeted with the cordiality their great talents deserve.

Communications.

Two Extremes.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Having received a sample copy of your paper, The Truth Seeker, I send you a few lines which you may publish should you deem them of sufficient interest.

I am a truth-seeker, a Freethinker. Having the faculty of thought, by virtue of humanity, I feel perfectly free to exercise such, as my natural right; hence, a Freethinker, I claim the right to search for knowledge. Truth and fact hav been the prime objects of my research for fifty years; and yet I find I hav so much to learn. I read and study, think on and investigate any and every subject I deem of interest. I claim the same right—equal right—to study and investigate the Bible as I hav to breathe the atmosphere, or share with my fellow the rays of the sun. Bible truth—if truth it is, in part or whole—must be God's common truth, to and for a common humanity. Hence I approach the Bible as a truth-seeker, Freethinker, without a middle-man—pope or priest, Catholic or Protestant. This much I am happy to say I hav learned, and this much I am pleased to say I enjoy. I hav been a Bible student (for the sole purpose of knowing its claims) for thirty or forty years; and should anyone ask me if I believe it, my answer would be, "Yes, as I understand it." As a Freethinker, I read, study, and construe the Bible for myself. As a Bible student, I believe and teach it as I understand it; as much so as I hav sense and candor so to do.

Our day—or age—is one of critical investigation. The Bible is sharing its part of scrutinizing criticism; it is perfectly right it should. If it is the book of God to man, a divine revelation, it is right, it is duty, on the part of man, to study it; if possible to unwrap its truths and facts couched in the English language.

The Bible is arrested, is indicted, and its case is in the world's court for trial. Its friends, the Christians, attempt a defense, each as they peculiarly understand it; yet each and everyone differ, and all hav before formed their opinions and freely expressed them. Are they not unfit jurors to sit on a case of which they hav beforehand formed and expressed opinions? They naturally place an undue importance upon it, and in many instances claim for it more importance than it claims for itself. Their undue estimate necessarily injures their own cause, and givs to their enemies that much advantage, and by so doing defeats the end sought to be gained.

The enemies of the Bible naturally undervalue the book, and necessarily run to the opposit extreme and damage their own case. Such deeply fixed prejudices, existing in the minds of both parties, require the strictest care in order to arrive at a fair and safe conclusion. For, if the claims of the Old and New Testaments be true, they surely are of the greatest importance to those who know or may know them. If they are not true, it is equally right we should know it. But intense prejudice exists in the minds of each party, and influences each in their investigations, and leads them to opposit extremes, and is strikingly apparent to all thinking people.

I shall attempt a few proofs on each side. The friends of the Bible differ so much among themselvs with regard to the teaching and truths contained in the book, they necessarily lead and leave their readers and auditors in confusion, and by so doing, lead them to reject the Bible, become Infidels, or in turn become personal, independent investigators, and add still more difference to Bible interpretation. So much difference about the penalty of Adam's sin; moral or physical death. One party contending for moral death, the other for physical death. Equal confusion and strife about the immortality or non-immortality of the soul. The final punishment of the wicked—death, extinction of being, or endless conscious misery, torture. Election and reprobation—an unchangeable number elected from all eternity for heaven; and an unchangeable number reprobated to a life of sin in this world, and endless torment in the world to come. And yet the Bible says, "God is love." So much difference taught by those (would-be) friends of the Bible about baptism, its mode, its object, its proper subject, etc. Such a difference about inspiration of the Bible, the call to preach, personal Christian experience, etc. Such difference, such confusion among the believing friends of the Bible, prove, at least, such things are not clearly revealed in the book, and hence are not essential to be believed or taught; or it would prove that such dogmas are the result of party or personal effort.

From prejudice, party or personal, do the enemies of the Bible search out (abstractly) everything that in the least appearance might be objectionable. I hav heard persons speak for hours, selecting out, ridiculing, misconstructing, and putting on everything referred to the very worst construction possible; and guarding as carefully against quoting anything good or commendable as though to mention the good would be an unpardonable sin. Their strong tendency to misquote and put up false constructions (men of straw) to show their aptness in taking them down, is plain. Even the noted Ingersoll, in his "Mistakes of Moses," in his first proposition, "God made the world out of nothing," puts the Bible up in false light (intentionally so, I suppose), to hav the better chance for ridicule. But such a course pursued by the enemies of the Bible only defeats the object sought to be gained. Surely the truth and facts are to be found somewhere between those two extremes; and if the book does contain any truth or any fact, it should hav credit for such; and it would be well for even skeptics to hav due regard for it.

The Bible may contain some errors and some mistakes, and it would be well for its friends to search them out, so they may not mix fact with mistake, nor mix truth with error, and by so doing injure the whole. I am sure the "God who made the heavens and the earth" (not "out of nothing") will approbate the person who endeavors to expose error and mistake, even though they should be found in the Bible.

As a liberal Christian, a free thinker, I believe there is more truth—divine truth—in the Bible than many (most) Infidel Freethinkers suppose; and I am equally free to say of many professing Christians, that they present the Bible in such unreasonable and objectionable light—and even untrue light—that they are doing more against the true interests of the Bible, and in favor of Infidelity, than the professed Infidels themselvs.

William Kirby.

Doniphan, Kansas.

[Mr. Kirby is an intelligent man, but he has got down on the wrong side of the fence. We would remind him that the assertion that he believes, or his belief, proves nothing; and also that he cannot be allowed to prove the Bible by the Bible. The supreme religious questions are: 1. Is there a God? and 2. If there is, did he hav anything to do with preparing the different Bibles now existing? These questions must be proved outside of all Bibles, and in the answers there can be no half-way work. Either there is a God or there is not. Either the Bible is a divine work or it is not. The truth cannot by any possibility lie between these extremes. The preponderance of evidence is overwhelmingly against the Bible and its alleged Jehovistic origin—and author. Milk-and-water philosophy is out of place. What is true in the Bible would be true if found in a last year's almanac. What is false would still be false if believed in by all the people of the earth. There is no bridge between a fact and a lie. By every known method of scientific test, and by every fact in the universe, we know the story of creation found in the Bible is a lie. Mr. Kirby believes it to be a fact. Let him prove it. But he must not take the evidence of an assertion to prove that assertion.—Ed. T. S.]

Some Biblical Criticisms.

One is astonished at what is taken for granted, and, when he reads the prophecies, at the confusions and inconsistencies. Thus, in Jeremiah xxv, the headlines and some verses foretell the captivity of seventy years, while verse 18 foretells the utter destruction of Jerusalem, etc., and ends, "as it is to this day." Verse 22, chapter vii, the Lord declares to the Jews that he never spake to or commanded them when he brought them out of Egypt concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices, but merely said, "Obey my voice." Now, Jehovah or Moses fibs, for the whole talk of the Pentateuch is about burnt offerings. But of the tens of thousands of contradictions, outrages, blunders, follies, humbugs, mistakes, and errors contained in the book, who shall be able to take account? It is the history and religion of a hideous, petty, isolated, selfish, cruel, savage race, which tells them a thousand times over, to flatter them, that they alone of all races of men are selected, chosen by the only living true God, as his favorits; they alone being worthy of it; and that their God so loves them he sends his son to be put to death by them in order to save them alone of all humankind from eternal hell. Now who, in the name of all the gods at once—who would ever hav dreamed that thousands of years after such a revelation of such a religion to such a miserable people, the brightest, most enlightened peoples of the world would hav stolen this religion, with all its crudities, raw-head-and-bloody-bones stories, absurdities, and slanders of omnipotence—yes, stolen and appropriated it, the rejected leavings of this confounded people, and continue to preach it, fight over it and for it? We hav heard of diggers, niggers, and bushmen stealing other people's gods and hiding them away, hoping there might be some secret efficacy in them, and of old women stealing handkerchiefs from apostles and ministers in the like hope, but this wholesale larceny of the despised cast-off religion of barbarians by enlightened races is the most extraordinary fact in all time. A revelation, too, in a book, in a human language, the revealer having first confounded the language of all the people! And how the difficulties of reconciling do swarm upon the priesthood! Their stereotyped reply, "Oh, that was answered long ago," no sooner settles, for them, some insuperable objections, than some new critic, some new discovery or development, starts a hundred others, till finally, in utter, mad desperation, they proclaim as did the great Moody the other day: "Reason! I am asked to giv a reason for my religion! Reason is of the devil; to the devil with it!" And all Christendom applauds. Strange, after several hundred years of attempts at reason, after reasoning themselvs out of the Catholic church and all along the various by-roads of dissent, to now proclaim unreason. "Thank God, we are self-made idiots." Strange, wonderful meeting of extremes. Time was when they made themselvs eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake; time is, and they make themselvs fools for the kingdom of heaven's sake. Well, they never hav strained themselvs at reasoning on the matter. They hav just read along, never suspecting, doubting, or thinking at all. The most absurd statements never seem to strike them. They remind one of Dame Partington and her grandson, Ike. One day the old lady was knitting, while Ike sat reading a newspaper. "Ikey, dear, read me something." "What shall I read, grandma?" "Oh, something stirring and lively." So Ike begins: "The other day before to-morrow, last year, this afternoon, there was perpetrated a most terrible murder, committed by an assault in the hands of a gigantic, lubberly fellow, four feet, nine inches tall, upon a feeble, little fellow, perhaps less than twice his size, who, seizing the woman by her back hair, as he shrieked, 'Murder! Police!' dashed out his brains by severing the jugular vein at one blow, breaking the club in several pieces, the splinters of which having been found after due amputation by that most able, highly-toned of surgeons, who performed the operation to the eminent satisfaction of both the husband and her mother-in-law. The child weighed eighteen and a half pounds, and the mother is doing as well as can be expected." "Gracious goodness!" exclaimed the venerable dame; "how wonderful, and what a fine voice you do hav, Ikey! And what did they do with the man?" "Hung him," replied Ike. "Served him right," said she, with a flash in her eye, as she went on knitting.

The men and women who read or hear read these contradictory statements of their Bible, these impossibilities, do not stop to think at all. The Indian who heard the missionary tell the story of Jonah and the whale was wiser. He replied: "Maybe so. Now me tell you a story. Three men go along the road; one, he blind; toder, he no hands; and de noder one, he naked. Bime-by blind man he see a dollar, man no hands pick him up, and de noder man naked put him in de pocket; maybe so, maybe no so."

Here, then, is a book containing 1,133 chapters, and 31,174 verses, on the truth or falsity of every statement of which must stand or fall the Christian religion. Setting aside the Old Testament, admitting for argument that we should not expect perfection in it, holding Christianity responsible for nothing in it save the promises of the Messiah who was to be a descendant of David, a branch from Jesse, just behold the introduction to the New Testament. How is a man who was born in some other religion to abandon the belief of his cradle and adopt one contrary to it? Surely by reason. It is no flattery of ours to say he must not reason on it.

Every soul that adopted Christianity during the first centuries had to abandon the religion of his forefathers. Only three-fourteenths of the human race to-day are Christian's even nominally. The other eleven-fourteenths are either Buddhists, Mussulmans, Parsees, Jews, or heathen. Millions, perhaps twice as many as all the population of the United States, who liv in China, are Atheists, Deists, etc., and are the most intelligent people in the world. A large proportion of the educated classes of western Europe are Infidels, with rare exceptions; so are two-thirds of the same classes in America. Surely to convert them there must be an appeal to reason. Here, then, is an unbelieving world to be converted eighteen hundred years after Christ. The Christian must approach these unbelievers with what is to them the most extraordinary story the imagination of man ever bodied forth, namely, that the infinit being who created all the countless systems of worlds in space, in order to save a few Jews, who lived in an obscure corner of one of the smallest worlds of his creation, from eternal hell, became the father of a child by a virgin married woman who had several other children by one Joseph, her husband; and that this son of God led a life of obscurity and died a death of horror to save these Jews, who despised and murdered him—this vicarious atonement innuring to the benefit of the rest of the human race because of their rejection of the proffered boon. The whole thing is as contrary to our experience as would be the assertion that young babies are found in hollow trees (more so), or that certain rare birds become human beings. Generation succeeds generation of men, and never once is it found that the order of nature is disturbed; that a man once dead and buried returns to walk about among his fellows. And if occasionally a strongly authenticated case is reported, investigation has always shown it to be a lie or a mistake.

That is our experience, and the universal experience. But here is an assertion surpassing all the other tales of superstition. Surely it should hav proof powerful as the unclouded sun. You come to a reasoning people who are strangers with a tale the most incredible in all the annals of earth. What evidences do you bring? The evidences are in a book called the New Testament, written by—whom? when? where? No one can tell. Who are your witnesses? You reply, The twelve apostles. Where is their testimony? In this book. But here are only four, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John. And of these four only Matthew and John were companions of Christ and profess to hav seen any part of what they testify. They say others saw. But if I say a thousand men saw something that I saw, I am testifying alone. It is hearsay. It would require better evidence than that in our courts to settle the contested title to a blind mule. Let your proof be equal to your high claim. But you hav not even the testimony of Matthew and John to the most important matters of all which occurred before, at, and soon after Christ's birth. Matthew's book tells us that Matthew was not even called until after Christ's sermon on the mount. His statement as to all that precedes it is only hearsay; John's ditto. All is hearsay evidence as to the most important fact of all, viz., the birth of the son of God of the Virgin Mary. Prove that, and we will admit hearsay as to all the rest. Introduce yourself first by letters of credit, and we will trust you after that. Well, let us see what the nature of this hearsay evidence is. We can't admit it, but we are lenient. Something may turn up in your favor. We desire to help you as courts sometimes do in ex parte cases. Wanted, to make a reasonable showing that God Almighty had a son born to him on the night of Dec. 25, 1 A.D., by the Virgin Mary—one Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham on the mother's side. State your case, Matthew, John. The court is ready to hear, and favorable—(this court is, I know). Begin!

Matthew begins, chapter i, and proves that Joseph was the son of David, the son of Abraham. "But Joseph was not his father. Matthew," says the judge, "you must either prove that God is the son of David, etc., or else that Mary is a daughter of David. I submit Joseph has nothing to do with this matter." "But," retorts Matthew, "we will show you that Joseph has a great deal to do with it. It all depends on a dream of that most excellent, truthful old gentleman." "A dream!" exclaims the judge. "A dream! a dream—dreams!" is heard all through the audience. "Silence in the court!" yells the crier. "This disorder must be suppressed," says the judge. "Did you say a dream, Matthew?" "Yes, your honor," says he, and proceeds to read verse 18, chapter i. "Now," says he, "hav I not shown that Joseph had something to do with the matter?" "You hav, indeed," says the judge. "Too much! Matthew, we had hoped for better things. This court knows from personal experience that dreams are very unreliable, and you do not even testify that you knew of this dream save by hearsay. The court does not believe its own dreams, and certainly is not going to credit the reported dream of an old man eighteen hundred years ago, no matter how respectable he might hav been. Very likely he was a kind, credulous, old gentleman, and no doubt his wife told him how it all happened. Nor is it the first instance in history of young girls blaming the gods with such tricks. Remember Rhea Silvia, also Maia, the Hindoo maiden, mother of Christna. Mary's story is not even original. Matthew, it will not do."

We will now listen to Luke, for the gospel of St. John givs no account of St. John, but sets out with a long description of John the Baptist's testimony that "Christ is the son of God," because he, John, saw a bird descending on Christ's head. HOLT.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Hurrah for Col. Ingersoll?

In the Chicago Times of October 12th, I saw the following: "Gen. Lew. Wallace says that he was converted to Christianity by Col. Ingersoll. He was inclined to be skeptical as to the divinity of Christ."

Ingersoll presented his Infidel views. Wallace was much impressed, but finally remarked that he was not prepared to agree with Ingersoll on certain extreme propositions. Ingersoll thereupon urged Wallace to give the matter careful study, expressing his confidence that he would after so doing fully acquiesce in the Ingersoll views. For six years he thought, studied, and searched. At the end of that time he said, "The result is the absolute conviction that Jesus of Nazareth is not only a Christ and the Christ, but that he is also my Christ, my savior, and my redeemer."

Such pieces as this are often selected by the press to fill up the columns of newspapers, and seized upon by ministers as of great importance to use in sermons, conveying the idea that the souls of persons are rendered happy or miserable on account of their religious views here. Those articles, emanating from high characters, are used with great effect on account of their assumed importance. Many readers are influenced by their apparent consistency on the very important question of religion. But to the careful thinker, it seems to me, such ideas involve the subject in the most egregious difficulties and inconsistencies.

What chance hav those who lived before Christ, and who hav not heard of him, if a knowledge of his divinity is necessary to save?

But it is said, "Those without law, are not condemned by the law." Then Christ should not hav been sent, because, tried by his doctrin, a great many will be lost. If salvation could be without the knowledge of Christ, his coming is more the means of damnation than salvation.

It is not supposed, according to this Christian plan, that one-half of the world will be saved, and if the colonel has been the means of converting one person to Christ, and thereby saved him, he has done more than his share of converting the world. This must be considered a genuin case. No weak-mindedness or hypocrisy is supposed to be connected with or practiced by Gen. Wallace. He is a man of maturity; has had abundant time to consider well the Christian theory or plan of salvation. Yet it appears he had not, being a little skeptical, comprehended the divinity of Christ. But when he heard the extreme views of Ingersoll, and after only six years of careful study, he saw fully he had a savior.

Strange, that a cathartic should prove an emetic—that the reasoning of an Ingersoll, under the conceptions of a Wallace, should prove an opposit conclusion. But what creatures of circumstances we are! How brittle is the thread of life, and yet how much more so is that on which hang everlasting things! Gen. Lew Wallace, no doubt, has been raised in a Christian country, has heard its doctrins criticised, and yet he was dormant; the taught catechism, the parental instruction, the Sunday-school exercises, the listening to the ministry, whom God had called and qualified to explain the word that he had divinely inspired men to write correctly in the first place—all had failed. He seemed impervious to all these means of God and man to enlighten his mind. But when he heard Col. Ingersoll's Infidel views, he was enabled, by six years' study, to see clearly the divinity of Christ, and also that he was his savior.

What a remarkable circumstance this is! What a panorama of circumstances that must hav been, during millions of years previous to the production of Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Wallace, and then the many thousands of circumstances since then; all of which were necessary to their existence, and to this occurrence or interchange of thought between them! And yet, after all, what is it but intellect or mind trying to arrive at truth? Why should either be condemned or censured, praised or rewarded? Why should such terrible consequences be attached to a question that must be decided by the ability of our reasoning powers and the capacity of thought? According to the majority of theological teaching, had Mr. Wallace died before the six years of careful study, or before he had attained the fact, to him, that through faith in Christ's divinity he had a savior, he would hav been lost forever. But how lucky for Mr. Wallace that he happened to hear or get in conversation with Mr. Ingersoll, whose Infidel views were the means of his conversion! It led Mr. Wallace out of all his previous uncertainties and partial skepticism, to realize his redeemer. How many thousands may there be, who hav not been so fortunate as Mr. Wallace to hav heard Infidel views? Who will, in consequence, be doomed? Mr. Wallace, by this current idea of theology, seems to feel as though he occupied rather an enviable position; as though chance or fortune had favored him; as though running and narrowly escaping a terrible doom—but able to say, "I am safe." But he don't tell us, or those who are yet in the same condition in which he was before the Infidel views converted him, how we might also escape.

Should not this glorious conversion hav so improved his humanity that he would convey the intelligence of his experience? He should hav told us just how it was done; how those Infidel views served to enlighten the mind, when studying on the extreme proposition; how the mystery of the father, son, and holy ghost affair is solved; just how he was enlightened to see the divinity in the ghost and Mary transaction, and the consequent birth of the son. Mr. Wallace seems to be too selfish on so important a subject. He speaks exultingly, and pertaining to himself only. It seems to me a person just born to the light of divinity would hav been more generous to his fellow-beings—would hav told of the peculiar mode of his success in utilizing those Infidel views. He should hav equally published the peculiar manner of managing those views to so great an advantage; they might hav been of more benefit to mankind than merely telling of his own conversion. But maybe that glory of the promised future happiness to the believer was so brilliant that he could think of nothing but the happiness and good times he would hav as soon as he passed out of this evil world, away from unbelievers—where he could praise the God who had been so successful in managing the affairs of this world that a few got saved, but nearly all got hell. He could join in with Lazarus and see the damned asking for water, and the smoke of their torment ascending forever. He could see his fellow-beings, some probably as good as he by nature, "and better by practice," as the old prayers use to say, wallowing in endless misery. He might be favored by the delightful view of seeing some of his own relations, maybe a son or daughter, who had but a short time passed the time or age of unaccountability, who had been suddenly taken off by accident, or some contagious disease that the good God scourges the earth with sometimes, maybe by lightning or earthquake—but no matter, they had passed the Rubicon of supposed unaccountability and had not been lucky enough to hav heard Infidel views. They had not been converted; maybe baptized, but not the right way; and they too must endure that eternity of pain and suffering forever.

With what ecstasy of joy Mr. Wallace could turn to his creator and his redeemer and say, "Now my eyes behold thy glory." Mr. Wallace must now enjoy the company of the redeemed and blessed. He turns to a lot just come in, greatly rejoicing at the arrival of so many. I imagin he asks if any came in by investigating Infidel views, but they answer "No, we came in by the atonement; we had murdered a few of our fellow-beings; we did not hav six years to study over the peculiar theories of Christianity; we were like a hot-house plant—forced to an early market. By the aid of the priests and ministers, who declared an emergency existed, we were soon informed how to comply with the requirements to obtain heaven and avoid hell. We must now praise the Lord for his great plan of salvation. We must hav a good time now—we'll go around and see the damned in hell—maybe some of the victims whom we murdered, who had not the chance we had to fix up salvation matters."

Well, we must congratulate Mr. Lew Wallace, but should hurrah for Mr. Ingersoll. S. WEST.

Bushnell, Ill.

The Salamanca Convention.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you allow me, through your columns, to request the following named persons to each act as a committee for their respectiv towns and neighborhoods, to advertise in their local journals the forthcoming Freethinkers' convention, to be held in Salamanca, N. Y., on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of December, and to see to it that a respectable delegation attend the convention from their respectiv localities?

Western and Central New York: W. Alder, Cassadaga; James P. Allen, Conewango Valley; G. V. Allen, Howard; Homer A. Billings, Fabius; W. J. Bradt, North Hannibal; Clark Burchard, East Otto; J. T. Brown, Angelica; S. S. Ball, Penn Yan; Mrs. J. W. Bennett, Forestville; O. G. Chase, Jamestown; Samuel Cosad, Wolcott; C. C. Chase, Marengo; Miss Electa E. Curtis, Brighton; S. S. Cross, Clide; Melvie A. Clayton, Cato; E. A. Doty, Lockport; Dr. B. W. Franklin, Ithaca; Thomas Paine Frank, Buffalo; John Fowler, Belmont; L. De Witt Griswold, Auburn; Jasper Griggs, Pike; Augustus L. Hoert, Brockport; Wm. A. Howard, Amboy Center; A. Happel, Olean; T. F. Horton, Arcada; C. Houghton, Batavia; A. C. Harrington, Ellicottville; James H. Hughes, Allegany; F. Hendricks, Dunkirk; Nathaniel Howland, Dayton; W. F. Hawkins, North Collins; Silas Hallock, Avoca; E. C. Hibbard, Water Valley; Thomas Jones, Nunda; Peter Keyser, Havana; Smith Miles, Summit Station; Wm. R. Mills, Hume; E. W. Mitchell, West Junius; Henry B. McNair, Dansville; D. B. Morton, Groton; S. D. Olney, Watertown; Grace L. Parkhurst, Friendship; John Peck, Naples; Smith Pliny, Fredonia; Dr. A. Robinson, McLean; D. F. Sweetland, Hornellsville; Mrs. E. M. Sickmon, Hamburg; Miss Juliet Simmons, Kennedy; R. C. Trowbridge, Tully; B. C. Wood, Painted Post; Charles R. Reynolds, Rochester; J. E. Weeden, Randolph; and H. Hurty, Elmira.

West Pennsylvania: Gilbert Arnold, Corry; G. W. Baldwin, Linesville Station; Dr. Morris Bailey, Titusville; Jacob Baldensperger, Warren; Mrs. Dr. J. M. Clark, Erie; R. R. Curtis, Tidionte; C. J. Curtis, Bradford; Alexander Cochran, Franklin; S. F. De Jones, Pittsburg; William Edmundson, Renova; G. C. Fink, Foxburg; Levi A. Hardison, Duke Center; William Jewell, North Warren; D. A. Rahle, Goodell; C. H. Vensel, St. Petersburgh; and Joseph York, Meadville.

Eastern Ohio: Joseph Gillson, Cleveland; Duncan McLaren Warren; W. A. Moseley, Ashtabula; J. R. Nissley, Mansfield; J. Sedgebeer, Painesville; C. L. Bailey, Newton Falls; M. F. Dean, Lindenville; Julia P. Weldy, Haverhill; J. R. Marsh, Kent; and Erastus Jackson, Peninsula.

Speakers and Arrangements: So soon as all of the speakers are engaged and other arrangements perfected, I will notify the Liberal public through the Liberal papers. The convention will commence Thursday evening, and hold through Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. H. L. GREEN.

ONE of the best ways to help along the cause of Freethought is to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER. Trial subscriptions of three months for 50 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - NOVEMBER 17, 1883.

THE attention of our readers is again called to the Prospectus of THE TRUTH SEEKER on our last page. We hope that all will take advantage of its generous terms, and by paying for the year 1884 in advance secure the paper at the present low rate. It would afford us great pleasure to chronicle a doubling-up of our list. At the low club rates offered this could easily be done if all THE TRUTH SEEKER's friends would take but a little activ interest in recommending the paper to their neighbors and acquaintances. We could then permanently reduce the price of subscriptions, although at the club rates now given it is much the cheapest Liberal paper published.

A word also to a few of our subscribers who are in arrears, and to whom bills hav recently been sent. We cannot possibly continue them on the list unless they take some steps at once to settle their indebtedness. If we had no paper men, compositors, clerks, rent, mailing and postage bills, etc., etc., to pay, we could print THE TRUTH SEEKER and send it free all the time. But as no such generosity is possible, we respectfully ask those in arrears to settle immediately. We do not ask for anything not justly and honestly due. Most papers require pay strictly in advance. A good many of our friends pay in that way, and were it not for their promptness, the delinquents would of necessity hav lost their paper long ago. Through the generosity of these solid friends we hav been enabled to accommodate the slow paying ones. It would seem only just and right that the latter should now liquidate the debt.

To the Liberals of New York City.

The desirability of establishing in this city a Liberal headquarters, consisting of a reading-room, library, etc., has been suggested, and we are requested to get the opinion and co-operation of such as are willing to aid. To this end we ask all who will help to send a postal card to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER stating such willingness. If the responses are encouraging, a meeting will be called at which the further plans can be perfected and the necessary action taken. No argument is needed to show the good that can be done by such an organization. There are hundreds of young men living in boarding-houses in the section of the city bounded by 8th and 20th streets who hav no pleasant place in which to spend their spare time, and are consequently driven to resort to billiard saloons, with their corrupting influences, who would, we are confident, support such a reading-room if it was made pleasant and free. Cooper Union is unable to accommodate all who desire to avail themselvs of its accommodations on Sundays, and we feel confident that a Liberal reading-room would attract hundreds.

Let us hear immediately from all in favor of this movement.

Settle It Now.

The Canadian customs officers seem willing to be a little blind just at present. Immediately after hearing the decision in the Paine-Voltaire case, which we noted last week, Mr. Charles Stevens, librarian of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club, in order to further test the matter, sent to this office for two copies of Paine's "Age of Reason." The books reached Montreal by express, passed through the custom house, and were delivered on the 5th inst. On inquiry at the custom house, a representativ of the Montreal Star, who had learned these facts, was informed by Mr. M. P. Ryan, collector, that he knew nothing whatever about the matter. Mr. O'Hara, pro-collector of the customs, was equally ignorant of the fact that the books had been passed. He said if that was the case, they must hav been undetected and escaped the scrutiny of the officers. On being asked by the reporter what action would hav been taken by the authorities if the books had been discovered, Mr. O'Hara replied that while they preferred not to anticipate such a case, the customs authorities were perfectly prepared to take action in the matter if such books were detected in their passage into the country.

The further action of our friends will be determined soon. If Mr. Ryan can be cajoled into seizing the "Age of Reason," we will forward one marked in such a way that it cannot escape the scrutiny of the custus morum who compiles his index expurgatorius. The question ought to be settled now, while the public is awake, so that the heretics across the border can know once for all whether they are to be allowed to read what they choose, or whether the church, by such tools as Mr. Ryan, is to control the literature of the Dominion.

The New Testament as Bad as the Old.

We print this week two articles in criticism of the New Testament which we hope our readers will call to the attention of their believing friends. The Old Testament has been continuously assailed until its anonymousness and unreliability hav been firmly established, only a few scholars, and these fiercely and determinedly biased toward Christianity, contending that God and Moses had anything to do with its inspiration or preparation. Paine, Colenso, Robertson Smith, and the Christian cyclopedists themselvs, hav overthrown the pretension of the Pentateuch to divinity, and their lead has been followed by all the leading clergy such as Beecher, Savage, Chadwick, Swing, and other evolutionists. But with an inconsistency as remarkable as the uselessness of the gospels is apparent, the Christ idea is clung to as though—even when separated from the Old Testament foundation—it still had efficacy to save where there is no need of a savior. It is perfectly plain, it seems to us, that if the fall is a myth the mission of Christ must be entirely unnecessary. But the new school of preachers build upon the philanthropy of Christ a scheme but a little less ridiculous than the old theology they hav discarded. And many good souls, with a horror of hell that witnesses to the kindness of their hearts, but with a hope of heaven that does little credit to their understanding, take the middle ground of accepting the humanity of Christ, and by throwing in the word divinity now and then, with not much idea of its fitness and ignoring its meaning, call themselvs Christians. This is convenient and saves the inflicting of such pain as would attend the shattering of their ancestral and childhood idols, but it is an illogical begging of the whole question. For our part, we fail to see the great philanthropy and humanity of Christ. The original sayings and commands of Jesus are the dogmatic utterances of one who was much more in love with his own peculiar theology than with the world. His anxiety was to serve himself, not man. The philanthropic utterances attributed to him were certainly common sayings among the Eastern nations centuries before his alleged birth, and there is not the shadow of proof that he even repeated them, for none of the churches can pretend that his words were put on paper until he had been dust and ashes for years.

It is much easier, however, to wean the world outside of the churches from the Old Testament, with its cruel, tyrannical God, its records of illicit loves, murders, and barbarities, and its general opposition to known facts, than it is to get them to giv up the idea so zealously but falsely inculcated by the latter day Protestant church, that somehow Christ was an offshoot of some kind of divinity and might therefore, in some way still inexplicable, be a medium between this world and another one. It is easy to see that Joshua never got the sun to stand still, however loud he may hav commanded it to; easier still to understand that a world hundreds of thousands of years old was not created some six thousand years ago; and sensible people naturally revolt when their conception of a Supreme Power is narrowed down to an anthropomorphism that was not above showing its backparts to a murdering Hebrew. Yet the Old Testament is not a whit more absurd and fallacious than the New. "The New Testament," Paine says, "compared with the Old, is like a farce of one act, in which there is not room for very numerous violations of the unities." Yet there is room enough in the four gospels for the groundwork of a wild and visionary doctrin, blasphemously obscene, which has cursed the earth with as rapacious a horde of priests as ever throttled a nation, or tyrannized over a free people. Why Christians should reject as impossible the immaculate conception of Buddha, and accept that of Christ, is passing strange. Maya was, to say the least, as pure as Mary, and the story is told with as much appearance of probability. But why should we of this time believe either story? The glaring contradictions of the four gospels in other material matters render the New Testament, as a connected history of important events, monstrously absurd. Outside of the Koran there exist no more dangerous teachings. Mohammed and Paul might hav been advantageously yoked together, the main difference being that Mohammed, with true oriental sensuousness, peopled his heaven with dark-eyed houris, while Paul most cheerfully admitted bachelors and old maids. The Pentateuch is as much an imposition upon the world as the Koran, and the New Testament is bound up with the former too strongly to be separated by theological thaumaturgy. The clergy cannot make fish of one and flesh of the other. The Old Testament has over and over been shown to be false; we think the evidence presented in the articles referred to are equally conclusiv as to the New.

The Labor of the Mountain.

The Presbyterian church of this country has, according to the last detailed report of that organization, at work in her interests 5,218 ministers, 18,986 elders, 5,875 deacons, and 282 licentiates, who are probationers for the ministry, and who preach quite as often as the average minister. The total of these is 30,362 men who might be supposed to be more than ordinarily diligent in the "work of the Lord," and to be able when the question is asked as to what shall the harvest be to point to a goodly pile of garnered wheat in the shape of recruits. But the sum total of converts is only 32,000, or a fraction over one apiece for the ministers, elders, deacons, and fledglings. To bring forth this mouse about $8,000,000 hav been spent among 5,860 churches. This shows plainly the futility of Presbyterian effort to spread Calvinism. A much greater number of converts than this ought to hav come from the Sunday-schools alone, for these schools were attended by 663,000 children. It is probable that a very large majority of these 32,000 converts did come from the Sunday-schools, but if the Presbyterian church cannot "convert" more than five per cent of her young dupes, how do Dr. Hall and Talmage expect to vanquish the grown-up hosts of Satan in the shape of sensible adults? The case looks discouraging. Eight million of dollars, besides another million for home and foreign missions, spent, and not quite five per cent of the Sunday-school scholars converted! Two hundred and fifty dollars paid for each little soul, and it's a hundred to one they all backslide before they are ten years older.

And the past year has been one of unusual prosperity, we are seriously told by this official document. The Presbyterians hav scarcely caught "a note of anxiety or alarm at the assaults of unbelief. There is no intimation that the minds of our people are seriously disturbed." We should say not? The minds of a people who call this hot-house growth a substantial gain cannot be easily disturbed. An earthquake would only cause them to turn over in their pews and go to sleep on the other ear.

The population of the United States is growing, by births and immigration, at the rate of nearly two millions a year. The Presbyterians number, all told, something about one million, or over one-ninth of the total Protestant church membership. Of the two million increase Presbyterianism gets 32,000. At the same ratio the total gain of the whole Protestant church would be only 288,000. And we very much doubt if, when all the denominational "Year Books" and "Minutes" are in, the converts gained will foot up to that number. Where is the balance of the increase? The most of the immigrants will be found in the church of Rome, voting for John Kelly and the pope. A few of the others go to Utah, but the great bulk will grow up indifferentists, who will worship the pope, the book, or work for liberty and humanity with the Freethinkers, as darkness or light first breaks upon them.

The recruiting station of the church, as is seen, is the Sunday-school. Liberals should bear this in mind. Counter efforts should be made. League Sunday-schools should be opened, and the children of the "indifferentists" who now go to religious schools should be won to them. The Presbyterians hav averaged to spend nine dollars each for the support of their sectarianism. If the Liberals would average half as much the minutes of the next General Assembly would be more discouraging for the elect than the last. And the fruits of such an awakening would be worthy of the high aims of humanitarians. If 663,000 children could be gathered into Freethought Sunday-schools, we feel sure that one-half at least would become energetic workers for the advancement of the world's freedom and welfare.

Various Estimates of the German Monk.

The celebration of the 400th birthday of Luther brought out some curious incidents. At Eisleben, Germany, his birthplace, the event was noticed by processions in which brass bands and lager beer predominated. The Herald correspondent reports that every shade of religious belief was represented in the procession, some "Atheists" even taking part in the pageant. According to this correspondent, the Germans celebrated the event, "not because Luther was a Protestant—for outside of sectarian circles nobody cares what Luther's religion was—but because he was the first German who dared to think and speak freely."

This news will be gall and wormwood to the Protestant preachers of this country, who devoted last Sunday to lauding Luther to the skies, simply and solely because on him had been founded a "new religion." They forgot precisely what was to be expected they would forget, that Luther himself founded nothing new. He was a reformer of evils existing in the church. But as Paul built around Christ a theology of which that impecunious and visionary person never dreamed, so Calvin piled upon Luther's broad back the honors of the Reformation, and evolved from his diatribes against the pope the basis of a theology as mean, in many particulars, as Catholicism.

The different views taken of Luther by the preachers of this city are entertaining to the impartial Freethinker, who knows that midway between the fulsome eulogy and the bitter denunciation, lies the truth. The Rev. Dr. Armitage worked himself up to this sublime hight of oratory:

"Luther left the Diet [of Worms] a hero who had dared to stem the authority of powerful and baneful institutions. He had dared to invoke the fulminations of the Empire and of the Vatican. From that moment day began to break over Germany after a night of a thousand years, order came out of chaos, nations darted out of the death shade, races came from out their graves, a shock of life thrilled from the Rhine to the Vistula, and a new name was written on the scroll of the heavens from the Saxon mountains to the Pillars of Hercules. And to-day the name of the Apostle of Reformation livs in all its noontide glory. O Martin Luther! liv thou for all!"

Dr. Armitage, it will be recollected, is the divine who found in Ezekiel i, 16—"a wheel in the middle of a wheel"—a text upon which Christ based his statement that "the very hairs of your head are numbered." A minister who can deduce such a conclusion from such a text is obviously just the man to pass judgment upon events of the magnitude of the Reformation.

The Rev. Mr. Halsey drew a parallel between the Reformation and the parable of the man who fell among thieves:

"The common people were the traveler, and the corrupt clergy the thieves. Erasmus was the priest, and passed by to write an essay on the iniquity of robbery. Melancthon was the Levite; he passed by and sought to make a compromise with the robbers. Luther was the good Samaritan, who succored the traveler."

It strikes us that this parallel is as good to-day, with a slight change of names, as it was four hundred years ago.

Parson Newman, the "peripatetic consular theologian," Ingersoll once called him, weighed Luther up the best of any of the Protestants. He said:

"The whole world owed a great debt of gratitude to this Augustinian monk—Protestants, Freethinkers, and Catholics. The Freethinkers owed to him the right of private judgment; Catholics owed him a heavy debt of gratitude. It had never been Luther's desire to destroy the Catholic church, but merely to purify it. He had greatly aided in this work of purification, and for the strength and dignity which the Catholic church possessed to-day it was in a measure indebted to Martin Luther."

It of course remained for a Catholic to tell the disagreeable truths concerning Luther, and the Rev. Dr. Henry A. Brann, of St. Agnes, is not the man to be deterred from performing his duty, if we may judge by his sermon. He said:

"If Luther were to rise from his grave, he would not recognize in modern Protestantism the system of religion which he had formulated. The lecturer asserted that the truth had been suppressed by Protestant writers in relating Luther's life, and defied any Protestant publisher to giv an English version of all of Luther's works, some of which, he said, were among the worst specimens of indecent literature. He then sketched Luther's life, arguing, from the Reformer's own words, his hatred of philosophy and the natural sciences; his opposition to scientific progress by his exaggerated supernaturalism; his intolerance of Jews, and those who claimed the right of private judgment; his truckling to the princes, and his encouragement of civil despotism. The abolition by Luther of marriage as a sacrament, and his permission to Philip of Hesse to keep two wives were insisted upon. It was argued that Luther taught that there were no natural virtues, for man was totally depraved, and that there was no moral responsibility for crime, since man had no free will. The personal character of Luther was touched on. He was charged with brutality of language, with sensuality and drunkenness. Dr. Brann quoted from Jansen, the German historian, passages from Luther's letters, with the view of showing that he and Melancthon were drunk at Weimar; that for fifteen years before Luther's death he spent every night in the 'Black Eagle' tavern 'drinking beer and abusing the pope.' He was compared to Reformers like St. Charles Borromeo, St. Francis of Assisi, and St. Dominic, who, it was said, reformed themselvs first and then succeeded in reforming others."

Between Armitage and Brann, it will be observed, there is a wide difference of opinion. The one is ridiculous, the other scurrilous. Both are biased, and their rodomontade affords good reasons for thinking it impossible for sectarians to tell the truth about each other.

Editorial Notes.

We learn that Mr. F. D. Lacy is not vanquished yet. Desiring to take advantage of Mr. Truesdell's kind offer in his "Bottom Facts," as well as that given in The Truth Seeker of October 20th, Mr. Lacy sent a contract for Mr. Truesdell to sign, which the latter refuses to do. We hav not learned the nature of that writing, but hope to receive a copy of it soon. Arrangements are said to be in progress whereby the "independent slate writing" shall reach a climax before long.

Evidently the authorities of India do not appreciate the missionaries. The Canada Presbyterian missionaries in Indore are denied the right by the city authorities to preach or teach the people, and the higher British officials uphold them. In 1879 an order was issued forbidding all Christian work in the city; and subsequently a mission school was closed by order of the Durbar, because a written agreement promising that no Christian instruction should be given was refused. The two missionaries addressed a letter to the assistant agent of the governor general, informing him of the interference and insult offered them by the Indore police. His reply informs them that he will not interfere, charges them with violating a city ordinance, and questions whether they hav any "right" that has been "infringed." The missionaries, after sending a reply to this, addressed a memorial to the viceroy, by whom they were referred to the local powers. An ultimatum from the resident agent stated that the maharajah was strongly averse to having the missionaries continue their work, refused them a site for building purposes, and advised them to seek the counsel of their church board before expending more money on "what may prove to be a fruitless undertaking."

Some reckless individual having accused Dr. Foote of having his "Plain Home Talk" and other works written for him, the insinuation being that he is unable to write them himself, the doctor issues a challenge in his last Health Monthly in which, after declaring the author of the rumor to be some envious character, braggart, pretender, and fraud, he offers to deposit two thousand dollars to the order of a board of arbitration if the informer will deposit a like sum, the loser to divide the same equally between the Boston and New York Institutes of Heredity—the arbitrators to thoroughly investigate the charge and decide according to legal evidence. To cover a possible contingency, namely, the impecuniosity of the genius who might claim to hav prepared these works for the press, and who could not put up $2,000 in the manner prescribed, Dr. Foote offers to pay the expenses of the arbitration if he will establish to the satisfaction of the board of arbitration, first his impecuniosity, and secondly his authorship or co-authorship of any of the aforenamed works, and the doctor further offers to publish to the world the result of the inquiry to the end that the rose shall no longer blossom unseen. We think the genial doctor is unnecessarily exercised by these contemptible rumors. No one who knows him, and especially no one who has been treated by him, will accuse him of lack of knowledge or ability. We know several of his patients and they all speak of him in the highest terms.

A correspondent sends us a copy of a religious paper containing an extract from Pentecost's "The Infidel Answered," and requests that it be attended to. We hav read the article marked. It contains just one "argument," the same that Talmage advanced in his sermons on Ingersoll, which is that a larger number of Bibles hav been issued than of any other book, therefore it must be true. He uses nearly two columns in ringing the changes upon the assertion, interspersing the assertion with such well-known lies as that "Paine tumbled into a drunkard's grave," and others worn too threadbare to need notice. Whether Talmage or Pentecost is entitled to the credit of originating the stupendous argument that because the Bible has been widely circulated it is divine and true, we do not pretend to decide. Probably either would not be above stealing it from the other. But the theft is a good deal like that of the colored gentleman who went into the melon-patch in the dark, and was immensely disgusted on emerging into the light to find his anticipated melon a worthless green pumpkin. Colonel Ingersoll paid his respects to the story, when told by Talmage, in this way: "Is it not simply amazing that a doctor of divinity, a Presbyterian clergyman, in this day and age, should seriously rely upon the number of copies of the Bible to substantiate the inspiration of that book? Is it possible to conceive of anything more fig-leaflessly absurd? If there is anything at all in this argument, it is that all books are true in proportion to the number of copies that exist. Of course, the same rule will work with newspapers; so that the newspaper having the largest circulation can consistently claim infallibility. Suppose that an exceedingly absurd statement should appear in the New York Herald, and some one should denounce it as utterly without any foundation in fact or probability; what would Mr. Talmage think if the editor of the Herald, as an evidence of the truth of the statement, should rely on the fact that his paper had the largest circulation of any in the city? One would think that the whole church had acted upon the theory that a falsehood repeated often enough was as good as the truth."

The love now existing between the followers of the humble Nazarene was well brought out in Glasgow, Scotland, at the laying of the foundation stone of the new municipal buildings. The corporation gave a grand banquet in the city hall, and 550 gentlemen were present. After the usual toasts the Roman Catholic Archbishop Eyre rose to offer the toast to the local magnates; but before he had an opportunity of speaking, a Presbyterian minister, the Rev. Robert Thomson, sprang to his feet, and cried excitedly:

"I protest against Eyre being in that position. [Hisses.] Yes, and I will appeal to a court of law against it. [Laughter and hisses.] I protest, my Lord Provost, against the bringing of a Papist here. [Hisses, and a voice—"Behave yourself."] I call you to order for it. [Prolonged hisses, amid which the reverend gentleman resumed his seat.]

Here the archbishop got in his word. Then Sheriff Clark spoke, ending with the sentiment, "Let Glasgow flourish." Here Mr. Thomson broke in again:

"But, 'by the preaching of the Word;' that is the Protestant toast. [Cries of 'Hush,' and hisses."]

The report continues:

"Baillie Wilson afterward proposed 'The Clergy.' In his younger days, he said, that toast used to be 'The Clergy of the Church of Scotland.' [The Rev. Mr. Thomson—And it will be again yet. Cries of 'Oh!' and laughter.] The Protestant church of Scotland. [Laughter.] No popery. [Cries of 'Hush,' and hisses.] Baillie Wilson went on to remark that it was then changed to 'The Evangelical Clergy of Scotland,' but that now they had another new departure, and it was 'The Clergy,' pure and simple. [Laughter.] He asked them to drink to the clergy pure and simple—[Laughter]—especially simple. [Renewed laughter.] 'Mr. Thomson—No popery! No popery! [Cries of 'Hush.']"

And so he kept on interrupting, now striding up to the archbishop and calling for "three groans for the papist and the magistrates who dared to put him here," and "three groans for the pope," till the city chamberlain and the city officer "induced" him to leave the hall. This reminds one of the "good old days" when Protestant and papist burnt and imprisoned by turns, as Catholic or Protestant occapied the throne of England.

Another besides The Truth Seeker has taken John Swinton to task for a slur at a Freethinker. Mr. Swinton's paper is such a snappy sheet, and is fighting monopoly and upholding the rights of the working people in such a dashing manner, that it is a pity he should not be with us against robbing the poor people to pay taxes on houses of worship occupied by the wealthy. Mr. Swinton tells a good deal of truth in his paper, but dare he tell his constituency of laborers that the priesthood is their foe and in league with the grinding monopolies? W. P. Doty, of Port Jervis, hits the nail squarely in the following letter to Mr. Swinton:

"Your paper swings right out in the proper current. But what is meant by telling Wilson Macdonald that 'he must steer his gondola away from the pirate craft of Bob Ingersoll?' Why single out the clergy and present your compliments to them? Does this paper not know that Mr. Ingersoll is a representativ man in the only party in this country—the secularists—which advocates human rights more vigorously, systematically, and persistently than any other army of reformers? The party of which he is an honored representativ did more to make our republic a possibility, through the efforts of Paine, Jefferson, Franklin, and others; and in later days it was the old Infidel, Abner Kneeland, who threw open his hall to the early abolitionists to speak in when every church was closed against them, and when the clergy were almost unanimous in proclaiming slavery a 'divine institution.' The anti-monopoly principles hav always been earnestly fought for by the secularists. Does the Paper not know that there is not a so-called vested right of the money powers which the church en masse does not defend? What robbery of human rights has there been which the church has not apologized for and defended? When was there ever a strike for better wages, or for liberty of conscience, or for political freedom that the church has not opposed? What struggling toiler, who does not want 'charity,' but demands simply justice, equity, has not been kicked, cuffed, starved, and frowned at by the church, because he was not 'respectable,' but was a 'disturber,' a 'socialist,' and a 'demoralizer' of society? What iniquitous, inquisitorial, slave-breeding law is there that the church does not defend and demand its enforcement whenever violated? The kings, the church, and the monopolists are all the time clamoring for more law and more protection. They hav legislatures sitting six months in every year, the world over, to make laws to rob the honest laborers of the land. They pretend the people need these laws to govern them. But it is all bosh. The world is governed too much now. That is what ails it."

We hope Mr. Swinton will change his ways, for his efforts are too valuable to be nullified by a sickening truculence to gospel sharps.

The Attitude of the Church to the World.

In spite of the judicial, if not very judicious, reply of the late Jeremiah Black to Mr. Ingersoll, the latter gentleman's remarks at the opening of his article on "The Christian Religion," stand as they were penned. The pulpit is losing its influence on the pew, and the two together stand in a similar attitude to the great majority outside the walls. No amount of clerical "bluff," and no "police" arguments will serve the turn. The parson often accommodates his doctrins to the times and to his flock, and churches with a little worldly wisdom and an eye to a longer lease of tenure are subordinating creeds, relaxing their limitations, and upholding what they are pleased to term a "broad and liberal Christianity." These are the signs of the times we liv in. Among the striking utterances of the week is that of the Rev. Emory J. Haynes, of Brooklyn, contesting the idea that Brooklyn is a church-going city. Of 150,000 young men, not one in ten goes to church. While 100,000 souls hav been added to the population within the last six years, not ten new churches hav been built. Who, after this, will say that religion has a very strong hold on the people?

In offering a few remarks on the attitude of the Christian church to the world, I refer to no particular denomination of Christians, but to the professors of Christianity, clerical and lay, as a whole, and in a unified sense, if the idea of unity is possible where the elements are so varied and often so discordant. I am not an enemy to the church—if she can make her place good; and I think people go too far when they deny certain benefits which she is conferring on society. There are hard-headed men, without a particle of what is called religious belief, who, yet, nominally, support the Christian religion, on account of its supposed conservativ social effects. The inculcated belief in a hereafter and all that it implies they imagin must be a powerful encouraging and restraining force in the community on all those not sufficiently advanced to love righteousness for its own sake. But nevertheless, to stand, the church and its teaching must hav a practical significance to the world, and this they cannot be said to hav in our day. The church fails to satisfy the requirements of the present century. We ask of her a fact and she givs us a song. She stands forth in the capacity of teacher, and teaches nothing. Between the harang of the evangelical minister and the yell of the Salvation Army, the difference is not in kind but in degree. We want to hav the demonstration of the facts that the church ostentatiously claims as such—a personal, living God, who really is a father; a future state; a probation here and a reward hereafter, and in place thereof we are treated to mere platitudes, and the technicalities of "original sin," "redemption," "imputed righteousness," "salvation," "grace," etc., with hardly a word as to those great truths—if truths they be—which must be facts to us before real religious experience is possible. The average preacher evades everything by assuming everything. This might hav been all very well for previous centuries, but it will not do for this one. We expect more from Darwin and Huxley, and the church must be content to stand on the same footing.

But if some preacher more practical-minded than the rest attempts to show his credentials, what are they? "The gospel is true because it brings comfort." I dare say it would bring comfort to many of us to believe ourselvs millionaires, but unfortunately the majority of us are not, and we do not see how belief will help the case. "The Bible has been the mainstay of numberless noble minds." Doubtless; but that proves nothing. One divine puts on a melting mood, and cries piteously, "The Bible was your mother's book; over it she prayed, and often its pages hav been wet with her supplicating tears in your behalf. You cannot—you dare not let it go." Very good to "bring down the house," but still valueless on the main point.

Another ardent preacher asserts that all true civilization we owe to Christianity. Even were this statement true, we would feel like saying, "We don't want to be civilized on a possible lie."

I will not pause longer to enumerate such worse than pueril arguments. Let them be all true or all false; they are simply evading the question. What I hav a right to demand of my self-constituted spiritual teacher is, not whether "Christ's blood cleanseth from all sin," but, first, whether there really is a Christ, proved in terms that conquer my doubts. I want definit proof of the facts whereon Christianity is supposed to stand, and I am entitled to it before pinning my faith to that creed. Given the facts, perhaps experimental and emotional religion may come after; but to put emotional religion first and let the facts take care of themselvs, or be proved by the emotion, is building our house from the chimneys downward. I want to lay the foundation first.

Discard the priesthood, then, and refer me to the Protestant's talisman, the Bible—am I any the better off? Leaving the Old Testament out of consideration, to save time and space, it appears that, centuries ago, a number of stories—part admirable, part pueril, and part evidently fiction—with likewise a quantity of pious counsel of the same general character, were written by Christian apostles; and out of these writings a few—possibly those least objectionable—were selected and constituted a canon (what authority had anyone for this?); and I am called on by the church to recognize this "canon" as the word of God. But what of the books that hav been left outside? I see no real reason for drawing this hard and fast line between the one set and the other. It is true that the apocryphal books are those most pueril and most grossly fictitious, but they present much in common with the so-called genuin ones, and, in one case at least, an "inspired" writer refers to a circumstance which they alone describe—the descent of Christ into hades—thus placing inspiration itself on their level. I regard the uncanonical or apocryphal books (so far from showing by contrast, as is claimed, the excellence of those received by the church) as the most unfortunate fact connected with the New Testament. They must hav been written in a sort of good faith, or well-meaning fanaticism, and they sufficiently prove to me the low historical value of the general testimony regarding Jesus.

But, should I go so far as to accept these canonical scriptures, the difficulty does not end. One part does not agree with another; and what is the value of such a book as the Revelation, of which no one can say he understands a word? Is it not the business of a revelation to make clear, and not confuse? Why hav four gospels—as if one, coming from God, were not enough?

Further, I am taught by nature all that is necessary for my earthly life, which will last but a few years; yet for my heavenly career, supposed to be eternal, and therefore of infinitly greater concern, and my preparation therefor, I am left to a book, of which, had I been born in India or China, I might never hav known even the name, or seen the cover!—a book which, as it is, is nothing but a doubt and a mystery.

If I go to church, none of these questions are answered, or even attempted to be answered. Yet these are the things I wish most to know. All I hear of there is the assumed love, justice, mercy, etc., of God, of the precious blood of Christ, etc., and much more of the like. Prove to me these things, and that Jesus is alive and in heaven, and then it will be time for me to pray to him, and to love him as a present God, and not as a memory.

If the church is still to lead the way, and to teach the world, I hav pointed out the inevitable work before her, in which she is to succeed or fail. She must rest on more than emotion; men must be convinced rather than "converted;" otherwise her place will soon be among the things that were and are not.

To me the church appears heavily hampered today. She contains two incongruous elements—the ethical and the historical; she must get rid of the latter. It needs no miraculous histories to teach men morals. The Bible is already practically relegated to its proper place. The intelligence of the world has done with its fables of a six day's creation, of Adam's fall, of the retributiv flood; even orthodox divines now hesitate to sanction the predatory barbarism of Israelitish hordes, on account of the pretended approval of Jehovah. Its decalog must stand on ground higher even than Sinai's top; and the precepts of Jesus appeal to all mankind without the aid of miraculous jugglery to support them. Yet perish all these cradle-stories, and all that is good and worthy in the Bible remains. Not one really good precept that it contains has lost aught of its power. Even should immortality, from being the doubt of some, become the despair of all, this part of the Bible would still hold its place. Upon the question whether, in the new order of things, the church will cease to be a power, or whether, shorn of her mediæval character, she will still survive to point mankind to a nobler, higher life on earth, I will not enter.

Since the foregoing was written, I notice that Prof. Adler, in a late address, has touched on this last point—the necessity for a religion, not of the supernatural, but founded on morality. He thinks there is a natural craving for religion among the people, which must be satisfied. In spite of what he says of the persistence of the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Episcopal churches, it is impossible that, with the spread of education, "the old inflexible dogmas believed in the middle ages" can permanantly hold their place. Is not this very persistence of a portion of the church a sign of weakness? Quos deus vult perdere prius dementat. How the modern party shall depart from its "purely negativ warfare," and construct a religion under conditions so altered, I leave it for the professor to say. ROUNDHEAD.

In Favor of Prohibition.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I can join with Jamieson, "Liberta," Mrs. E. Heddon, and any others in "three cheers vs. 'The Seventh Demand.'" I will not take up your valuable space any further than to say that I hav taught it with my lips and pen for over twenty years—my argument, If we hav a right to prohibit anything, we hav a right to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicants as a beverage. ELLA E. GIBSON.

Barre, Mass., Nov. 6, A.S. 283.

Against Prohibition.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was looking over a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of last April, and came across an article by M. Farrington, of Denver, Iowa, in regard to prohibition, and I thought, notwithstanding I hav written something before on the subject, I would venture again in the same direction.

There is not, of course, very much that is new that may be said on the prohibition question. It is an old and "hackneyed subject." The changes hav been rung again and again on this question. In referring to it, I may exclaim, as Isaac Watts did in one of his hymns: "Great God! there's nothing new!" But there is one thing, in connection with it, on which I believe I hav never touched. It is this: The facilities which laws based on prohibition hold out for men (and women too, perhaps,) to procure in a roundabout way, and under various subterfuges, intoxicants. I know of one case in particular where these methods were put in requisition. The outcome of the whole thing has been, in numberless cases, that people hav taxed their brains to invent all sorts of pretexts for procuring rum, gin, brandy, wine, et hoc genus omne. This I consider one of the prime objections against the entire system of prohibition, and it alone is quite enough, in my opinion, to condemn the whole thing. We had a liquor agency here under the "Maine law," passed in 1852. And the law specified that the various sorts of liquors should be sold for mechanical, chemical, and medical purposes.

It was by no means an uncommon thing for some ingenious device to be employed by which to procure "the needful." A law which furnishes such facilities as the "Maine law," or "Prohibitory law," should not be countenanced. It should, on the contrary, be opposed in every way. A judicious license law, is, in my judgment, the thing above all others which should be employed. Excuse the length of this communication. Very truly yours,

South Dartmouth. EDWIN H. BARTLETT.

Resolutions Affecting the Mormons.

On Sunday, Nov. 4th, Hon. A. B. Bradford delivered his lecture on the "Model Saints of the Old Testament," printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 3d inst., before the Pittsburgh League. At the conclusion Harry Hoover, secretary, offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Polygamy has insidiously fastened itself as a cancer upon one of the territories of the Union, and threatens to extend its evil influence into others, thus destroying the homogeneousness of our institutions, and endangering the peace of the country.

WHEREAS, Polygamy is a Bible institution, practiced by the most eminent of the Old Testament saints, Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon, all of whom are indorsed as models and exemplars of the saving grace of faith by the apostle Paul in the eleventh chapter of his epistle to the Hebrews.

WHEREAS, The argument used by our foreign missionaries long ago, in justifying themselvs for admitting polygamists into the mission churches as good Christians, has never been answered, viz., that besides being positivly permitted in the Old Testament, it is nowhere condemned in the New Testament, but is connived at, if not tacitly approved by Paul, in 1 Timothy, iii, 2, where he requires a bishop to be the husband of one wife, clearly teaching by implication that other church-members might hav more than one; therefore

Resolved, That in the judgment of this meeting it is both inconsistent and impossible for the Congress of the United States to extirpate polygamy by law, so long as it can be claimed to be, as it is by the Mormons in Utah Territory, a religious institution sanctioned in the Bible, and sanctified by the example of "saints" whose lives are held up to us as models by the "inspired" apostle Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews.

Resolved, That in view of these obvious facts, the first thing to be done by the American church, before it can consistently file its protest against polygamy, is to disarm the Mormons of their only weapon of defense, by declaring the truth that the Bible is not, neither does it claim to be, a plenarily and infallibly inspired standard of faith and morals; and that it condemns the polygamous lives of the Old Testament saints as wrong, together with the indorsement of the same by the alleged approval of God in the case of David (see 1 Kings xv, 5), and by the apostle Paul in the cases of the other polygamists who are named and canonized by him in his epistle to the Hebrews.

Resolved, That in view of the insidious origin of slavery, another Old Testament institution, and what it cost the American people in blood and treasure to abolish it, it is the judgment of this meeting that Congress, during the territorial status of Utah, has the only alternativ in regard to Mormonism, either to let it entirely alone, trusting to the general spread of knowledge, and the monogamic influences of our civilization, ultimately to cure the evil of polygamy; or to destroy it immediately and relentlessly by the sword as a political nuisance, since history in general, and the history of Mormonism in particular, proves that the persecution of any religious creed or church as such, has only had the effect of making it grow and strengthen more than it otherwise would. The people of the United States, in the exercise of their sovereign power as a nation, hav the same right, in Congress assembled, to suppress polygamy in any state or territory as a political evil, that they would hav to suppress an organization for setting up an independent kingly government on the soil and under the flag of the republic.

F. F. FOLLET has issued a catalog of the members of the State Liberal League of Illinois, adding a synopsis of the principles of the League, extracts from letters to him by Ferris Burr, and T. C. Leland, giving a short history of his work in Illinois, and calling for aid for further efforts. The catalog will be interesting to Illinois Liberals, who should help its compiler to go on and organize more Leagues. Mr. Follet is agent for the Liberal papers, and fills orders for any of the Truth Seeker Publications.

Letters from Friends.

WILSONVILLE, Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2.00, for which continue to send THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as that sum will pay for it. It is a most excellent paper, and one which every Freethinker may well profit by. You can count on me as a life subscriber. Long may THE TRUTH SEEKER flourish.

Yours respectfully, A. WILSON.

FORT MCKAVETT, TEXAS, Oct. 18, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed postal note of $3.85, which apply as directed. Being a member of a pious family—one brother and brother-in-law of mine are in the "service of the Lord," I shunned all Freethought literature until I came to Texas, where I chanced to see a copy of your TRUTH SEEKER, which I studied with interest. I then became a trial subscriber at once, and hail now every Saturday this truly valuable journal with delight, giving it precedence over all other papers.

Thanks for your leniency in regard to my late remittance, and wishing success to THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain,

Respectfully yours, H. KNAUSENBERGER.

HAMMONTON, N. J., Nov. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5, for which giv us credit on account. We want D. M. Bennett's likeness, a likeness full life-size (fifty cents). Wish we could send you some names, but most of our acquaintances seem too timid to take so radical a paper. If you hav anything to send to Brother Hacker please forward fifty cents of this to him and charge to us. This will make $1 out of the whole amount, leaving $4 to apply on THE TRUTH SEEKER, a paper nearly as outspoken as the Pleasure Boat was fifty years since. I remember well how we loved to devour its contents even then. One can see by his (H.'s) contributions that he has not yet ceased to be plain-spoken when he attempts to criticise.

Respectfully yours, D. R. WOLLISON.

TROY, N. Y., Oct. 4, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read Dr. George Hardcastle's and Mr. T. Winter's letters. I hav a desire to bring the Spiritualists and Materialists together. I believe in both, but I want to know what makes matter think, and I want to know what constitutes spirit that is said to materialize and show itself. I hav not seen it. Mr. Winter claims a body without a soul, and Mr. Hardcastle a soul with many bodies. I am going to ask if electricity and magnetism are not the soul of matter and of Spiritualism. I think that when matter dies it unites with matter, and soul with its affinity, or electricity and magnetism. I want some of the contributors to your valuable paper to answer. I think if I am an ignorant novice it is the duty of some Liberal friend to enlighten me.

S. G. SCOLLAY.

MINERAL SPRINGS, ARK., Oct. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2.00, which please place to my credit, and send me statement, that I may send you balance due, if any, as soon as I get it. When I tell you something about my age and feebleness, you will, I hope, excuse my negligence in not remitting promptly. I will be eighty-nine years o d the 5th of next November, and hav not walked without my crutches for the last four years.

I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER eight years, and you may know that I take a deep interest in it, or I would hav stopped it; but I expect to keep taking it as long as I can pay for it, as it is the only paper that I take.

I am a man who has always read any kind of books and papers that suited my taste, though I hav had many hard fights in behalf of THE TRUTH SEEKER and its teachings, and expect to continue the battle as long as I liv, as its founder, D. M. Bennett, was a man whose principles and arguments I could always rely upon and indorse.

As I hav never seen anything in your paper from this part of Arkansas, I thought a few lines would not be anything out of place, as I am and shall remain a true and lasting friend to the paper and its readers. Yours truly, JAMES BOVEN.

CARTHAGE, MO., Oct. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been taking your most valuable paper about two months on trial subscription, and will renew for a year as soon as the three months expire.

I always hav, since my earliest recollection, questioned the existence of a God. I hav read the Bible and wondered, time after time, how people could take it as their guide, and worship the God that inspired the writing of such a contradictory, unreasonable, and obscene book as the Bible. I hav wondered how such a mass of people could worship that changeable, fickle, ignorant, lustful, revengeful, and wrathful God that is set forth in such terms in the Bible, and then misrepresent him and call him allwise and loving. It is virtually ignorance caused by going to church and letting a mullet-head of a preacher do the thinking for them, and never thinking a minute for themselvs whether his explanation is reasonable or not. I am not very well posted in Liberalism; but am a firm believer in freedom in every sense. Several of us are taking your paper, and if I hold out faithful to the end there will be a good many more take it, for I feel it my duty to do something for the cause of humanity, and I know of no better way than by circulating THE TRTUH SEEKER. For a starter I will send you two subscribers.

G. C. KELLOGG.

GRAND ISLAND, Oct. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find some names I send you as targets for your Freethought arrows. These men are all more or less Liberal in their views, although all are not entirely free from superstitious influences. If mental darkness can be entirely removed from one human intellect out of so many names I shall feel amply rewarded.

I read in your last issue of a minister who charged that "all Liberals were blacklegs, and all blacklegs were Infidels." I wonder he did not tell his silly dupes that all murderers, robbers, drunkards, extortioners, pirates, adulterers, and liars were all Infidels, and all Infidels were murderers, robbers, drunkards, extortioners, pirates, back-biters, and liars. Christian ministers never do any of these things—never gamble in mining stocks nor speculate in bonds unjustly fastened upon their fellow-beings; never buy up lands for speculation, nor oppress poor people by landlord usurpation; never take sides with the gambling monopolists, nor use their influence in favor of the rich to swindle the poor. Oh, no! Christians never gamble, swindle, nor outwit anybody. Never lie, nor do any unchaste thing. No Christian ever goes to state's prison, and no Infidel ever keeps out of it if we believe these clerical falsifiers. But no wonder these pulpit-jumpers fib and dread the truth, when their scheme of salvation is founded upon falsehood, filth, and fiction. Their holy Bible is filled with lies, contradictions, and inconsistencies. It has the biggest snake story, the biggest fish story, the biggest ghost story, the biggest witch story, the biggest giant story, and the biggest astronomical story ever recorded by any romancer or necromancer that ever lived. It can beat Baron Munchausen clear out of sight, and riddle the stuffing out of all the dime-novel writers in Europe or America for a genuin old whopper of a lie. The worst criminals murderers, robbers, drunkards, swindlers, adulterers, liars, extortioners, slave-holders, and tyrants figure among and compose its leading characters, and the worst, as well as the most despotic, governments on the globe to-day are Christian governments, that carry a book of lies and filth in one hand, and a sword in the other, and go abroad robbing and murdering weaker and less harmful nations than themselvs. And when they find nothing to steal abroad, they rob and oppress their own subjects, stamp upon the human intellect, and deny people the right to think; therefore Christianity is not only a gambler's, but a pirate's, religion. WALTER SIMONDS.

DETROIT, MICH., NOV. 4, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav allowed my subscription to run over considerably this time, because I hav not felt like writing. I am getting discouraged with the slow progress that Liberals are making toward liberty. It seems as if every new reform movement must stop as soon as it gets a few steps ahead or above old ideas. Mr. E. C. Walker seems to be about the only Liberal that comes out with the true and only meaning of liberty. But no one seems to know how to obtain liberty. In 1865 one-half of this country had two thousand millions of free legal tender money in circulation. Then our servants in Congress sold to the money-lenders the privilege of destroying six hundred and fifty millions of this the people's debt-paying money, for the purpose of making room for their shinplaster private notes, called "national bank bills," and causing such want as to oblige all those using money to come to them and borrow this substitute for money, and pay them interest over and over again on the same bills, as often as they returned and were reissued from the bank. All business that cannot be done for cash is done for credit, and is at once debt drawing interest from business and labor. This very soon transfers the possession of title to all property and wealth from those who pay interest to those who draw interest. The rapidity of the transfer was never shown in the world before as it was in this country when Congress, in 1876 (eleven years after the iniquitous bargain and sale), appointed a committee to ascertain the amount of debts of all kinds in the country. This committee reported that the aggregate of all debts in the country amounted to twenty-six billion forty-nine million dollars, while the report of the census of 1870 gave the aggregate wealth of the country as but fourteen billions of dollars; so that with about one-fifth the amount of legal debt-paying money for fifty millions of people that was in circulation in 1865 for twenty-five millions, the laborers and producers of this country hav been trying to pay the interest on debts—fictitious debts—amounting to twelve billion forty-nine million more than all the wealth of the nation.

Was ever a people in worse slavery? Want of money in circulation sufficient to do all business and keep the people free of debt has been the cause of the fall of every nation that ever existed so far; and it is the root and cause of all of the vice, crime, drunkenness, suicide, and misery in this land to-day; and the only way to hav a free people is to pay all debts in full legal tender government money—the same that was destroyed for the very purpose of making those debts.

An eminent writer said long ago that whoever lends money or draws interest on debts is the master, and whoever pays interest on debts is the slave. So, whoever controls the amount of money in a country controls the amount of happiness and comfort, or vice, crime, and misery, and should be held responsible for it.

Let the believers in liberty take hold of this question, and they will hav the greatest question that was ever put forth. A free money makes a free people—free from debt. There can be no other liberty that does not depend on this, and no one can giv one sensible reason against it, except the privilege of supporting a lot of paupers. I. H. WOOD.

SOLON, OHIO, NOV. 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The discussions in THE TRUTH SEEKER between Spiritualists and Materialists hav been interesting somewhat, yet after all they are old and threadbare. We know not when they begin nor when they will end. The Witch of Endor was a Spiritualist, and there were laws then existing which she was afraid of. There were those who believed then as now, and those who disbelieved, and immortality is as much in doubt as ever. The other world has not proved, nor is it yet able to prove itself satisfactorily to every mind. As learning and knowledge increase doubts do not diminish. It is said the graves were once opened, and they that were dead arose, and it remains that they were resurrected for no useful purpose, so far as this dispute is concerned. It seems that one might reasonably inquire, Why continue it? Will any new light ever be thrown upon it?

Mount Olympus has a brilliant record in history. So has Nirvana, the Egyptian Elysium, and the Jewish New Jerusalem "of many mansions." I hav never gone over any of them. I hav spent a tolerably long life in listening to stories about them, and when I finish it here I hav no great anxiety about going to any of them. Hopes in regard to them, or any immortal conditions pictured by modern Spiritualism, do not warm my feelings in the least. I am as wintry as your stanch Materialist, Mr. Winter, of Cincinnati, and I cannot appreciate the arguments his opponents use against him any more than I can the doctrins of John Calvin or of Buddha, for there is in this modern Spiritualism considerable of the "elect and reprobation" belief, and not a little that looks like the transmigration of souls.

I hav been on the anxious seat for a good many years, and visited the Fox family once in Cleveland, but hav come to the conclusion that I am not elected to be saved. And again, such reports as I hav had from the supposed spirit world were such that I could only account for them on the ground that the souls of my departed friends had taken up their abode in some inferior organisms or forms of life, probably as a punishment for their sins. The evidence of any improvement in their mental states in what is called the "summer-land" was far from satisfactory. Possibly they will come around all right in the time appointed by the great Spiritualist of India, after many probationary transmigrations.

It seems to me that Mr. Winter's adversaries claim about the same power and authority that other vicegerents, and popes, and priests of the other-world doctrins hav claimed. Andrew Jackson Davis's style is, "I am impressed to say." John in Revelation assumes no more. This is substantially inspiration from ghosts, holy or otherwise, with a commission to preach "glad tidings" from over the Jordan of death. Differences in mere terms of expression do not amount to much. The distance between myself and an inspired writer, or a priest who says he is "called" to intercede for me, is no greater than between myself and one of these "impressed" mediumistic revelators. They all claim to be benefactors, endowed beyond myself, elected and selected, chosen, tested, commissioned, "called," exalted, privileged, and canonized, as I am certainly not. I cannot distinguish between them.

I hav lost a great many friends and acquaintances. I hav written "lost." Let it stand. It is correct. Still their lives are woven into mine in such a manner that they will liv as long as I do. After this manner will the first human being continue to the last, and after him, in my opinion, humanity will hav no abiding place. I cannot then people this earth with spirits tipping tables and ringing bells for each other's diversion. Mohammed's paradise would suit me better than such Spiritualism. I hav no longings for such a dance. The seances and manifestations that I hav witnessed, and that hav been reported in the highest quarters, only remind me of the "unco' sight" that bewitched Tam O'Shanter's eyes the night he looked into "old Alloway's haunted church." N. EGGLESTON.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, Oct. 21, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on my paper that the time is drawing near for me to remit to keep on good terms with the fearless TRUTH SEEKER. I like its tone and the various correspondence of its publications. I also admire what you hav published in regard to the late Rochester Convention. I admire the language of Mrs. Colby; she is a noble, intelligent lady in the cause of truth and mental liberty.

And so are all the other ladies that spoke there. The utterances of Mr. Wakeman in reply to Mr Mitchell are sublime. Mr Mitchell will do well to heed the warning that is being rung through the land by men and women who stand by their own reason, and defend it against all odds of all theology and priestly folly, and silly Bible humbugging stories. Mr. Mitchell's talk at that convention appears empty and nonsensical to me. He still sticks to the false, empty idea of the personal Jew God. Now, Mr. Mitchell, can you giv us Freethinkers any clue as to where this Jew God is located? and what part of this mighty universe he occupies, while this world, with all pertaining to it, is flying through the regions of space with amazing velocity of speed around its grand, sublime, and glorious center (the sun), and millions upon millions of others of the heavenly bodies and planets, many of which are many thousand times larger than this world on which we liv, all moving in silent grandeur and flying through the mighty regions of infinit space with wonderful velocity of speed. This the grand principles of science has demonstrated. Now, if you, Mr. Mitchell, or any of your fellow-priests can tell us of the location of this old Bible Jew-God, outside of your vain imagination, I mean my word for it, we Freethinkers will turn from our godless ways and join the church. Yes, the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Mr. Wakeman, and the irrepressible Col. Ingersoll, and many others. We demand facts; figures won't do, and if you cannot answer those questions the best thing for you to do is to get the pamphlet of the late D. M. Bennett, "Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments," also the pamphlet, "Jehovah Unveiled, or the Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated;" also the "Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe;" then read Paine's "Age of Reason," and cast all prejudices aside, and let your manly reason hav its proper sway, and subscribe for the fearless TRUTH SEEKER; then you will be in a situation to help to break up the Bible priestcraft of the world, for I tell you its final doom is sealed.

Well, Mr. Editor, I see by the Sydney Liberal of August 5th that Mr. H. A. Kemp, who was put in prison in England with Mr. Foote, has served his three months and been released. It says that although only twenty-five years of age, the hardships of prison fare and life hav so affected his health that he had to take to his bed. Poor young fellow! Oh, what an infernal shame! I supppose the holy, pious Bible Christians of England will be glad if the poor fellow's constitution is broken, so that his life may be short.

I see Mr. Charles Bright, of Sydney, has had another two nights' debate with one Rev. Mr. Evans. As usual Mr. Evans came off second best. My sister tells me Mr. Bright is not well. Freethought appears to be moving pretty lively in New South Wales, and I say Amen to it; let the mighty truths of nature's laws and her divine forces prevail.

Well, I am sorry to learn that dear Mrs. Bennett is not in good health; but I hope she will improve. As the times are now, THE TRUTH SEEKER needs resolute men to carry on the good work of breaking up the Christian humbug and its sore curse to the land I mean this infernal Mormon, filthy, debasing humbug as well; for it is a sore curse to this grand and delightful territory, and a disgrace and reproach to the government that permits it—degrading women to the level of beasts, as it is doing, and filling the country with legions of illegitimate, ignorant children, instilling into them a hatred, animosity, and disloyalty to the general government. How long, oh, how long, will the officers of this mighty nation permit this nasty, vile system of disloyalty to lift up its vile hydra-head and menace and defy the laws of the nation, and outrage society as they hav with their filthy, beastly debauchery these many years and are still doing? Is this infamous, beastly concern to continue to go on unchecked, and outrage society the way it is doing? Will it never be stopped?

Well, Mr. Editor, my letter is getting too long, and I must come to a close by asking you to alter the tab on my paper, as the inclosed dollar is to further my subscription. I wish I could send more, but at this time I cannot do it, for I get but a poor chance to earn money or anything else among these saintly, beastly thugs; but I want to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER paid for if I can do no more.

Yours for truth, WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

KALAMAZOO. MICH., 11, 3, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish this card, as in part explanatory of an article that I saw in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 13th, page 648, entitled, "A Case for the League to Look Into." By the way, yesterday was the first chance I had to see a TRUTH SEEKER since I ran away from Springerton. I went from there to Champaign and got work for a while, then moved back here. My wife met me at Champaign and came on here with me. She brought my mail and papers to me there. Now then, in regard to that card you published, I did not write it for publication, but only to explain why I could not remit my subscription, then due. The Grand Jury was about to sit, and threats had been so freely made of presenting me. I noticed them but little till I learned that two doctors were ready to swear I was insane. Then I deemed it best to run, and fight afterward. My subscription being due. I wrote that card to explain why I could not send you the money then. I thank you heartily for referring my case to the League, which I shall join as soon as I can, for I hav so long felt the withering, blighting, and damning influence of superstition's chains that in evolving out of that condition it leaves me an uncompromising foe to superstition and bigotry. I am, unfortunately, but a poor compositor, with a family, so I am crippled in the direction of financially aiding the Liberal cause, and, having a poor education, I am not able to go on the rostrum. Oh, how I wish that I could take the lecture field! But one thing I can and will do—that is, at every chance I drop a word against superstition, in all its varied forms.

The "Book of Mormon" makes and lays great stress on the argument, "If there is no Christ there is no God," and hence no life beyond the grave, but avers there is a Christ as he made himself known to them. Could they hav read "Revelations of Antichrist," I think they would not hav made so bold an assertion, for that shows there was never a Christ in the time of Tiberias, and that Simon Kepha, alias Peter and Paul, both lived and died before the so-called Christian era. I say, to conclude, I here devote my life to the cause of Freethought. I sent $1.00 to you from Champaign.

Yours truly, A. C. EVERETT.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell,
Livs longest though he soonest die."

Lazy Dick; or, The Life of a Dog.

"Richard, where's the hoe?"

"In the handle, I s'pose!"

"O Richard! is that the way to answer your poor old grandmother?"

"Well, where else is the hoe?"

"It may not be anywhere else; but the handle should be in your two hands, Richard, and you know it. Your grandfather works very hard, and you ought to take hold and help him. You hav no excuse for not helping your old grandpa, Richard."

"Yes, I hav."

"I should like for you to name it."

"I want to wear out the oldest first," and Richard laughed at his wit.

"Why, Richard!" said his grandmother, looking at him reprovingly, over her spectacles. "What would your grandpa say if he should hear that? Now, go along—there's a good boy—and get your hoe and hoe one row, if no more."

Richard started to go, but stopped to brush some mud off his pants—with the shoe-brush! He was too lazy to go up to his room for a clothes-brush; and, indeed, he would not hav brushed them at all, only his grandmother had told him so often to keep his clothes clean.

As he went out he stumbled over Max, the dog, lying in the shade under the grape arbor.

"Oh, I wish I was a dog!" exclaimed Richard, as Max stretched himself lazily and rolled over. "Dogs hav such nice, easy times, with nothing to do but eat, and sleep, and loll around. Oh, don't I wish I was a dog!" and, so saying, he flung himself down upon the green grass in the shade of a Baldwin apple-tree.

All at once he attempted to arise, and found himself standing upon four legs instead of two.

"Why, what does this mean?" he ejaculated, surveying himself. "How queer I do feel, anyhow!"

All at once he discovered that he was no longer a boy, but a great, black, shaggy dog.

"Oh, this is splendid!" he thought. "Now I sha'n't hav to help grandpa hoe. Fol-lol de-rol, right fol-de-leddy, oh!"

But, instead of singing it, what was his surprise to hear a gruff "bow-wow-wow" issue from his mouth.

"But that is simply dog-fashion," he thought, as he stretched himself out and went to sleep.

By and by he awoke and thought he would like to hav a piece of his grandmother's nice gingerbread, and he trotted off toward the house. His grandfather was just coming from the cornfield, and as he espied him he exclaimed:

"Get out, you mangy-looking dog, you! What are you doing here? Max! Max! drive this miserable-looking cur out of the yard!"

Richard commenced to say, "It isn't a dog, grandpa. It is I—Dick—your grandson;" but all the noise he could make was a succession of short, sharp barks. But away came Max, at his master's call, and flew at him in a great rage, apparently. He ran as fast as his four legs would carry him down the lane, Max after him, grating his teeth and barking furiously. When he had reached a respectful distance he stopped, and Max went back. While he stood wondering which way he should go, some idle boys came along, and seeing the forlorn-looking dog, began throwing stones at him.

"Please stop!" he meant to say, but the sound he made was only a yelp, as he ran on away from his tormentors. One of the stones had hit him on his hind leg and lamed him. He felt so miserable—and, oh, he was so hungry.

He went on to his Aunt Sally's. "Surely," he thought, "she will giv me something to eat." Down by the back-door there was a plate of cat's victuals—some bits of meat, a few fish-heads, a little hash, and a lot of potato peelings.

"A regular feast!" he thought, and he commenced on the hash. But alas! his Aunt Sally's great yellow cat appeared before him with her back up, and her tail straight, and all fuzzed up to twice its natural size. She spat at him, and flew at his eyes, her own eyes appearing like two great green-glass balls. She scratched his nose, and he just snatched one more mouthful and prepared to run, when out came Bridget, the Irish maid-servant. She was a red-headed girl, with a turned-up nose, and she had no respect for dogs.

"Off wid ye! Ye mane, snaking thafe, 'ating up the cat's wittles! I'll tache yees to be a thafe! Take that, ye ugly thafe!" And she threw a kettle of boiling water at him. He missed the kettle, but the boiling water spattered over his back and scalded him in several spots. He uttered a fearful yell as he leaped over the fence.

Oh, how his poor back smarted! His Aunt Sally appeared at the door, and he heard her scolding Bridget for being so wicked. She kindly threw him a bone, and went in and shut the door.

"A bone! with nothing on it!" he thought. But dogs gnaw bones, as he remembered, and, taking it in his teeth, he trotted on, his back smarting dreadfully. He had gone but a little way before he met a big, cross-looking bull dog, who, in dog language said: "Let me hav that bone! D'ye hear?" But Dick marched on till the bull-dog stopped him by biting his ear, which made him drop the bone. He was determined to defend his property, and joined in a serious fight with the ill-natured bull-dog, who proved the stronger of the two, captured the bone and ran off with it, leaving Dick with a torn ear and a bleeding mouth.

A little girl came running along on her way to school, and stopped to pity him a little.

"Poor doggie," she said, "I am sorry for you. You had better run along to your home and stay there. Poor doggie!"

These were the first kind words he had heard, and they melted his heart. He wanted to say "Thank you, little girl," but his voice choked in his throat, and all he could do was to lick her hand and wag his tail.

"Where was his home?" he asked himself, and there was no answer. A very sad dog was he, as he limped along toward his grandfather's house. He crept stealthily along, wishing all the while that he could be a boy again, for he had learned by sad experience that a dog's life was not one to be envied. Just then he woke up and rubbed his eyes, for he had been asleep and dreaming.

Max stood beside him, licking his face.

"O Max," he said, "I've been dreaming a dreadful, a horrid dream, and I'm glad I'm not a dog, Max."

Dick jumped up and ran and got his hoe, and went to the cornfield where his grandfather was at work.

"Well, I didn't know what had become of you, my boy; but there is your row, waiting for you."

Dick felt very amiable, and he said, "I'll hoe two rows, grandpa; I can, just as well as not. You go in and rest yourself, grandpa."

"Oh, I am not very tired," said his grandfather, "and I can hoe a little while longer. You hoe your own row, and I'll hoe mine. We all hav to hoe our own rows in life, Richard, and the earlier we begin the easier it will be; and it is better to do it cheerfully as possible. This earning our bread before we eat it is a good thing, my boy, a good thing. And there is no bread tastes sweeter than that which you earn by the sweat of your brow. Never be afraid of a little work, Richard; but when you hav it to do, take off your jacket and pitch in till it is done, and you'll feel all the better for it. Life is not all a holiday, and 'tis well it isn't, for, if it was, we'd get too 'tarnal lazy for anything; our bones would get stiff, and our joints crack, and we wouldn't be of much account, anyway. You feel so much better, too, for exercising, don't you, Richard?"

"Yes, grandpa."

When they went in to dinner Dick had a splendid appetite, and he thought he never did eat such good gingerbread and such doughnuts as his grandmother made, to say nothing of the white bread spread with raspberry jam half an inch thick.

He whispered to his grandmother not to say anything to his grandpa about the comments of the morning, and she promised she would not. And that evening, while she sat knitting one of a pair of stockings for him, he told her all the dream he had that seemed so real, and how tickled he was to think it was not true. His grandma laughed and said she thought it much better to be a nice, tidy, well-behaved boy than a dog.

"And that's the kind of boy I mean to be," said Richard.

Somehow or other, Richard's grandfather got hold of the dream, or rather the dream was related to him by somebody, and it pleased him immensely. Richard had always lived with his grandparents, his own father and mother being dead, but his idle, indolent habits were a source of great annoyance to his friends, and especially to his aged grandparents, who loved him dearly. But from the day he dreamed he was a dog, they had no more trouble with him. He did everything that was told him, and bids fair to grow up a well-to-do, respected man.

I do not want you to think he is quite a saint, however, for he is not. There are lots of little things he does, sometimes, that everybody would not approve. But they are incidents of boyhood that will be outgrown in due time.

Every evening he commits to memory a verse from one of the poets, or a maxim from some philosopher, or some brave, inspiring sentence from some one of the earth's grand old heroes or martyrs. The other day, his grandpa gave him this to learn, from the sayings of Peter Cooper: "Knowledge, economy, and labor are the shining virtues of civilized man. They form the most enduring basis of society, and are the surest source of natural and individual welfare."

Thus is he storing his mind with much that will prove of benefit to him in after years.

LIBERAL MEETINGS.

[Leagues, and Liberal, and Spiritualistic Societies in the United States and Canada meeting regularly, can have notices of their meetings published in this column free if the officers will send them to us.]

MAINE.

PORTLAND.—Dr. H. A. Lamb has hired Congress Hall, Congress street (entrance on Temple street), where free meetings, lectures, and discussions are held every Sunday, at 2:30 P.M. Admittance free. Public invited.

OREGON.

PORTLAND.—Mr. C. Beal holds meetings every Sunday afternoon and evening, at Academy Hall, Second and Salmon streets, where he gives lectures, readings, recitations, and music. All are invited to attend. Admission 10 cents.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON.—Boston Liberal Club holds meetings for essays and criticisms every Sunday forenoon at 10:45 in the Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.—— The "Society of the Divine Homo" at same place every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Sunday-school at 2:30. Admission free.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA.—The Friendship Liberal League meets every Sunday at Hancock Hall, 814 Girard avenue, at 2:30 o'clock, and 7:30 o'clock, P.M., for lectures and free debates. THE TRUTH SEEKER and Liberal books for sale.

PITTSBURGH.—Pittsburgh Liberal League meets at Maltby Hall, 76 Fifth avenue every Sunday (except during the months of July and August) at 3 o'clock. A free platform is maintained. Exercises consist of a lecture, followed by 10 minute criticisms, with 15 minutes allowed the lecturer to reply. Clergymen invited to discuss.

NEW JERSEY.

NEWARK.—Newark Liberal League meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the League's Hall, 177 Halsey street. Exercises consist of music, readings, lecture, and discussion, in which all present are invited to participate. Admission free. Collection taken. Communications for the League should be addressed to J. W. Frankel, 10 Pine street, Newark.

NEW YORK.

ALBANY.—The Liberal association meets every Sunday at Van Vechten Hall, 119 State street. Sunday-school at 2 P.M. General business meeting and debates and discussions at 3 P.M. Lecture at 7:30 P.M. The public are cordially invited to attend, also all Liberals visiting the city. Admission free.

NEW YORK CITY.—The Manhattan Liberal Club meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock, for a lecture and discussion, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Admission 5 cents. Monthly cards 20 cents. Membership fee $3.——The American Spiritualist Alliance meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in Republican Hall, 55 West 33d street.—— The First Society of Spiritualists holds its meetings every Sunday in Republican Hall, 55 West 33d street. Morning service 11 o'clock; evening, 7:45. Seats free. Public cordially invited.——New York City Ladies' Spiritualist Aid Society, permanently located at 171 East 69th street. Wednesday, at 3 P.M.——Frobisher College Hall, 23 East 14th street, near Broadway. The People's Spiritual Meeting every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M.——229 East 48th street. Inspirational Lectures and Psychometric Readings every Sunday at 11 and 7:30 o'clock.

BROOKLYN.—The Brooklyn Spiritual Society meets at Conservatory Hall, cor. of Fulton street and Bedford avenue, every Sunday. Services at 11 A.M., and 7:45 P.M. Admission free. Public cordially invited. Liberal and Spiritual papers and books for sale.—— The Everett Hall Spiritual Conference, 398 Fulton street meets every Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Meetings free. Spiritual literature for sale.——The Eastern District Spiritual Conference meets every Monday evening at Composite Room, 4th street corner of south 2d street, at 7:45. Spiritual and Liberal literature on sale. All invited.——The South Brooklyn Spiritual Society meets at Brauns Hall, 5th avenue, corner of 23d street, on the first and third Fridays of each month.——The Brooklyn Spiritual Fraternity, Friday evening conference meetings will be held in the lecture room of the church of New Spiritual Dispensation, Clinton avenue, between Park and Myrtle avenues, at 7:30 P.M ——The Philosophical Association meets every Sunday afternoon in the Assembly Room of Wright's Business College, Broadway corner of Fourth street, E. D., at 3 P.M. Public cordially invited. Doors open at 2:30 P.M.

TO THE LIBERAL PUBLIC

Volume two of the FREETHINKER'S MAGAZINE AND FREETHOUGHT DIRECTORY will contain six numbers, of sixty-four pages each, and will be published on the following months of next year: January, March, May, July, September, and November. Each number will be ready for mailing on the 25th of the month previous to its date of issue promptly, and in every respect will be an improvement on the first volume.

The departments for the next volume will be "Editorial," "Communicated," "All Sorts," "Extracts from Letters," "Freethought Directory," "Business Department," and "Advertisments."

The "Extracts from Letters" department will be a very interesting feature of the magazine. The editor will select a few lines from the letters of correspondents—who write to him—such as he thinks will be interesting to the reader.

And we earnestly request our friends to continue to forward the names of out-spoken Freethinkers for the Freethought Directory. The charge for the first insertion of a name and post-office address will be twenty-five cents; after that, nothing.

The subscription price for a year is $1.50; for one one month, 25 cents. Five numbers will be sent to one address for a year for seven dollars; for one month, one dollar. From our last year's experience we feel confident that the Freethought public will giv us a generous patronage.

2t45 H. L. GREEN, Salamanca, N. Y.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

The oldest reform journal in United States, is published every Wednesday at the Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.

By JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

Edited by HORACE SEAVER.

PRICE, $3.00 per annum; single copies seven cents. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

The Investigator is devoted to the Liberal cause in religion; or in other words, to universal mental liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who hav entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to the things of this life entirely. It has arrived at the age of fifty-one years, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful family journal. Reader, please send your subscription for six months or one year and if you are not satisfied with the way the Investigator is conducted we won't ask you to continue with us any longer 2m 59

SKETCH OF THE

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.

BY W. STEWART ROSS.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM MCDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Author of Prometheus, Gottlieb, Ingersoll and Jesus. A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future. $1.00.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

Alamontada the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, L.L.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

AN OPTICAL WONDER For pleasure and business.

A NEW, original, cheap lantern, for projecting and enlarging photographs, chromo cards, opaque pictures and objects. Works like magic, and delights and mystifies everybody. Send for our full and free descriptive circular M. HILL PUB. CO., 129 East 28th St., New York.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		Cents.
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others.	3
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	3
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15	Come to Dinner. "	2
16	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett.	2
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett	2
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett.	10
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett	3
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett.	5
26	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett.	5
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood.	5
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31	Gods and God-Houses.	2
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett.	3
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett.	2
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers.	2
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	2
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson	5
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett.	3
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "	2
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56	Bible Contradictions.	1
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	3
58	Prophecies. Underwood.	2
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd	2
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "	2
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62	The Jews and their God.	10
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett.	5
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	2
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2.	5
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	2
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett.	2
73	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett	5
75	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers.	2
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett.	1
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett.	10
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett.	2
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood.	1
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker.	3
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90	Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates.	2
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett.	10
96	Ichabod Crane Papers.	2
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciota.	2
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	2
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett	1
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	2
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston	2
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.	1
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage.	2
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett.	1
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	2
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	3
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston.	5
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell.	5
119	The New Faith. Stoddard.	3
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell.	10
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers.	3
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett.	10
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer.	10
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett.	10
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman.	2
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood	10
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul.	5
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman.	2
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford.	5
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr.	3
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson.	1
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood.	3
134	Talks with the Evangelists.	5
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett.	3
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett.	3
137	Christian Love. C. L. James.	2
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper.	5
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston.	5
140	Astro-Theology.	2
141	Imdelity. H. W. Beecher.	10
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon.	2
143	Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins.	10
144	The Comstock Laws.	10
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin.	2
146	Seymour Times Prayer.	10
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws.	2
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus.	2
149	Age of Shams.	10
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman.	5
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H.	2
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas.	3
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway.	3
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce.	2
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin.	2
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley.	2
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett.	1
158	The Fool's Creed.	5
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston.	3
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Coleman.	3
161	Protestant Persecutions.	10
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett	2
163	Ingersoll's Creed.

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.	3
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	2
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	5
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	3
5	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase. M. D.	3
6	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCabe.	3
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	3
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	2
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures	10
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson	10
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D.
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium.

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 15 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

Poetry.

A Prayer of Nature.

Father of all created things,
From whom or good or evil springs,
We lift our souls to thee.
Oh, may thine all-pervading light
Shine in our souls divinely bright,
Enabling us to see the right,
From superstition free.

Help us to view this world of man,
His various superstitions scan,
Illumined by this light;
How each believes in forms and creeds,
In sacred books and marvelous deeds;
His soul on superstitions feeds,
And thinks these only right.

The Chinese with their sacred works,
And Christians, Hebrews, Hindoos, Turks,
Arabs and Mormons too;
All hav their sacred books, and feel
That these God's sacred truths reveal,
Which he to others doth conceal—
Each sure their own is true.

Each think they know all others wrong,
Only to them God's truths belong,
They only know the way;
No other sacred books are true,
No other saints God's wisdom knew,
No miracles could others do—
All others lead astray.

Teach us this universe to view,
With all its revelations true—
From them thy will to read.
To nature we for wisdom look,
We cannot superstitions brook—
The universe's our sacred book,
And Nature's laws our creed.

These teach that all are children thine,
And fill the place thou didst design
When thou didst them create.
Man has not disappointed thee;
He is what thy divine decree
Ordained and willed that he should be,
Here in this mortal state.

No nation, language, race, or creed,
With sacred book, miraculous deed,
Is specially thine own;
This human race thou didst create,
Thy children whom thou canst not hate.
Their welfare in a future state,
We trust to thee alone. W. R. DYER.

Acrostic on Col. Robert Ingersoll.

BY ALHAZA.

In the heart's silent cell there is a shrine;
No tears are shed by penitents who kneel;
Grateful the shade when noon-day's breeze is cool.
Every poor pilgrim loves this nook of peace,
Rich with the breath of glen and wooded dell;
Sweeter than notes of birds the hymn we hear,
Or lutes of angels in the balmy air.
Linger and listen, while the night-dews fall,
Love, justice, liberty, and Ingersoll!

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

Marriage and Divorce,

By R. D. Westbrook, D.D. LL.B.

Author of "The Bible—Whence and What?"

CONTENTS:

The True Ideal of Marriage.
Free Love.
The History of Marriage.
The Old Testament Divorce Law.
The New Testament on Divorce.
Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion.
Rational Deductions from Established Principles.
Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered.
Prevention Better than Cure.
APPENDIX: The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, by John Milton.

The author is a Rationalistic Theologist and Lawyer, and in his pungent style has condensed into this little book about all that one need to know regarding the history, philosophy, and legal aspects of Marriage and Divorce.

Price, 50 cents. Neatly bound in cloth. For sale this office.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY:
Ancient and Modern.
By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.
25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.
2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.
3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.
BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. MCDOUGALL and MRS. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER, 15 cents.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 344 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.
E. KEITH, Animas City, Col.
CHARLES WATTS & Co., London, England.
A. ATWOOD, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

HAV YOU READ IT?

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR ALL.

THE DANISH CURE EXPLAINED

BY WILHELMINE D. SCHOTT,

Practitioner of the Danish Cure.

WITH PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR.

Heavy, toned paper, good margins; large type, widely spaced; extra cloth, black and gold side and back stamps; 12mo., 319 pp.; $1.50.

A VERY APPROPRIATE GIFT BOOK.

It tells you what physicians should tell their patients, but do not: How to avoid contracting "doctors' bills;" how to hav good health without taking medicins. Hints on every subject pertaining to the health of women and children.

PURPOSE OF THE WORK.

The author's design is to giv a general outline of the laws and conditions of health, with directions for the prevention of sickness and care of the sick. She considers Animal Electricity, used as directed in this book, a very important curativ agent.

Although written primarily for women, this book will be found almost equally useful to all. Most persons cannot be too frequently reminded of the truth of the old proverb, "An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure." The first step in the cure of disease is to remove the cause; then, in nearly all cases, Nature will remove the difficulty without other aid.

Send to THE TRUTH SEEKER for circular and contents.

Photographs of T. Winter,

The Great Western Materialist, now on sale at 265 West Eighth street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Card size, 50 cents; cabinet size, $1. Mailed to address on prepayment. 4t43

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR

OF THE

World as Now Constituted.

By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,

STYLED

Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

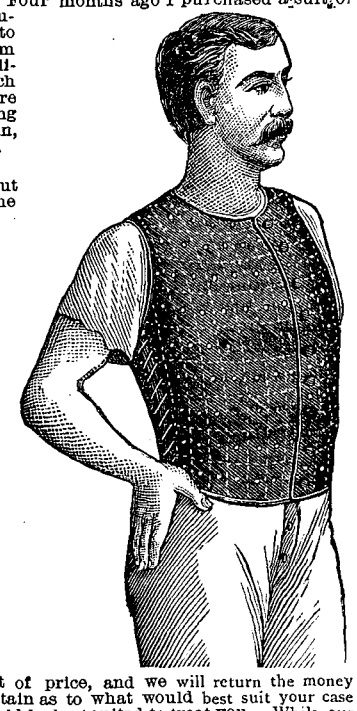
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:

Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION

Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

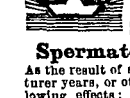
"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!



All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

6n 15

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.

Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. Miss.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.

SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.

For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

G. A. Lomas, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

Wi' sma' to sell, and less to buy,
Above distress, below envy,
Oh, wha wud leave this humble state,
For a' the pride o' a' the great?
Amid their flarin', idle toys,
Amid their cumbrous, dinsome joys,
Can they the peace and pleasure feel
Of Bessie at her spinning-wheel? —Burns.

FOR the miseries of life Jesus seems to hav had deep feeling. With the unhappy he could sympathize. But the joyousness of life he seems not to hav been able to understand. We are told that "Jesus wept;" but it is in no place recorded of him that he smiled. Nowhere in his Sermon on the Mount, nowhere as far as I know in his recorded utterances does he show that he ever felt the magnificence of existence, the fulness of the glory of being alive.—Dr. E. B. Aveling.

YE blessed creatures, I hav heard the call
Ye to each other make; I see
The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;
My heart is at your festival,
My head hath its carousal,
The fulness of your bliss I feel—I feel it all.
O evil day! If I were sullen
While the earth itself is adorning,
This sweet May morning,
And the children are pulling on every side,
In a thousand valleys far and wide,
Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,
And the babe leaps up in its mother's arm—
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear.—Wordsworth.

WE are all short-sighted, and very often see but one side of the matter. Our views are not extended to all that has a connection With it. From this defect I think no man is free. We see but in part, and we know but in part, and therefore it is no wonder we conclude not right from our partial views. This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts how useful it is to talk and consult with each other, even such as come short of him in capacity, quickness, and penetration; for, since no one sees all, and we generally hav different prospects of the same thing according to our different, as I may say, positions to it, it is not incongruous to think, nor beneath any man to try, whether another may not hav notions of things which hav escaped him, and which his reason would make use of if they came into his mind.—Locke's Conduct of the Understanding.

CHRISTIANS of course regard the Ten Commandments as the moral law drawn up for the guidance of mankind by their God. He, though always present everywhere, came down specially, in some concentrated form, on the top of Mount Sinai, and without mouth or tongue, spoke these commandments audibly, through Moses, to the awe-stricken Israelites. He then added three chapters of other moral and immoral laws, and six chapters on the elaborate upholstery and fittings and ceremonies for the large tent, with colored curtains, and with candlesticks, tongs, snuff-dishes, fire-pans, shovels, etc., all fully described by divine wisdom.—Ball's Ten Commandments.

"WHOSOEVER lieth (?) with a beast shall surely be put to death" (Exodus xxii, 18). Certainly, Jehovah had time to instruct Moses as to the infamy of polygamy. He could hav spared a few moments from a description of the patterns of tongs and basins for a subject so important as this. A few words in favor of the one wife and the one husband—in favor of the virtuous and loving home—might hav taken the place of instructions as to cutting the garments of priests and fashioning candlesticks and couches (?) of gold. If he had left out simply the order that rams' skins should be dyed red, and in its place had said, "A man shall hav but one wife and the wife but one husband," how much better it would hav been.—Ingersoll.

WORDSWORTH, in his day, complained that "Plain living and high thinking are no more."
Of our day it may be truly said that high living and plain thinking are the all and all. In an age of great material prosperity like the present, when the comforts and conveniences of physical life hav greatly increased, and science is every day increasing them, this world is apt to seem in itself a "satisfying abode," quite irrespectiv of any hope beyond. The spread of knowledge is doing so much to remove many of the surface ills of life that vague and exaggerated hopes are apt to be fostered of what it may yet do for the healing of the deepest disorders. To minds that hav got themselvs intoxicated with notions of material progress, this world is apt to seem enough, and man to appear a satisfying object to himself quite apart from God.—Principal Shairp's Culture and Religion.

WHY should the skeptic be sad? What has the Atheist to fear in life or in death? Sadness is for the Christian, whose world lies under the curse of an angry God, whose sky is blackened by the thick clouds surrounding a coming judge, whose life is darkened by the exactions of a merciless taskmaster, whose death is lurid—lit with the ghastly flames of "the fire that never shall be quenched." Rightly hav the noblest and purest Christian thinkers ever been the saddest; rightly hav the most loving Christian hearts wept tears of blood; rightly is the ideal Christian type of humanity "a man of sorrows."—Besant's Gospel of Atheism.

THE universality of an opinion among men who hav received a similar education does not afford any presumption in its favor; for, however great the deference is which a wise man will always pay to common belief upon those subjects which hav employed the unbiased reason of mankind, he certainly owes it no respect in so far as he suspects it to be influenced by fashion or authority. Nothing can be more just than the observation of Fontenelle, that "the number of those who believe in a system already established in the world, does not in the least add to its credibility, but that the number of those who doubt it has a tendency to diminish it."—Dugald Stewart.

SEEK the good of other men, but be not in bondage to their faces or fancies; for that is but facility or softness, which taketh an honest mind prisoner. —Bacon's Essays.

Odds and Ends.

A GRAVE consideration: Stout party: "Well, Pat, how's trade?" Gravedigger: "Poorly, surr, entirely; shure we havn't burried a livin' sowl this three weeks!"

"THEN Augustus is to preach! Is he to study? or will he be merely a lay preacher?" "I guess he will be a lay preacher most of the time. Laying around out of a job."

A YOUNG man having asked a girl if he might go home with her from singing class, and been refused, said: "You're as full of airs as a music-box." "Perhaps so," she retorted; "but if I am I don't go with a crank."

THE editor of a Hartford paper says that some statesmen drink twenty times a day, and two coroners, a member of the legislature, a police justice, and a member of the school committee hav asked if he meant them.

A NEWLY married lady was telling another how nicely her husband could write. "O, you should see some of his love letters." "Yes, I know," was the freezing reply; "I hav got a bushel of 'em in my trunk." Tableau.

A BEAUTIFUL maid in Bis-mar-k,
When the lamp was turned down for a spark,
Smuggled up to her Fred,
And tremblingly said,
"I always feel skeered in the dark!"

A LAFAYETTE lady—a model wife and mother—broke her husband of the saloon habit by walking up to the bar beside him and calling for beer. A Cincinnati woman tried that, but her husband only replied: "Now you're acting sensible; here, John, two schooners."

A BAPTIST journal givs this advice to Baptist ministers who hav returned from their vacation: "Don't plagiarize; but, for mercy's sake, do read enough to giv your people some fresh ideas. No revamping of old sermons with threadbare thoughts and stale illustrations ought to satisfy you."

A FATHER and son were riding on a load of hay. The boy fell off and was run over by one of the wheels. "Are you hurt, Johnnie?" asked the old gentleman in a loud voice. "No," answered the boy; whereupon the father shouted back his accustomed injunction: "D——n you, don't you lie to me."

"DON'T you know, my son," said a kind father, "that it hurts me worse to whip you than it does you? I would much rather receive the punishment, but I whip you as an example for the other children." "Then let me giv it to you," the boy replied, "and we'll explain to the other children afterward."

A TRAVELER who had stopped at a third-class inn said in an angry tone to the innkeeper: "It is abominable! I was devoured all night long by the bedbugs." "That's very astonishing," replied the innkeeper, innocently. "Yesterday my waiter and I killed more than a hundred and fifty of them in your chamber."

A MAN who made a large fortune by collecting and selling garbage has just died at San Francisco. The remarkable thing about this case is that he stayed in San Francisco to die instead of coming East, buying a mansion on Fifth avenue, New York, and teaching his children to turn up their noses at people who are "in trade."

A BLACK woman was brought before a magistrate for unmercifully beating her son, a saddle-colored imp, and the judge was delivering a reprimand, when the woman broke out with, "Judge, has you eber been a parent to a wooffless yeller boy like dat ar cub of mine?" "Never," ejaculated the judge with great vehemence, getting red in the face. "Den don't talk!"

A MILWAUKEE belle attending a theater in New York city recently complained in one of the scenes that the light was too dim to see the acting properly. "Won't you try this glass?" asked her escort, handing her his lorgnette. Hastily coveriug the suspicious looking object with her handkerchief she placed it to her lips, took a long pull, and then handed it back in great disgust, saying: "Why, there ain't a drop in it!"

"No, sir, my daughter can never become your wife." "But I am abundantly able to support her comfortably, and my character is certainly not bad." "Your means and your character are all right, but you forget the difference of station." "Pardon me but I do not understand." "You are a journalist, I am only a capitalist; and some day, in the heat of passion, you may throw this up to her. Such a risk cannot be run. Good day, sir."

WHEN I see the lilies growing,
Budding near a mossy brink;
When I see their petals opening,
Creamy hue and blush of pink—

Then a charm I trace, methings,
Like unto my Julia's mellow—
Ah, here she comes—capricious minx!
I'd like to punch that other fellow.

A NEW preacher visited a rough, wild town out in Colorado, seeking a call, and he preached on Sunday. "Well, what do you think of him?" said one of the trustees to an old miner. "He ain't no good for this climate, he ain't. He looked at fust like as if he might be payin' dirt, but the lead run out mighty durn quick toward the eend uv his sarmint." "Why, what's the matter with him?" "He don't know enough to hand the gospel 'round this town, he don't." "He is a college graduate and a theological student." "That's nothin'; he mout be larned in books, from the outcrop to the rock; he mout know the Bible and the hymn-book, from Denver to the Rio Grande and back, but when a man gits up in a meetin' house in this town the first time he strikes it and sings 'Nearer My God to Thee,' it's clear agin nater to swallow him. I'll jine another gang if you fetch that sort of a know-nothin' out here to teach us, when he don't know no more about how to locate a town than he showed in that song. No, siree; jist you count me out if you're a goin' to count him in."

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker,

Founded by D. M. Bennett.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It givs all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and givs everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strougest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winsted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a strouger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

TERMS FOR BALANCE OF YEAR:

To all who will settle all arrearages and pay for the year 1884 in advance, we will allow the price for 1884 to be the same as for 1883—$2.50.

To all who renew for one year from next January, or thereafter, before January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

To all new subscribers who send in their subscriptions previous to January 1st, the price will be $2.50.

TERMS FOR 1884:

Single subscription, - - -	$3 00
One subscription two years, -	5 00
Two new subscribers, - -	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance, -	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance, -	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance, -	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, -	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3), will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other Liberal paper. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York City.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movements; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

Crimes of Preachers

IN THE

UNITED STATES AND CANADA,

From May, 1876 to May, 1883.

THIRD EDITION.

TRANSLATED OUT OF THE ORIGINAL NEWSPAPERS, AND WITH PREVIOUS TRANSLATIONS DILIGENTLY COMPARED AND REVISED.

By M. E. BILLINGS,

AUTHOR OF

"PREVENTION OF CRIME," ETC., "UNHOLY BIBLE," "HOLY MEN AND WOMEN OF THE BIBLE," "HOLY CROSS,"

AND MANY OTHER LIBERAL WORKS.

"By their fruits shall ye know them! Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

"It is one of the most eloquent pleas for liberty ever written. It is Paine's 'Age of Reason' and 'Rights of Man' consolidated and improved It stirs the pulse like a trumpet call."—EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER.

God and the State,

BY

MICHAEL BAKOUNINE

Founder of Nihilism and Apostle of Anarchy.

WITH A PREFACE BY
CARLO CAFIERO AND ELISEE RECLUS.

Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER, (Editor of Liberty.)

52 pages, octavo. Price 15 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PLAIN HOME TALK,

EMBRACING

Medical Common Sense.

BY E. B. FOOTE, M.D.

This book is a plain talk about the human system, the habits of men and women, the causes and prevention of disease, our sexual relations and social natures It is medical common sense applied to causes, prevention, and cure of chronic diseases, the natural relations of men and women to each other, society, love, marriage, parentage etc. Embellished with two hundred illustrations Price $1.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.
33 Clinton Place, N. Y. city.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 47. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 24, 1883. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

WITHIN the last eighty years Congress has spent more than $100,000,000 on the city of Washington.

THE works for building iron ships in San Francisco will be, the Bulletin says, the most extensiv of any in the United States.

THE pope, it is reported, is now engaged in reviewing voluminous notes on a forthcoming circular to the faithful, touching the subject of philosophy.

THE Denver Medical Times says that there are more physicians in that city, in proportion to the population, than in any other in the United States.

"I SEso 'spicious ob de preacher what pertends to despise riches, an' den tries to tempt people inter heaben by tellin' 'em dat de streets is paved wid gold."

PROFESSOR NEWTON says that the earth receives about $3,000,000,000 of meteors every year, but they only increase the size of the earth one inch in 100,000,000 years.

PROBABLY the only large town in this country which cannot boast a bar-room is Homer, Ga., whose citizens hav just compelled the only dispenser of whisky to leave town.

AN Omaha pastor says the Protestant church embraces three times as many women as men. That is all right, but we thought it might be as well to let the husbands know about it.

THE income of the Girard properties in Philadelphia and elsewhere in Pennsylvania has increased over $70,000 in the past ten months, compared with the same time last year.

A BUSINESS man in Portland, Me., subscribed liberally for a church purpose the other day, and is accused of reducing the wages of his employes sufficiently to cover the amount thus pledged by him.

EXPERTS in chemistry hav estimated that the cost of London's winter smoke and fog is $25,000,000 annually; that is to say, constituents of coal to this value escape unconsumed, and assist in forming the sooty vapor.

R. B. HAYES's portrait still hangs in the White House at Washington. It serves the useful purpose of reminding people that the American navy is not the only thing this republic has to be ashamed of.—Chicago News.

PROF. E. S. MORSE, in a lecture in Boston on Japan, said that the rich Japanese send their children to school in inferior garments, in order that the children of the poor, who can get no others, may not be ashamed to wear their own clothing.

